0 2007 1583038 2
California State Library

ARY.

Accession No. [illegible] Jun 1917

Call No. fc051C15

May27 1865-Nov 25 1865 3

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No. 1.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 27, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES—ORIGINAL AND SELECTED:

How I went to the great Race between Lodi and Norfolk.—By "Mark Twain."
Ivy.—By "Iris."
Charles Lamb, his Friends and Books.
Adventures of a Queen's Messenger.
Eruption of Vesuvius.
Extracts from Emerson.
A Very Grand Duchy.
Amusing Paragraphs.

EDITORIALS:

Popular Southern Delusions.
Blot.
California Conceit.
Musical Matters
Editorial Paragraphs.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:

Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

THEATRICAL TALK:

The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.
Eastern Theatricals.

POETRY:

Tamalpais.—By Chas. Warren Stoddard.
The Dead Child.—By Emile Lowson.
Tuloom.
The Death Bed.

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Chapter XXIX.

NEW BOOKS:

A Review of Recent Publications.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"WE that have free souls, it touches us not."

HAMLET—Act III., Scene 2.

IL BALLO in Maschera, alias the Masked Ball, was a great success, as produced at the Academy of Music, on Thursday last. The scene being laid in Boston, the production of this opera afforded a capital opportunity for those who have never visited that city to become acquainted with the manners and customs of its inhabitants, though we are inclined to believe that they have somewhat changed since the period at which the action is supposed to take place, it being before the glorious Declaration of Independence. A Count figures as Governor of Boston in the opera; we reckon this is incorrect, as we are unable to find account of it in the history of the United States. "Count Richard" appears to be a very good sort of fellow with the exception of one little failing; he is in love with "Amelia," the wife of "Reinhart," his secretary. "Amelia" is a very nice young lady, but she also has a failing—she is in love with "Count Richard." "Samuel" and "Tom," are enemies of the Count, and are waiting their opportunity to finish him. This is all explained in the beginning of the first act. It appears that "Ulrica," a colored lady, has settled in Boston, and is doing a roaring business in telling fortunes, advertising "to reveal the past, present and future events of life, such as lawsuits, travel by sea or land, lost or stolen goods, hidden treasures, absent friends or relatives and all affairs of business in general." A Judge comes in and asks the Governor to have this old swindler arrested. It appears that they didn't allow pretended fortune-tellers quite such license in Boston as is granted them in San Francisco. "Oscar," "Count Richard's" page sticks up for the fortune-teller, like a foolish boy, and the Count determines, like a foolish Governor, to disguise himself and visit "Ulrica" to ascertain whether she gives people the worth of their money or not. While "Count Richard" is at the fortune-teller's, "Amelia" comes to consult her; she wants to be cured of her love for the Count. "Ulrica" tells her to go to the gallows outside the city and pick a flower which grows at the foot and make it into a cooling draught. After "Amelia" has paid her five dollars and gone away, "Count Richard" has his fortune told. "Ulrica" tells him that he will be killed by the first man he shakes hands with, and "Reinhart" coming in just then, the Count shakes hands with him and tells "Ulrica" she's an old humbug, for "Reinhart" is his best friend and so is his wife, and if she knew anything about telling fortunes she'd have known that he was the governor, and that he had decided, if she didn't clear out of Boston, to send her to the county jail. In the beginning of the second act, "Amelia" comes into a field where the gallows stands, to look for the plant "Ulrica" told her to get. There is a bit of hemp hanging to the gallows, but that isn't the plant she wants, though it might, perhaps, have been a species of hem(p)lock. Just as she is looking about for the flower, "Count Richard" comes in, sees the gallows and the gal as he's in love with. She takes him for a ghost at first, but he proves he isn't; a most improper love scene follows, considering she's a married lady, and she tells him she loves him and can't help it. "Reinhart" rushes in to tell the Count that "Tom" and "Samuel" are waiting to kill him. "Amelia" puts down her veil. We could not see what avail the piece of white net Sconcia had could be to conceal her face; if her husband had been at all acquainted with her he could have easily seen through such a flimsy disguise. The Count tells "Reinhart" he's very much obliged to him, and in an extremely cool manner asks him to see the lady back to town, says he doesn't mind trusting him with her and makes him promise not to speak to her. "Reinhart" says he will treat her with the utmost politeness, and "Count Richard" shows his confidence in him by leaving him to take care of his own wife. "Tom" and "Samuel" come in, and "Tom" wants to have a look at "Amelia;" "Reinhart" says he won't have the lady insulted, he has promised "Count Richard" he will look after her, and he intends to do so; he fights with "Tom," "Amelia" drops her veil, and "Reinhart" thinks he has seen that face before. This puts a stop to the fight. "Reinhart" tells "Amelia" that he'll keep his promise and see her safe back to town. Thus endeth the second act. In the third act the first scene is "Reinhart's" study. He is having a tête-a-tête with "Amelia;" he asks her if she doesn't think she's a nice sort of woman. She says she didn't mean any harm. She is afraid to tell him she only went out by moonlight to pick flowers, and "Count Richard" happened to come along; she doesn't think she can play any such story as that on her husband, so she concludes that the best thing she can do is to die. She tells "Reinhart" that if he'll let her just step into the next room to kiss her baby she'll come back and have her throat cut like a lamb. "Reinhart" doesn't want to be hard on her, he therefore consents. While she is kissing the baby, "Sam" and "Tom" come in, and "Reinhart" tells them he's in with them in their plan to finish the Governor. Three slips of paper with the names of "Tom," "Sam" and "Reinhart" written on them, are put in a flower-vase, and "Amelia" coming in she is made to draw one out. Of course she draws the one with "Reinhart" on it—he's drafted. She rather guesses what's the matter and writes a note to "Count Richard," telling him not to be present at a masked ball to which he has invited her and her husband, as some one intends to kill him. She does not sign her name to this, and "Count Richard" isn't scared at it. The ball takes place, "Amelia" finds the Count, and begs him to get away or he will get stuck; he says he doesn't care; he's so much stuck after her that he doesn't care what happens. He tells her, however, that she is so charming, that in case he should be tempted to make a widow of her or commit any other impropriety, he has determined to send her and her husband to England. Just as he tells her this her husband comes in between her and the Count, and sticks a bowie knife into the latter. "Count Richard" tells "Reinhart" it's all a mistake, and "Reinhart" is of course very sorry he didn't tell him so before. The Count dies and the curtain falls, and it is to be hoped that "Reinhart" and "Amelia" lived happily together ever afterwards, that "Reinhart" loved "Amelia," rating her affection for him higher than before, thus ameliorating her affliction at the death of "Count Richard." Every one will of course now have a clear idea of the plot of the opera, and we need only add that every one should hear it performed; it is again to be produced at the Academy of Music to-night. To wish for a better "Amelia" than Signorina Sconcia, would be unconscionable, the "Count Richard" of Sbriglia, is brilliant in the extreme; the appearance of that delightful contralto, Miss Adelaide Phillips, as "Oscar," the page, formed in itself a page in the musical history of this city; the "Reinhart" of Signor Orlandini will cause him for the future to reign as a favorite in the hearts of the public; the applause gained by Madame Fleury as the sorceress made her exclaim like Dan Setchell, "My cup of happiness is full, and the saucer is overflowing," and the chorus received such marks of approbation from the audience, for the perfect manner in which they performed their parts, that they could say "if the audience don't encore us in choruses it's not because they don't think we deserve it." Now, one word for the new-comer, and we shall have done the Masked Ball pretty thoroughly. Signor Geralamo Fossati has so thoroughly melodious a voice that the Generalissimo of the opera force at the Academy will have no need to change his bass, but can, in spite of masked batteries, by the production of such operas as the Masked Ball in an equal style of excellence, fight it out on this line all the summer, and we shall be happy if we soon have opportunity to give our readers a summary of the incidents of another new opera.

WE had a very nice earthquake at twenty-five minutes to three o'clock on Wednesday morning. As a general thing our earthquakes have been no great shakes, but this one appeared as if it were in earnest. It was by no means a tame earthquake that one might stroke. If all earthquakes were as innocent as those we have been in the habit of experiencing and they could be trained, they might be of use in waking heavy sleepers in good time in the morning, but the one which woke the city up on Wednesday, was a little too rough for that business. We are accustomed to treat earthquakes in San Francisco as very light matters, but there is no doubt that mother earth is in a bad condition, and the unhealthy state of her interior may perhaps, some day, make itself evident by an eruption on the surface somewhere near Mount Diablo. Mother earth is bound to die of an earthquake some day, and she is none the better for the shaking up she had on Wednesday; it no doubt made another hole in her and let loose some of the fire inside to rush in a new direction and play the mischief with her. These spasmodic jerks of our sluggish, inert orb are premonitory of the period when it will be changed into a glowing mass of flame and rush through space. The earth is now like Prometheus, bound fast, with the vulture, Science, gnawing at its vitals, rending its form and preparing it for the final breaking up. "There shall be earthquakes in divers places." One last Wednesday; that makes another.

We observe a notice in the Call, headed "Hibernia Greens. Attention!" That is a nice title for an Irish regiment. "Brussels Sprouts" would be a good name for a German company.

THE editor of the San Jose Mercury appears to have but a poor idea of the qualifications necessary for a man to instruct the public, assuming for that purpose the position of editor of a newspaper. A correspondent writes, asking him to publish correctly the motto on the State seal of Virginia, with a true translation of it, he having seen it published in newspapers in three different ways. The editor of the Mercury replies:

"We do not deem it essential that a man should understand Dog Latin, Chinese or Choctaw, to be able to edit a newspaper with passable ability. A little common sense, some impudence, a fair sprinkling of general knowledge, and a good pair of scissors, comprise the chief stock in trade."

He then, with the most self-satisfied air, boasts of his ignorance of Latin. Having done this, we should think the best thing this editor could have done would have been to tell his correspondent to apply for information to some one who was capable of giving it; but no, instead of taking the trouble to look in Webster's Unabridged, where he could have found the Latin quotations most frequently occurring in English books translated for the benefit of ignorant people, he prefers to give a false translation of his own, and thus mislead his correspondent, who, honestly wishing for information, applied for it to one who had set himself up as qualified to teach the ignorant. He says:

"The literal meaning of the words are sic, thus; semper, ever or always tyrannis, tyranny. A fair translation of the sentence would be, "ever thus with tyranny."

Tyrannis is not the Latin for "tyranny," but the ablative case of tyrannus, a tyrant, and signifies "with tyrants." We are sorry to see this "editor," who sneers at the "dead languages" as utterly beneath his notice, expose his ignorance of the construction of his own language by saying: "The literal meaning of the words are." The first qualification for an editor is, or should be, a decent education; but alas, in California "editors" can get along even without that. "'Tis true, 'tis pity; and pity 'tis, 'tis true."

THE Mariposa Gazette says:

"General McDowell has consented that the Echo de Pacifique may be published again if it will be careful to say nothing of American politics. It will be issued as the Independent."

The Mariposa Gazette makes a great mistake; there is no necessity to curb the liberty of the press to such an extent as this would imply. Gen. McDowell has not stipulated that the Echo de Pacifique should express no opinions on the politics of the country in which it is published; he has simply warned the proprietors of the penalty which will follow the publication of matter giving aid and encouragement to treason.

RATHER a puzzling paragraph appeared in the Alta on Friday. After stating that the San Francisco Benevolent Association request cast off clothing to be sent to them, it concludes:

"There is much need of all articles of clothing, from a coat down. It frequently happens that persons apply for relief and are so shabbily dressed that the restaurant-keepers refuse to let them enter to get a meal."

Is it possible that the S. F. B. A., dress men who are too shabby to be able to get a meal without paying for it in advance, and then send them forth to "spar" for their meals, to "wrestle" beefsteaks out of confiding restaurant keepers on the strength of their good clothes! We trust not, yet how can the statement that "restaurant keepers refuse to let them have a meal" refer to anything but a credit arrangement. Surely if they "plank" the cash they can get their board.

"CHARLES" advertises that he was "formerly book-keeper for the largest house in San Francisco." Let's see; which is the largest house? Oh, the Russ House of course. Yes, "Charles" used to keep books for the Russ House, and now he says he "desires to engage his services in some commercial department." We presume it will be more satisfactory to "Charles," if some one else wishes to engage his services.

How very careful people should be in using the English language, one is so liable to be misunderstood. We once knew of an unpleasant report arising that Bishop ——— was in love with his washerwoman, from a person's saying that "on the last occasion he saw him he appeared wrapped up in his lawn dress!

"INCENDIARISM is ripe in Marysville."—Alta.

We suppose it is the fruit of incendinrism that is "ripe." Why wasn't it nipped in the bud? Our San Francisco firemen don't allow incendiarism to "ripen" here.

A CERTAIN firm on Battery street have for some time had an advertisement in the papers, stating that they have "Wide duck 34 inch to 72 inch wide" for sale. At first glance we thought the advertisement referred to Wild duck, but we fancy, now, that it is a sort of canvass back duck.

TREM.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

By the author of "Aurora Floyd," "Three Times Dead," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Doctor's Wife," "The Outcasts," etc.

SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS PUBLISHED.

Ensign Harcourt Lowther, a gentleman of culture, and Francis Tredethlyn, the hero, (the son of a Cornish farmer,) a soldier in the same regiment, who is detailed as a confidential servant to Ensign Lowther, have been stationed in Van Diemen's Land for five years. In boyhood Tredethlyn had fallen in love with his rich uncle's only child, "cousin Susy," and a secret engagement had taken place between them, which was afterwards broken off, and he enlisted. Although he had written frequently to his cousin he had received no response or any intelligence from home, until the story opens with the reception of information of the death of his miserly uncle and his inheritance of thirty thousand pounds a year. He departs for England to take possession of his inheritance.

Upon his arrival in England, his first action is a vain attempt to find his cousin Susan, who had been forbidden her father's house in a moment of stormy passion, to divide his fortune with her. His monied influence gains him an introduction into the family and social circle of Lionel Hillary, an apparently wealthy merchant, whose family consists of his only daughter, Maude, and her friend and companion, Miss Julia Desmond, both cultivated and prepossessing young ladies. Tredethlyn soon becomes enamored with Maude, though the consciousness of his social inferiority causes him to hide his passion and endeavor to subdue it. Dazzled and flattered by his new position, he is made an easy victim to the designs of Miss Desmond, who sees in his fortune an incentive to the exertion of all her arts with a view to a matrimonial alliance that will at once free her from her situation of dependency, and give her wealth and position. An avowal and declaration is forced from Tredethlyn at a designed interview, by the artful Miss Desmond, and they are engaged.

A panic now occurs in the mercantile affairs of Lionel Hillary, and ruin stares him in the face. His daughter, noticing his changed manners and sleepless nights, watches him, and prevents him from committing suicide; winning from him the avowal that twenty thousand pounds are immediately required to save him from failure, disgrace and poverty. She seeks the frank, good-hearted Tredethlyn, and, in an impassioned manner, appeals to him to rescue her father from his situation. This interview brings forth an equally impassioned declaration from Tredethlyn of his love for her, of his conscious unworthiness, and his willingness to bestow the whole of his fortune for her benefit, if necessary.

Miss Hillary is surprised, shocked and offended by this avowal, and is about retiring in anger, when Miss Desmond, who has overheard enough to obtain a clew to the purport of the interview, enters; charges Maude with mercenary motives in supplanting her, and Tredethlyn with infidelity, and declares all is cancelled between him and herself. Miss Desmond leaves the house early next morning without an explanation. Tredethlyn attempts an apology to Maude, who refuses to listen to him. He, disgusted by the troubles his fortune and new position have environed him with, determines to estrange himself from them and fly to London. The next day twenty thousand pounds are placed to the credit of Lionel Hillary at his banker's, from an anonymous source. The merchant is all gratitude: points to Tredethlyn as his benefactor, and speaks of him in the warmest terms to his daughter.

Tredethlyn seeks again in vain for his cousin Susan, though he learns she has been entrapped into a mock marriage by a villain, who deserted her, and that she then fled to London. Subsequently new meshes are thrown around our hero by the designing Lionel Hillary; ten thousand pounds more are obtained from him, and he is admitted a silent partner in the house of Hillary & Co. Maude, who was betrothed to Ensign Harcourt Lowther—Tredethlyn's old master—before he left England, is commanded by her father to break off all correspondence with him and to look with favor upon an alliance with Tredethlyn. A chance encounter occurs, and Maude's amiability paves the way for a new hope and a new declaration. Acceptance and marriage speedily follow.

Just previous to the marriage, Ensign Harcourt Lowther returns from Van Diemen's Land, and seeks an interview with Maude, only to learn from her own lips the story of her forced engagement. Learning the name of the affianced, he tells her of the old relation of master and man, and makes Maude pledge him not to reveal to Tredethlyn the secret of their earlier love and engagement. Nettled and stung by his jealousy and pride, he plans a cultured and villainous revenge. After the marriage occurs and Tredethlyn and wife have become engrafted into the fashionable circles of London, he seeks him out and instals himself into the graces of the young Cornishman, and becomes his inseperable companion and mentor, leading him gradually into (for Tredethlyn) the dangerous confines of vice and dissipation and widening more and more the gulf between him and Maude, who had become the "sensation," the leading fashionable wife of London, whose parties, receptions and dinners were notable for their extravagance.

Maude one day encountered Miss Julia Desmond, who is occupying the position of governess, seeks her forgiveness and tenders her a home. Julia, still rankling with jealous passion, refuses the offer, except as a hired companion. Maude humors her foible, but insists on her promising to come as a "friend." Envy and jealousy urging Julia to seek a proper opportunity to become avenged, she dissembles and accepts.

Tredethlyn, sickened by the constant round of gay and dissipated life, is withdrawn from the dangerous highways by the discovery of his cousin, whom he encounters one night as a supernumerary of one of the London theatres. He seeks an interview, with the determination of bestowing on her a portion of that fortune, which his innate convictions have always told him should have been hers.

CHAPTER XXIX.

ENTANGLEMENTS IN THE WEB.

Harcourt Lowther, calling at the stuccoed mansion in time for Mrs. Tredethlyn's afternoon tea, found a dark and dashing young lady comfortably established in a luxurious amber damask nest against a background of amber curtain, whose glowing tints were extremely becoming to the young lady's clear complexion. The two ladies were quite alone, though Maude declared gaily that she had had crowds of people that afternoon.

"You generally come so late, Mr. Lowther," she said. "Those were the Dudley Boltons whom you met going out—nice people, fresh from the wolds of Yorkshire, quite new to town, people who come once in ten years or so, when there's an International Exhibition, or something of that kind. Isn't it strange that people can be so civilized living in the depths of the country—read the last novel—see the last great picture—because you see, now-a-days, great pictures jog about the country like popular prime ministers, and if Mahomet can't go to the mountain in Trafalgar Square, the mountain goes to meet Mahomet in his provincial town. But I want to introduce you to Miss Desmond, the daughter of the late Colonel Desmond, papa's oldest friend. Julia, dear, Mr. Lowther has heard me talk of you perpetually, and you have heard a good deal of him," Mrs. Tredethlyn blushed a little as she said this, "so I expect you to be intensely intimate immediately."

This introduction took place towards the close of June, nearly a month after the Oaks day; and during the time that had elapsed since that event, Harcourt Lowther, in his character of Mephistopheles, had found Faust what is popularly called a very troublesome customer. Francis Tredethlyn had a secret, and so far it had been a secret which Mr. Lowther could neither penetrate nor turn to his own use.

Yes, this simple-minded Cornishman, whose confiding candor had revealed every feeling, and every shade of feeling, to his baneful companion, had his secret now, and seemed to know very well how to keep it.

There were days on which he had business which took him a little way out of town; and Harcourt Lowther, pumping never so wisely, could pump no further information out of the secret depths of his friend's mind. He had even proposed to accompany Francis on these mysterious excursions, but his friendly offers had been met by a point-blank refusal. He had ventured a little playful badinage; he had gone so far as to make an occasional insinuation; but Francis had repelled his hints with the fiery indignation of a man whose tenderest and noblest feelings are involved in the subject of his friend's persiflage.

"I know you get plenty of pleasant little witticisms of that kind out of those flimsy-covered books Mr. Jeffs supplies you with, but hadn't you better keep them for Mrs. de Rothsay's next evening party? They tell so much better amongst people who understand the French phrases you're so fond of using. Some of your best things might as well be Greek, so far as I am concerned," Francis said, coolly.

Mephistopheles shrugged his shoulders in mild deprecation of his pupil's impertinence. Faust was positively beginning to acquire the tone of good society. He was learning to be insolent.

Harcourt Lowther left no stone unturned in his endeavors to discover the Cornishman's secret, but unluckily there were not many stones to turn: and when Mr. Lowther had pumped Francis, and pumped Francis's valet, who could give no clue whatever to his master's conduct, there remained nothing more to be done: unless, indeed, Mr. Lowther had cared to resort to the private inquiry system, and employ a shabby genteel person at three or four guineas a week to track the footsteps of Francis. But this was a plan to which Harcourt Lowther could only have resorted in the most desperate extremity. If possible, he wanted to do dirty work without soiling his fingers. The private inquiry system would have been a dangerous kind of machinery to put into motion—dangerous even if successful—utterly fatal in the case of failure; and it was just possible that the shabby genteel person might do his spiriting awkwardly, and make his watchfulness sufficiently intrusive to arouse suspicion, and bring impetuous Francis Tredethlyn down upon him in an avalanche of manly rage.

"Pshaw!" thought Mr. Lowther, after a meditative and leisurely review of his position. "It is only a matter of so much time. 'Point de zèle,' said Talleyrand; but he only meant, don't be in a hurry. Your zealous diplomatist may be a very valuable person, provided he knows how to keep the secret of his earnestness; but your impatient diplomatist is a certain failure. Yet there are people who will gather their fruit before it is ripe. When your true diplomatist comes to an awkward knot in the airy network of his scheme, the best thing he can do is to sit down quietly before the web until some accidental hand unravels the entanglement. Chance is the unfailing friend of the schemer, but the goddess is very capricious in her visiting routine, and there are stupid creatures who won't wait for a morning call. Luckily, I am not one of them. I can afford to be patient. Maude is an angel; the Stuccoville dinners and the Stuccoville wines are excellent; and for the rest I do pretty well. Ecarté is a most agreeable game; especially when one plays with a man who is half his time so absent-minded as to forget to mark the king. Yes, dear Francis, I can afford to wait for the lucky accident which is to put me in possession of the clue to those little trips of yours, in hansom cabs which you prefer to pick up for yourself: thereby depriving your valet of any help to be derived by an examination of the number of the vehicle, and a subsequent chat with the driver."

Harcourt Lowther came very frequently to Mrs. Tredethlyn's drawing-rooms, now that she was to be found always accompanied by her darling Julia, and entirely unembarrassed by his visits. He did not always come at the orthodox hour, but would make his appearance between eleven and twelve o'clock on a hopelessly rainy morning, with a new book, or a roll of music, or something delightfully hideous in the way of jelly-fish for Maude's aquarium, or the last fashion in ferns or orchids for Maude's conservatories; and the back of Mrs. Tredethlyn's house broke out into ferneries and conservatories wherever the ingenuity of a fashionable builder could find an excuse for carrying out Mrs. Tredethlyn's graceful ideas, and swelling Mr. Tredethlyn's little account.

Mr. Lowther had contrived to make himself the friend of the house, so there was always some very plausible excuse for visits at unorthodox hours, and pleasant dawdling in Maude's pretty morning-room; and Stuccoville, furtively observant behind rose-colored curtains in opposite houses, took note of Mr. Lowther's morning calls, and kept a sharp account of the period that elapsed between his entrances and exits; and all this time nothing could be more delicately deferential, more tenderly respectful, than Harcourt Lowther's manner to his friend's wife. By no hazardous phrase, by not so much as a furtive glance, a half-suppressed sigh, had he awakened Maude to a perception of possible danger in this pleasant intimacy with the man who had once been her affianced husband. No poisonous breath from the schemer's false lips had tarnished the purity of this bright young soul; but Stuccoville had taken alarm already, and—in confidential converse in cosy corners of ottomans, under the shadow of tall vases of exotics, or statuary taking a thorn out of its foot, or riding on a mythological monster, or with a caduceus poised lightly on its arm and tiny pinions in its helm—declared Mrs. Tredethlyn's conduct to be "Positively appalling, my dear; and that absurd west-country dolt of a husband continues as blind as ever; and now she has taken a companion, my love. You remember the companion in Vanity Fair; that delightful Becky calls her a sheep-dog; and you recollect Madame de Marneffe's companion in that horrible novel of Balzac's, which my tiresome Georgiana found the other morning at the bottom of a cupboard, in which her brother Charles keeps his cricketing shoes and fishing-tackle, and was discovered by the governess sitting on the ground positively devouring the book, and when questioned, said it was Télémaque; but as I was about to tell you, my dear, with regard to Mrs. T—— and Mr. H. L——;" and so the little mole-hill gathered size, and gradually grew into a mountain.

Harcourt Lowther and Mrs. Tredethlyn's darling Julia were not slow to arrive at a very friendly understanding. One morning spent in Miss Desmond's society was quite sufficient to show so subtle an observer as Harcourt the real state of that young lady's feelings with regard to her patroness. Indeed, Julia did not take much trouble to conceal her sentiments. Gay and animated one minute, darkly brooding the next, very often captious and contradictory, sharply ironical, or sternly defiant, she was in all things the very reverse of the paid companion who sets her employer's caprices against the amount of her salary, and gratefully accepts any pleasure or advantages that fall in her way. Maude's natural forbearance was exaggerated by a remorseful consciousness that all the luxuries and gaieties of her life were so many blessings which she had in a manner stolen from Julia, and her tenderness towards Miss Desmond was unbounded. But there were times when the Irish girl rebelled even against this tenderness.

"Do you think my poverty is an open wound, that you approach it so shrinkingly?" she exclaimed, impatiently, one day when Maude had broken down in a delicate periphrasis, in which she tried to offer to pay her friend's milliner's bill without wounding her friend's pride. "Why don't you say at once, 'My husband has thirty thousand a year, and a twenty-pound note more or less is ineffably unimportant to me—while you must go bareheaded if your pride revolts against dirty tulle and tumbled flowers?' Pay me my salary, Mrs. Tredethlyn, when it becomes due, and do not force your favors upon me: for I come of a proud race, who are slow to perceive the difference between an unwelcome favor and an uncalled-for insult. As for the unmade silk dresses which you have tried so delicately to force upon me, under the pretence that the colors are unbecoming to your complexion, you can parade your wealth and generosity by presenting them to your maid. I am voué au noir henceforward; and when you are tired of seeing my shabby-genteel black moiré and Limrick lace in some obscure corner of your rooms, you have only to give me a hint, and I will spend the evening in my own apartment."

It was not often that Miss Desmond indulged in such a speech as this, or perhaps ever remorseful Maude could scarcely have endured her companionship. She sometimes made herself very agreeable during those idle rainy mornings in which Maude and Harcourt Lowther practised the old concertante duets for flute and piano, or dawdled amongst the delicate ferns with the crack-jaw names in the little fernery that opened out of the boudoir; or devised gorgeously incomprehensible illuminations for an obscure verse in Malachi. Miss Desmond could never be charming, for the power to charm is a gift sui generis, and does not necessarily go along with versatile accomplishments or intellectual superiority; but she could be an amusing and agreeable companion when ever she pleased to exhibit herself in the character, and she did so please very frequently; for it is so so much less trouble to be agreeable than to be disagreeable, that the most persevering sulker is apt to give way under the weary burden of his own temper. But let Julia Desmond be ever so vivacious, or ever so delightful, Harcourt Lowther never lost sight of one fact—and that was the fact of Julia's unappeased hatred of Mrs. Tredethlyn. Stuccoville, which was omniscient of everything, knew that Francis Tredethlyn had been engaged to Julia, and had jilted her in order to marry Maude; and from Stuccoville Harcourt Lowther obtained the clue to the Irish girl's feelings.

"A little genuine feminine malice might be rather a useful element, if I can set it working unconsciously for my benefit. Your amateur's assistance is generally a dismal failure, but I really think this Miss Desmond might help me. She is so very clever—and so intensely spiteful."

So one morning when Harcourt Lowther happened to find Julia alone in the morning-room, he took the opportunity of being quite confidential upon the subject of Mr. Tredethlyn's dissipation.

"He dined from home yesterday? and the day before? Ah, to be sure, I dined with him the day before," said Mr. Lowther, with a deprecating sigh. He did not attempt to conceal the fact of his own participation in Francis Tredethlyn's pleasures; but he contrived in the most subtle manner to make it understood that he accompanied Francis in the character of a guardian angel, a protecting spirit in modern costume, with an arresting hand forever extended to snatch the sinner from the verge of the precipice. Miss Desmond shrugged her shoulders disdainfully.

"I don't think Mrs. Tredethlyn values her husband's society sufficiently to feel his neglect very keenly," she said; "she seems perfectly happy."

"Yes, it was quite true; Maude seemed very happy, though her husband spent the best part of his time away from home, and was gloomy and ill at ease in her society. Harcourt Lowther's hints had done their work, and the breach was very wide between husband and wife. Francis believed that his presence was odious to Maude. Maude imagined that home pleasures and simple domestic enjoyments were tame and insipid for Francis. And it had all been so easily done! Harcourt had only to make a few careless speeches about his friend.

"You see, my dear Mrs. Tredethlyn, a man of our dear Frank's temperament requires outdoor amusements—hunting and shooting, and racing, and all their agreeable concomitants in the way of uproarious dinners. A man with Frank's animal spirits must have more boisterous pleasures than can be procured in a drawing-room, however charming—or amongst women, however delightful. There are some men who do not care for the society of ladies; very excellent fellows in their way, but men in whose minds poetry and music, beautiful scenery, exquisite sentiments, grand ideas, are all classed under one head as 'doosid bores.' You know the style of man who calls everything except his horse and his dog a 'doosid bore.' I don't say Tredethlyn is quite that sort of a man, but he is not a domestic animal."

Mr. Lowther—sitting amongst a chaos of feminine litter, snipping out painted birds and flowers with a pair of fairy-like scissors for Maude's potchitomanie, looked the very incarnation of all that is domestic and devoted to the fair sex. Perhaps he fully estimated the advantage of the contrast between his own character and that of the men he had been describing. Mrs. Tredethlyn gave a little sigh.

"And Frank used to be so very domestic, and so dotingly fond of Floss," she said, looking pensively at a mouse-colored Skye terrier, whose cold nose reposed in the pink palm of her pretty hand. "However, we contrive to do very well without him, don't we, Flossy Possy? and we shouldn't care if he went to all the races in that dreadful calendar, and never, never came to his own house at all, should we, Flossy Possy?"

Harcourt Lowther, looking up furtively from the covert of his auburn eyelashes, snipped a bird into mincemeat, and tightened his mouth until the thin lips were scarcely visible.

"That nonsense sounds rather like pique," he thought. "Can she care for the fellow? A handsome boor, who would scarcely know the difference between Beethoven's 'Moonlight' and 'Rule, Britannia!'—can she have the faintest sentiment of affection for such a man as that, when—"

Mr. Lowther's self-esteem finished the sentence—

"When she knows me, and can contrast my infinite graces and accomplishments with the boor's defects."

But Mr. Lowther, looking at his position in all its aspects, could not do otherwise than perceive that the provincial rust was gradually wearing off the farmer's son, and that Francis Tredethlyn was learning to hold his own amongst men who had played cricket in the Eton meads, and paced the grand old cloisters and quadrangles of Oxford and Cambridge. Association is the best schoolmaster; and even in Bohemia a man who is blessed with a fair amount of intelligence must learn something.

There were times when Harcourt Lowther frowned darkly as he brooded over his cards, and began to think that the game was not such an easy one to win, after all. But he played patiently notwithstanding: and, true to his faith in the saving help of Chance, he waited for the goddess to look over his shoulder, and point with her inspired finger to the trump which should win him the final trick.

(To be continued.)

Needs a work on punctuation—that private in the army, who sent a letter to a little girl at home, closing with, "May heaven cherish and keep you from yours truly John Smith."

TULOOM.

BY the coast of Yucatan,
As untenanted of man
As a castle under ban,
By a doom,
For the deeds of bloody hours,
Overgrown with tropic bowers,
Stand the Teocallis towers
Of Tuloom.

One of these is fair to sight,
Where it pinnacles a height,
And the breakers blossom white
As they boom
And split beneath the walls,
And an ocean murmur falls
Through the melancholy halls
Of Tuloom.

On the summit as you stand,
All the ocean and the land
Stretch away on either hand;
But the plume
Of the palm is overhead,
And the grass beneath your tread
Is the monumental bed
Of Tuloom—

All the grandeur of the woods,
And the greatness of the floods,
And the sky that overbroods,
Dress a tomb,
Where the stucco drops away,
And the bat avoids the day,
In the chambers of decay
In Tuloom.

They are battlements of death;
When the breezes hold their breath,
Down a hundred feet beneath,
In a flume
Of the sea, as still as glass,
You can see the flashes pass
By the promontory mass
Of Tuloom.

Towards the forest is displayed,
On the terrace a façade
With devices overlaid,
And the bloom
Of the vine of sculpture led O'er the soffit overhead
Was a fancy of the dead
Of Tuloom.

There are corridors, and there,
From the terrace, goes a stair,
And the way is broad and fair
To the room
Where the inner altar stands
And the mortar's tempered sands
Bear the print of human hands
In Tuloom.

O'er the sunny ocean swell
The canoas running well
Towards the isle of Cozume,
Cleave the spume—
On the run, and never halt
Where the shimmer from the salt
Makes a twinkle in the vault
Of Tuloom.

When the night is wild and dark,
And a war is in the park,
And the lightning, to its mark,
Cuts the gloom,
All the region, on the sight,
Rushes upward from the night,
In thunder-crash of light
O'er Tuloom.

Oh, could such a flash recall
All the flamens to their hall,
All the idols on the wall,
In the fume
Of the Indian sacrifice,
All the lifted hands and eyes,
All the laughters and the cries
Of Tuloom—

All the kings in feathered pride,
All the people like a tide,
And the voices of the bride
And the groom!
But alas! the prickly pear,
And the owlets of the air,
And the lizards make a lair
Of Tuloom.

We are tenants on the strand
Of the same mysterious land—
Must the shores that we command
Reassume
Their primeval forest hum,
And the future pilgrim come
Unto monuments as dumb
As Tuloom?

'Tis a secret of the clime,
And a mystery sublime,
Too obscure in coming time
To presume;
But the snake, amid the grass,
Hisses at us as we pass,
And we sigh, alas! alas!
In Tuloom. [Erastus W. Ellsworth.

Bowing Themselves into Submission.—A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial gives the following amusing account of the manner in which the obsequious rebel officials tried to surrender Kinston, N. C., to the Federal army:

The rebels had hardly got out of sight, when a white flag was seen emerging from the edge of the town, situated on a terrace about a mile from the bridge. As it came nearer it proved to be a party of city officials who came to pass under the yoke. They advanced with great solemnity, three walking abreast, and two following in a buggy. As they turned through an opening in the line of works and came on to the level space forming the approaches to the bridge, they stopped and bowed profoundly. One of the party removed his hat, and having bent himself into what he considered a becoming attitude, he maintained it, constantly eyeing our men in front of him and on either flank along the bank, and bowing with his hat and hand, as if any relaxation of profound respect would draw a shower of bullets.

For a couple of minutes no one said a word, and meantime the party in the buggy joined the bowing party in line, and all together made a profound bow, with their hands on their hearts, as Mr. Pickwick is represented in the plates—only it was curious to observe how a little excitement disqualified them from judging of the exact locality of that member; either this or they wished to indicate that they surrendered without fear, and that their hearts were not in their mouths at all events.

"Who are you?" at last broke from one of our party.

"The Mayor of the town," was the reply.

"What do you want?"

"To surrender it, provided we can obtain protection for the citizens and their property."

"Protection's played out," chimed in fifty soldiers.

Five hands dropped from five different parts of their official bodies, the hatless person covered his head, and our men went on building the raft and repairing the bridge.

In the city of H—— there resides a worthy deacon, blessed or cursed with a tall, gaunt figure, also hands of enormous dimensions. He was strictly pious, never failing to ask a blessing, not on when his own family dined, but also at the servants' meals. One one occasion he employed a male servant, who was entirely ignorant of the deacon's religious propensities. He made his appearance shortly before the dining hour, and as soon as the bell sounded, the servant started for the table, and without ceremony commenced devouring the good things. The deacon was horrified, and extended his hand, saying: "Pause, young man, pause!" The young man raised his eyes significantly to the deacon's upraised hand, and replied: "Yes, and pretty good size paws, too, I should say!"

A loquacious gentleman finding himself a passenger in a stage-coach with a prim and taciturn maiden lady of some forty winters, endeavored in vain to engage in conversation. At length night came: as nothing was said, both fell asleep. The stage finally stopped and the driver announced to he lady that she had arrived at her place of destination. Her fellow passenger being awakened at the same time, thought that he would exchange a word at leaving, and addressed her: "Madam, as we shall never again, probably, sleep together, I bid you a very respectful farewell." A scream, and silence reigned again.

Racy.—Those who have laughed over the story of the old gent who persisted in remaining in the hansom cab while the horse was kicking away the dashboard, because it was a "Pateut Safety," will appreciate the following: In one of the too frequent steam-boat races on one of the American rivers, when the cry was raised for two more barrels of resin for the furnaces and a man to sit on the safety-valve, a timid person offered himself immediately for the post, and was accepted. His reason was, that in case of an explosion, he was sure to be safe, if he were on the safety-valve!

The late Rev. Rowland Hill, a cautious Divine, understood human nature well. His chapel having been infested by pickpockets, he took occasion to remind the congregation that there was an all seeing Providence, to whom no secrets are hid. "But, lest," he added, "there may be any present who are insensible to such reflections, I beg leave to state that there are also Bow street officers on the lookout."

Dr. Chalmers, when at College, dutifully wrote letters to his mother every week. Upon receiving her letter the old lady would adjust her glasses and reading the superscription of the package from the post office, carefully put it away, remarking, "I ken our Tammy's weel when he writes. Whenever he comes home he'll read it for me."

Considerate.—A witch, being at the stake to be burnt, saw her son there, and desired him to give her some drink. "No, mother," said he, "it would do you wrong, for the drier you are the better you will burn."

A VERY GRAND DUCHY.

SCHWEINFETT, capital of the Grand-Duchy of Wurstenberg, is a small town lying out of the usual track of our travelling countrymen, and offering no possible attraction to sight-seers. The only Englishmen who visit it are Queen's messengers and private friends of the British minister. Politically, it is an important nucleus of intrigues and movements; the Schweinfetter Weekly Journal is the organ of the genuine German party; at Schweinfett are constant meetings of that party, attended by Prussian and Austrian emissaries, who take down the proceedings in short-hand, and telegraph them to their governments. Much pressure is exercised on the Grand-Duke of Wurstenberg to make him withdraw his protection from the newspaper and its party. But the grand-duke, eccentric in other ways, is doubly so in the eyes of his fellow-princes as an advocate of perfect liberty. The result is, that the very name of Schweinfett communicates an odor like that of lucifer-matches, to the nostrils of neighboring potentates. The people of Wurstenberg care little either way. So long as the opera goes on, and the military bands perform in front of the palace, they of the capital are contented. The square in fron of the palace is kept free, by general consent, from political manifestations, and the inhabitants of it cause the obnoxious papers to be delivered at their back doors. What happens in the market-place is indifferent to the grand-duke.

Nothing happens there in the way of commerce. The town is supported by the court, and does not seek more vulgar customers. The sleepy streets only wake up when carriages of the aristocracy drive through them, and certain shops do not open their doors to any customers who are not provided with a regular introduction. As the whole town consists of the palace square and five or six streets besides the market-place, there is no difficulty in finding your way; but the loyal inhabitants have stuck up at every corner a hand pointing "To the Palace," with much the same aspirations as the Empress Catherine when she planted her guide-post labelled "The Way to Constantinople." Of course the simple citizens are not admitted to the exclusive privileges. But at every ball and every grand dinner there is a gallery for lookers-on, and tickets may be had for asking.

"The society here," said Sir Hercules Fitzgig, British Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of Wurstenberg, on the first day of my visit to him, "is considered very good, and is fenced about with many restrictions. No family is admitted without due proofs of its pedigree, which must be examined and reported on by the crown lawyers. No family, any member of which has been in any profession but the army, or has made money in any way that can be called legitimate trading, can be admitted without long formalities and a perfect process of purification. Every family must have had at least two generations. No one may have his teeth drawn by any but the court dentist. I spare you the further recital. You will find a copy of the laws, as approved by the grand-duke, in one of my private despatches at the Foreign Office."

"When we're in," I said, "I shall ask our foreign secretary to let me see them."

"Well, you see that we are very exclusive, and we pride ourselves on the purity of our blood. This, however, has not prevented many great scandals. At the present moment the very core of society is split up into camps—the Wasch-Mugdorff faction and the Perkenstein faction. The origin of the quarrel is very trivial, but the two factions hate each other to the death. Anything you can say to a lady of one faction against the ladies of the other, is the surest road to that lady's favor. I will tell you the histories of the ladies."

"Let me get well up in their names."

"You will have no difficulty in doing that. You are to hand the Countess Perkenstein to dinner to-day, therefore you must avoid all mention of the bath you have just come from, as her husband lost all her money there, and didn't shoot himself. The factious hang together like clans, and so you must not talk of English politics, because that might be a reflection on the young Baroness Hohlezahn, who took a violent fit of Anglomania in order to catch one of my attachés, and failed. You must not breathe a syllable about the clause of legitimate trading, as that would be fatal to M. de Pott, who made money in business, and was only admitted to this court because he proved that his trading had been not legitimate. You must avoid these things particularly. On the other hand, you may cut the whole Wasch-Mugdorff faction to shreds; beginning with the chief of it. Every sarcasm you can expend on her will be delicious to the Perkenstein. You may have heard of Madame Wasch-Mugdorff; she is the original of the story of the lady who, having been divorced three times, was put down to whist with her three former husbands. Here you have a capital game before you, and I wish I were near enough to hear you avail yourself of it; but I shall have to put you at the other end of the table."

"I'll tell you afterwards what I said."

"Oh, there'll be no need of that, la Perkenstein herself will repeat every word of it. The next in the faction is Madame Faulenzer, whose husband eloped with an opera-singer, but was forgiven. Then comes the Countess Schnabeloffsky, wife of a former Russian minister, who was sent to Siberia, but returned in less time than it takes for the single journey. You may ask Madame Perkenstein what is the first stage to Siberia, and whether she thinks some people get any further. She will understand if you don't, and if you want the choicest piece of gossip that has ever circulated, she will probably tell it you."

"Any more?"

"Plenty more, though these form the triumvirate (or should it be triummulicrate?) of that faction, and it is safer confining yourself to the leaders. However, you may allude casually to orders of merit, because Baron Strudelwitz got an order by promising the servant who was always sent out with them a goodish bribe if he would bring him one, and of course the servant plagued his superiors till the order was duly conferred on the baron. You may talk of shooting, because Count Prudelwitz has a keeper to fire at the same time as himself, and swear that his master's shot was successful. These two gentlemen are the great allies of the three principal ladies, and perhaps at her next divorce Madame Wasch-Mugdorff will marry one of them."

Armed with this information, I descended into the drawing-room a little before dinner-time, and began to scrutinize the guests as they assembled. The host himself had not made his appearance, and I heard Lady Fitzgig apologize for his absence to every fresh arrival. At last the number was complete; but no Sir Hercules. I had marked out two ladies who must, I imagined, be the heads of the two factions, from the grand curtseys they swept to each other, and the overdone affability with which they entered in conversation. I made my way to Lady Fitzgig and stated my conjecture.

"You have guessed right," she said, and was evidently pleased with my penetration.

"But where is Sir Hercules, to present me?" I asked; "and which of the two is my destined companion?"

"I will introduce you," answered the hostess. "Sir Hercules is detained by most urgent business. A supplement to the Journal de Schweinfett has just come out with a most incendiary attack on the King of Prussia, and Sir Hercules has to write a despatch on the subject, to be sent this evening. It is fully expected that Prussian troops will be marched into the grand-duchy before the day is over." All this was conveyed in a mysterious whisper, and then Lady Fitzgig took me up to my partner. As is usually the case in introductions, I heard my own name very distinctly; all I caught of hers was Madame la Comtesse.

I was received rather stiffly, but I attributed this to the exclusive feeling of the Schweinfett society, and the dislike of strangers which I believe exists in so many of the small German capitals. The importance of these small places is so completely cast in the shade by France and England, that Frenchmen and Englishmen are snubbed as the only means of protesting against the size and prominence of their countries. However, I was determined not to heed any such trivial matters, and as at this moment Sir Hercules came in very hurriedly, and handed in one of the ladies to dinner without even looking round him, I gave my arm, and we followed.

The place assigned me was at Lady Fitzgig's end of the table. I could just see Sir Hercules behind a shrubbery of leaves and flowers, and the distant glance I had of him showed that he was perturbed in spirit. The lady who was by my side had noticed it also, and she murmured sarcastically, "Sire Ercule est distrait."

"Evidently, madame," I replied, "it seems there is a likelihood of political disturbance."

"Ah bah! we make nothing of that here; we are accustomed to threats of intervention every week. And, after all, how little you English must care for the petty quarrels of a diminutive state like ours."

All this was said with manifest intention, and I began to see that my guess at the reason of the lady's stiffness was correct. So I began some phrase about political importance being merely relative, when I was interrupted by a voice in my ear, and my host's own servant said, in low tones, "Sir Hercules regrets that his absence till the last moment prevented him from introducing you himself to Madame la Comtesse." Sir Hercules was looking at me from the end of the table while his message was being delivered. I looked across at the rival leader, who was seated exactly opposite, and I confess I was puzzled.

The countess by my side noticed my perplexity, and had caught part of the sentence. "Sire Ercule apologizes?" she asked.

"So it seems," I replied, "though I can't tell why."

"It is very necessary. Don't you know that it is contrary to all etiquette for a gentleman to be presented by a lady?"

This, then, was the cause of the stiffness, and this made Sir Hercules so distressed. Poor old fellow! To think that he should have been so thoroughly saturated with the etiquette of a small German court during the twenty years of his embassy!

"What do you say about English politics?" asked the lady, after an embarrassing pause.

"That, madame, is a subject on which I never talk," I said, decidedly, though I was not a little surprised at her introduction of it. "I will take you further afield. What do you say to Russia?"

"Ah, you allude to the Poles, of course; I might have seen where your sympathies would lead you. And who does not sympathize with such gallantry? Why you yourselves, who generally judge all things by success, you, whom Napoleon called a nation of shopkeepers, and who think nothing legitimate but trade—is not that true, that you think nothing legitimate but trade?"

This voluntary allusion to trade, which I was told to avoid so strictly, puzzled me more than ever. Is this woman so offended at my being introduced by the lady of the house that she is sacrificing her own faction in order to gratify her spite upon me? If so, the best thing I can do is to ingratiate myself with her by showing my knowledge, and ridiculing the opposite party.

"Your own words contradict you there, madame. We show our unselfishness by sympathizing with such a hopeless cause. Remember the overwhelming force of the Russians; remember," I continued, more loudly, for she was about to interrupt me, "the weapons they employ against their victims—arrests, imprisonments, the stick, the knout, Siberia. You know what Siberia is, madame? We have always been told that few who go there return; can you tell us a different story? Perhaps you know what is the first stage to Siberia?"

Our rival opposite made an hysterical movement, from which I saw that the shot had told on her. But my countess was not yet reconciled. Instead of telling me the choicest piece of gossip that had ever circulated, she looked offended, and I began to suspect that the piece of gossip in question could not be safely told on a first acquaintance.

"If you will let me give you a piece of advice," said my neighbor, in a low and confidential voice, "you will not speak of such things at a large dinner-party. How do you know who is on the other side of you? English people do not recognize the old code of honor, but it is very strictly enforced here, and you might be involved in a serious quarrel. Some of our gentlemen are dead shots."

"Yes," I replied, with a ringing laugh, "but some of them never shoot without a keeper." There was a sensation near us, and another hysterical movement from our rival.

"I see you are incorrigible," said the countess, with an uneasy motion, which I interpreted as meaning that my last remarks had been rather too loud, and that I was drawing too much attention on our colloquy. I therefore lowered my voice, and asked if she went much to the opera?

"Twice a week," she replied.

"Did not you lose a valuable singer a few years ago?"

"We never lose valuable singers. The grand-duke will always pay the highest sums to retain them; and as they know that they are appreciated here, they remain."

"I thought this one left because she was a little too much appreciated, and that her travelling companion returned without her."

"I do not quite catch your allusion. In the summer most of our singers leave, and they generally recruit themselves at the baths. The doctors have always sent me to Kesselbad, but I greatly prefer Carlsbad, or some of the really aristocratic places. Kesselbad is a miserable place, I think. Have you ever been there?"

"I don't quite catch the name," I replied, in turn. "Do you like Baden, or Homburg?"

"How can you ask me? I detest all places given up to gambling. It is so degrading. It lowers the whole tone of the place. Our husbands get in bad ways: our society is spoilt; nothing but the outcasts of all the great capitals are to be found there, and Kesselbad is the worst of all. At other tables you may think you have some chance of winning, that the play is fair, and you may abandon yourself to the excitement; but no respectable person plays at Kesselbad, and be must be a fool indeed who can't resist the temptation."

How hard she is on her husband, I thought. She has never forgiven him the loss of her money; however, I can turn the subject in a way that will suit her better. "The only game that I approve of," I said, in a low voice, "is whist."

"Sir!" said the countess, looking round at me.

"Especially when one plays with people whom one knows," I continued.

"Sir!" said the countess again.

"Some ladies, I know, will never play except with their husbands for partners, and I daresay they are wise."

"What is the meaning of all this?" asked the countess.

"The meaning is simply, madame, that if you look across the table, you will see a lady who might have a variety of such partners, and would be sure of having one of them every time of cutting afresh." And, as I said this, I looked round at my partner with a meaning smile, expecting to find that my last remark had installed me fully in her favor.

I had only just noticed that instead of this she looked furious, and was gasping for breath, when the large folding-doors in the middle of the room were flung open, and a new guest came in. He was not announced, and nobody rose to receive him, but the footmen formed in a double line to let him pass, and silence fell at once on the company. The new comer was dressed in a snuff-brown morning coat, and had a brown wide-awake in his hand. An easy-chair was wheeled up for him a little distance from the table, and he sat down without speaking.

"I can't see you all," he said at length. "Take away those flower-pots. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight—why, you've got thirty people at table; a grand dinner; no one told me of it. Who let me in and didn't tell me?"

One of the footmen came forward with profuse bows, and admitted that he was guilty.

"Then just you go round to the palace and get me a uniform, sword, shako and tunic, and bring it as quick as you can. I shan't feel at ease in this brilliant company till I am properly equipped." So saying, he lolled back in his chair, and stretched out his legs so as to contradict his assertion of not feeling at ease.

The conduct of the new comer, the respect of the footmen and the despatch of one to the palace, gradually enlightened me. This oddly-dressed, eccentric personage must be the grand-duke himself; while, from the company not having risen at his entrance, he must be taken to be incog. Everybody who answered him spoke to him as Monsieur le Comte, and he chatted familiarly enough with all the guests in his neighborhood. There was a give and take in the conversation which struck me particularly, and which at times made me doubtful if the new-comer was the grand duke in person. But the arrival of the uniform left no room for uncertainty. Three footmen marched in with the dignity of grenadiers; the one carried a brass helmet, the second a sword, and the third a short coatee blazing with orders. At a sign from Sir Hercules the whole staff of lacqueys formed an impenetrable fence, behind which the change of dress was effected. When the footmen retired I saw the unceremonious intruder standing stiff and haughty by the side of his arm-chair, his brass helmet on his head, and his hand resting on the hilt of his sword. The company rose instantly, and bowed or curtseyed as low as the table would let them. Sir Hercules himself left his seat, and, bending low before the grand-duke, thanked him for the honor of his visit. The grand-duke waved his hand graciously, took off his helmet, and sat down, whisking his sword cleverly out of his own way.

"Well, are we going to war with Prussia, milord baronet? Will England send a fleet to support us? You have always told me that England respects the liberty of the press; will she fight for it?"

Sir Hercules dallied with his golden chain, and, smiling, put the question by. "There is one difficulty in the way of naval support, your highness."

"Ah, and what is that?"

"Simply, that your highness's grand-duchy is very far inland, and the only navigable river in it is almost too narrow for a jolly-boat."

"That never struck me. I think I shall suspend the freedom of the press till we get a seaboard. And so you think England will do nothing to help us. 'Perfide Albion! Du stolzes England, schame dich!' as the man sings in the opera. Isn't that an Englishman at the other end of the table? I don't know his face; he has never been presented to me."

"I was going to solicit an audience for that purpose tomorrow," said Hercules, promptly. "Your highness exercised your usual penetration; he is an Englishman, but he has only lately arrived in the dominions of your highness."

A sudden twinkle shot over the grand-duke's face, and I could see he meditated some mischief. "Only just arrived! He is doubtless a stranger to our court and our ways, to our scandals and our factions. Well, if he stays here any time, he will be able to learn them—especially under your instructions, Sir Hercules." The company looked daggers at the English minister, and he made a deprecating bow. "At present we are too much occupied with other things; we have a serious time before us; we must bid farewell to scandal, and prepare for troubles and trials on a large scale." The company breathed freely, preferring troubles and trials on a large scale to the open revelation of its secrets.

But the mischievous glance had not died out of the grand-duke's eyes; it was only lurking in the background. He was lulling the suspicion of the guests to sleep, in order to burst like a bomb-shell over their heads.

"Perhaps," he continued, seemingly addressing though not looking at me, "you will have an opportunity of seeing this country in a state of war! invaded by an overwhelming superior, its people flying from their houses, its towns in flames, its fields wasted. Such was the fate of Prussia herself at the beginning of the century; why may not Prussia retaliate it on us who have no means of escaping it? You may all well look grave at this picture," he said to the guests at the table, who were all smiling and feeling reassured at their own escape, "but such may be the fate in store for us. You would not have us flinch from the combat; no, we, too, must take up the gage flung down, and we must emulate the deeds of our ancestry. We must arm in defence of our hearths and homes. All, all of us must shoulder the musket"—and here he wheeled round suddenly to the right—"you will have to spare us your keeper, M. de Prudelwitz."

The company looked aghast while the grand-duke leaned back in his chair and chuckled. I was beginning to laugh too, but was checked by a warning glance from Sir Hercules.

"Ah, that's what we must come to if England won't help us. But, in the meantime, Prudelwitz, you had better take the Englishman out shooting, and show him what bags we can make up. Not that I have given up all hope of support from England yet, in spite of what Sir Hercules says. Diplomatists are always unwilling to hold out hopes which they know can't be gratified; but people who have studied English politics know England attaches the greatest importance to the integrity of the small States of Germany. Is not that your opinion, Madame de Hohlezahn?"

This time half the table laughed and the other half looked confused. It was plain the grand-duke was going through the calendar, and as no one could reply to him his victims must grin and bear it.

"We must send an embassy to the House of Commons and ask for its help. Whom shall we send? Strudelwitz I have no doubt would go, it would be a splendid diplomatic opening for him, and they would probably give him the Order of the Bath. Or there's Fauelenzer, he's certain to be listened to, for the last papers say that all the London world is listening to the new German singer."

"Your highness treats your future ambassadors too hardly," Sir Hercules ventured to interpose.

"Do you think so? Why, I fancied myself very mild to them, considering what they have to suffer in other countries when they fail. The person of an ambassador is sacred in foreign countries, but in his own he is liable to any disgrace; his profession ceases to be sacred, and has no more protection than any other legitimate trade—eh, M. de Pott? If ambassadors were sacred their wives ought to be, and yet we have heard of ladies being sent to Siberia, or at least accomplishing the first stage of that journey."

"Has your highness never heard of the English Siberia?" asked the last victim, who, as only a settler, could afford to be more courageous than the residents.

"Never," said the grand-duke.

"Let me tell your highness that it is far worse than our Russian Siberia, of which, as your highness knows, I have the right to speak. All ranks are liable to be sent there, and there is no appeal against the sentence of banishment."

"No half-way house?" began the duke.

"No, your highness," pursued the lady, unflinchingly; "the journey has nothing to enliven it, the return is uncertain and painful, and the name of the English Siberia is Coventry."

The duke retired from the conflict. "Ah," he said, "I know the name; but I prefer Kesselbad. Were you at Kesselbad this summer, Madame Perkenstein?"

I did not dare to look at my partner, but to my surprise I heard her laughing at this down-right attack. It spoke well for the hardihood of the court ladies at Schweinfett that they could laugh when the turn came to them, and do their best to disguise their sufferings.

"Many people lost their money again, I am told. Fortunately, no cases of suicide. That must be a comfort to the wives and families. It is bad enough to lose money, eh? especially when it is not our own, but life as well, that would be too bitter."

My companion was still laughing, and the grand-duke leant forwards, looking at her so pointedly that I wondered what more he was going to ask her. I thought she had been baited quite enough, and she had borne it so good humoredly, that she ought to be spared.

To my horror, the grand-duke said to her: "Have you been playing whist lately, Madame de Wasch-Mugdorff? When did you see your husbands last?"

"I look at the lady, and the duke, and Sir Hercules, and the whole truth flashed upon me. Lady Fitzgig had presented me to the wrong person!

This was the secret of our cross-questions and crooked answers; this was what Sir Hercules endeavored to convey by his message; this was what I had so obstinately refused to see, in spite of all my opportunities. Was ever mortal man in such a mess? No wonder the countess was furious and Sir Hercules perplexed. No wonder the Perkeinstein had been laughing at all my sarcasms, and I had taken her laughter for hysterical movements. I would have given anything for any means of escape. If the earth had opened at our feet and swallowed the Countess Wasch-Mugdorff, I would willingly have paid the bills she left behind her. Englishman as I was, I would have sacrificed the liberty of the press and all constitutional forms of government for an immediate Prussian invasion.

None came in answer to my prayers. I saw the grand-duke moving in his chair, adjusting his sword-belt, and feeling for his helmet. He was about to leave after saying all the unpleasant things he could think of, and his departure would be the signal of my immolation. I was beginning to despair of Providence, when help came from an unexpected quarter. At Schweinfett, as in many other German towns, a procession of drummers goes round in the evening, and beats an excruciating tattoo. While I was racking my brains for a means of delivery, this abominable noise struck up under the window, and for once in my life I blessed it instead of cursing. I hit on an expedient at once; I sprang to my feet with a face of terror, and shrieked out, "The Prussian drums!"

Not a soul of the company but knew the old familiar sound; yet alarm is so contagious that not one of them stopped to think; all sprang up and rushed towards the window, and I bolted like a shot through a side doorway. There was fortunately a night train. I did not stop till I got to London. The report I spread of the occupation of Schweinfett by a Prussian army had not that depressing effect upon Consols which was intended.—All the Year Round.

(For the Californian.)

THE DEAD CHILD.

Oh, broken flower!
Now art thou blooming in a heavenly bower,
Twined like a tendril on some saint's pure bosom;
Exquisite blossom!

Oh, wounded bird!
Angels are listening where thy voice is heard,
Free and unfettered soars thy happy wing
In fadeless Spring!

Oh, precious gem!
Of such is Christ's eternal diadem;
Would that its rays a beacon light might be Guiding to thee!

Oh, for the calm
That fills the fold where sleeps the gathered lamb!
Oh, for the pastures green, the valleys sweet
Where rest the little feet!

Oh, for the angel-guide
That bore thee swiftly o'er life's troubled tide!
Oh, to be wafted to Eternity
Like unto thee!

EMILIE LAWSON.

THEATRICALS AT THE EAST.

IN speaking of the Keans, "Ariel," the writer of the Dramatic Feuilleton in the New York Leader, says:

"Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean began their engagement at the Broadway to a medium-sized audience—not near as large as Owens drew at old prices. Although Mr. and Mrs. Kean will not create a furor, they fully vindicate their claims to the leading position on the British stage, and will be warmly received when they return to play their farewell engagement here in the Fall."

He also says that the Herald, Tribune, Times, World and News have done them full justice in every respect, and have been more partial than critical. "Ariel" commends warmly that excellent young actor, Mr. Cathcart.

Wallack reopened with the drama of the Bosom Friends on the 8th, to a good house.

A number of the members of the dramatic profession assembled in the Metropolitan Hotel, New York, on Monday evening, April 17th, to do honor to the memory of our lamented President. John Gilbert was chosen chairman. A resolution was passed to wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

The theatrical profession at Philadelphia met on the 21st of April, to express their feelings relative to the national calamity. Mr. J. B. Roberts presided.

At Baltimore the members of the theatrical profession met on the 17th of April, for the purpose of denouncing the assassin of President Lincoln. Mr. S. O. Dubois was appointed chairman, and resolutions were passed.

The Boston theatres were closed for four nights, commencing on the 15th and ending on the 19th.

The theatres at Chicago were closed till the 20th, and a meeting of the Dramatic Association called. Speeches were made by Mr. J. H. McVicker, Mr. A. B. Brady and others.

The theatres at the East, as a rule, reopened on Wednesday evening, April 26th, after a cessation of operations from the 14th. Barnum's Museum reopened on the 20th, and gave a dramatic performance, judging from the house, this early movement was not approved by the people. The Varieties, following Barnum's example, opened on the 21st.

The Philadelphia theatres reopened on the 24th of April. Mrs. D. P. Bowers commenced an engagement at the new Chestnut Theatre, Philadelphia, April 24th, in Camille, to a crowded house. East Lynne was to be the next production.

At the Arch Theatre, Philadelphia, April 24th, Miss Charlotte Thompson commenced a brief engagement, opening with a play by George Marlowe, called Rich and Poor. The Streets of New York will shortly be revived at this house.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Florence had possession of the Metropolitan Theatre, Indianapolis, April 20th, when two dramas, Born to Good Luck and The Young Actress, were enacted to excellent houses.

Miss Fanny B. Price offered $500 for a new play of five acts in New York. She commenced an engagement at the National Theatre, Cincinnati, on the 22d inst.

The Front street theatre, Baltimore, opened on the 24th of April, with Miss Lotta as "the star," in Uncle Tom's Cabin, Lotta as "Topsy."

Miss Leo Hudson was to have commenced an engagement at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, on the 17th of April, but did not appear until the Thursday following. She was to perform three nights, to be succeeded by Mr. and Mrs. Couldock.

Cotton and Murphy's (staple names as well as articles) minstrels appeared at Music Hall, New Haven, Connecticut, April 22d.

WHAT GOTTSCHALK SAYS.—Gottschalk, the renowned Pianist and Composer, after a careful and thorough examination of Wm. B. Bradbury's New Scale Pianofortes, says:

"I have examined, with great care, Mr. Wm. B. Bradbury's New Scale Pianofortes, and it is my opinion that they are very superior instruments. I have especially remarked their thorough workmanship, and the power, purity, richness and equality of their tone. I recommend, therefore, these instruments to the public in general, and doubt not of their success. L. M. GOTTSCHALK."

OUR lady readers will bear in mind that Taaffe & Co., have recently added to their immense stock a large invoice of silks, poplins, merinos, muslin and mourning goods of the latest styles, which they are now offering at reduced prices.

WE call the attention of our lady readers to Mrs. Read's advertisement in to-day's parpe.

THE DEATH-BED.

BY THOMAS HOOD.

WE watched her breathing through the night,
Her breathing soft and low—
As in her heart the waves of life
Kept heaving to and fro.

So silently we seemed to speak,
So slowly moved about,
As we had lent her half our powers
To eke her living out.

Our very hopes belied our fears,
Our fears our hopes belied:
We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died.

For when the morn came dim and sad,
And chill with early showers,
Her quiet eyelids closed—she had Another morn than ours.

ADVENTURES OF A QUEEN'S MESSENGER.

ONE of my most vivid recollections of Russian adventure relates to a journey, during which I endured some of the most painful, I may say dangerous, hours of my life, owing to my driver being drunk, of which fact I was utterly ignorant when we started from the posthouse. The night was clear, and the moon shone brightly from a cloudless sky: but the weather was intensely cold, in fact, the centre of the road was as hard as a sheet of ice, and, consequently, I travelled rapidly, while on each side of me the snow was many feet deep. I was alone, and had very recently enjoyed a cup of hot tea, to which had been added a dash of cognac; and having lighted my pipe, I jumped into my sledge warm and comfortable—so warm and cosy, in fact, that I soon fell into a sound and undisturbed slumber, to which the smooth and rapid progress of my sledge greatly contributed, when all at once I was aroused from my home dreams by a tremendous crash—to find myself, sledge and horses firmly fixed, indeed half buried, in the snow. To rub my eyes, jump from the carriage, heavily fur-clad as I was, and to plunge up to my thighs in the snow (for there had been a recent thaw, and the snow was soft on the road-sides,) and at the same time to recollect that I was unarmed and alone in the centre of an unfathomable Russian pine forest, at two A. M., with my despatches in the sledge, and no help at hand, was the work of a moment. In the next instant I was startled by a human howl, of such intensity that I verily believe no hungry pack of wolves in the forest could have rivalled it; and at the same time I discovered that my postillion was in fierce combat with one of the tallest and most powerful men I ever beheld, while a dozen other wretches of the same type were howling and screeching and rushing to the scene of action. By the bright light of the moon I was also enabled to observe in the road track before me about a score of sledges heavily laden, each drawn by one small horse, and carrying merchandise; while two lay floundering in the snow on the opposite side of the road, against which we had driven and got the worst of it. All these untoward events occurred in far less time than I have told them. Before I proceed, however, it may be as well to remark that while every word I write is fact, an order did exist, and probably still exists, in Russia, which commands that everything and every person—man and beast—shall make way for those who travel with a "Potaragena," or authority for courier horses, or, in other words, all official persons. But the wretched serf, my postillion, though not too drunk to keep his seat while his little horses kept the road at a gallop, was far too drunk to see the impossibility of passing anything but a flock of crows in the narrow lane between two high banks of snow. Therefore, as I subsequently discovered, although every human effort had been made on his blowing his horn to permit us to pass, it was all in vain. But he was in no state to reason: moreover he probably saw double, which naturally widened the wayside. Thus, driving furiously, he upset the hindermost sledge, at the same time, in Russian fashion, lashing the driver with his whip; but the second shock was too great even for my heavy sledge, and thus we became fixed, horses and carriage, fast in the deep snow. Happily, most happily, reason came to my aid, and a moment's thought sufficed to convince me of the dangerous position in which I found myself, and that discretion surely was far better than valor. It was quite evident that my driver was at fault; and had I attempted to take his part, or made any effort to defend him, my own life as well as the despatches, would have been perilled. Heavily, therefore, as I was clad—observing that blows had already passed between him and the athletic Russian I have named—I made a rush at the former, wrenched the upiifted whip from his hand seized him firmly by the throat, and throwing him backwards on the snow, I broke the whip in two, and stood with outstretched arms calmly before him. Meanwhile, the whole troop of sledge drivers had gathered around us, evidently showering threats and imprecations on our heads, which unpleasant language I happily did not understand; at the same time uttering the most diabolical howls I ever heard before or since. Bitter cold as was the night, the perspiration poured down my forehead, and if I did not experience absolute fear—and it occurs to me that I did—why, I most assuredly uttered an inward prayer for Heaven's protection, feeling that the odds were twenty to one that I should perish like a dog, or be murdered far away from all I loved on earth, in the dense pine solitude. It was by no means a pleasant position in which to find one's self. I do assure you gentlemen who live at home at ease. Indeed, had I ventured, without the aid of a Tom Sayers or two, to strike a blow, or make the slightest effort to defend my drunken friend, then cooling himself in the snow, with the thermometer 29 deg. below zero, the fate of both of us would have been vastly unpleasant, for I never beheld such brutal anger, nay, ferocity, as that which the moonlight permitted me to discover on the dirty faces of the leader and his followers, as by offers of money, attempted smiles, which must have looked like grins, and general affability of demeanor, I endeavore to appease them.

At this moment the postillion rose from his sprawling position on the snow; luckily, I had possessed myself of the whip, for, making a rush at the leaders, he cut their slight cord-traces, and vaulting on to one of the animals' backs, tried to make off, whether to escape for assistance or leave me to my fate I know not: but thought, rapid as lightning, soon told me that if left alone I must perish in the snow, even if I escaped a worse fate. Once more, then, (recollect he was intoxicated, and a lighter man than myself) I threw him on the snow. At this moment how great was my happiness, when a travelling Pole, who spoke German, rode up in the midst of the fray, coming from the direction towards which I was travelling! No glimpse of a distant sail to the wrecked sailor on a raft, no alms to the half-starved beggar, was ever more welcome than the appearance of that bearded Jew. I never look upon the race without thinking of him, and could scarcely refuse to accept a bill, even though it were to be discounted at sixty per cent., were I again to meet him. He immediately came to my aid, and it is to his help, as much as the calm demeanor which Providence permitted me to assume in the hour of danger, that in all probability I am indebted for the privilege of being alive to tell this tale. Suffice it to say that, after considerable parley, great humiliation, and politeness on my part, some forbearance and considerable vociferation on that of my enemies, peace was made, and the leader seemed at length to be convinced that I had had no share in the upsetting of his sledges or their contents, which lay scattered on the snow; and I must do him the justice to admit that when thus convinced, he contented himself with liberal indulgence in savage threats and oaths, which he launched at the head of my driver, but which were to be put into practical execution on some future day. He then called his men together, and, after herculean efforts, they extracted my half-buried sledge and horses from the snow, dragged it past the caravan, and sent me on my way rejoicing.

I have in no manner exaggerated the simple facts of what occurred to me on that never-to-be-forgotten night or rather, early morning. I have, indeed, scarcely told of half my sufferings; though to those accustomed to travel on the pleasant highways and byways of our safe and civilized island it may appear as a dream or a fiction.

Having given half a dozen roubles to the Polish Jew, with which donation he appeared greatly elated, and a dozen or more to the merchant and his serfs—who were immediately as desirous to kiss my feet as they had been previously been eager to break my head—I remounted my sledge, helped the miserable animal in human form, my postillion, to take his place before me, and away we went again as fast as if a pack of wolves had been on our track. In fact, I cared not how fast we went so that we left the horrible forest far behind us, and reached the next posthouse in safety.

Clear of the forest, I returned the broken whip to my driver, and thanking Providence for my safe deliverance, I pursued my way rejoicing.

True, I had still much to fear, for I was literally in a vapor bath. The perspiration streamed from my head to my feet; but I dared not cast aside my heavy furs, for the night was intensely cold, and had I done so I might have been frozen to death—scarcely a pleasant sequel to an escape from murder. However, we happily soon reached the next posthouse, and instead of saying a word in anger, I paid my postillion double the usual donation, doubtless to his great surprise and satisfaction: fresh horses were harnessed speedily to my sledge, my only object being to get forward, and it was evident my new driver had been informed of my liberality, for the little horses actually flew.

I have frequently since thought, in calmer moments, what might have been the sequel had the heavy cudgel of the leader of the caravan chanced to have fallen on the head instead of the shoulder of my postillion. Possibly I should have been robbed, and then left to my fate in that dreary forest to watch over his corpse till daylight returned; or I might have perished myself: or, surviving the perils of the night, might have been denounced as the murderer of my companion. Nor would the accusation have appeared by any means improbable, for ere serfdom ceased in Russia, colonels and even sub-lieutenants in the army and clerks in public officers, were wont at times to hit their imagined inferiors over the head very hardly if aught displeased them, as I shall hereafter demonstrate.

A Russian official travelling, as I was travelling, with dispatches, on his arrival at Petersburg, which city I reached without further mishap, would instantly have reported the whole story most minutely, and perhaps with considerable exaggeration, to his superiors (if he believed he had any) or the authorities; the postillion would probably have been subject to the knout, and then sent for change of air to Siberia, while his wife and family were left to starve at home. For what? For having just swallowed that which many pleasant gentlemen do swallow nightly over a cheerful fireside in a snug arm-chair previously to turning into a four-poster—just one glass of Racci, instead of brandy or gin and water. True, he was very imprudent, and ought to have taken it on his arrival instead of his departure; but sixteen versts on a Russian winter's night on the outside of a sledge might be some excuse for this little indiscretion. Faith, I would myself have given a sovereign for a glass of steaming cognac and water, as I sat perspiring in my sledge. So I forgot and forgave him, in a spirit of Christian forbearance. Yet I fear he would have been considerably licked by a Russian traveller, as a forerunner of the knout to be received from the authorities, without an effort to retaliate, poor wretch! inasmuch as, at the period to which I allude, no Russian traveller of any position considered it necessary to waste words on those who were rarely regarded (though men with hearts to feel, and souls to be saved) otherwise than as mere beasts of burden. Thus, in the mute language of the amiable and aristocratic Russian, a whack over the head from a thick stick simply meant "Drive faster!" or a kick from a thick boot served for the query, "Why did you not stop sooner?" However, English gentlemen and officers of high and low degree are happily brought up in a different manner; consequently, save to my selected friends in the City of the Czar, I never told the tale of that fearful night, the memory of which is not the less engraven on my mind; and all I hope is, that the poor fellow who shared with me those bitter hours in the snow still lives and drives, taking more care as to the time and measure of his potations—though I greatly fear me, or I read badly the face of man, he was marked out for the vengeance of that athletic merchant whose goods and chattels he had scattered on the snow.

In corroboration of the physical liberty, if I may so term it, appropriated to themselves by Russian swells, or such as considered themselves to be important personages in the eyes of their neighbors, I shall here give an anecdote, every word of which is true, though to my English readers it may appear almost an impossible occurrence in a civilized country; nevertheless, I believe all the actors in the little drama still live and travel, and I cannot do better than relate it in the words of one from whose lips I heard it.

Some few years since, a courteous, kind, and talented Russian of high rank held the post of diplomatic minister at Rome. During his sojourn there, which was of some years' duration, he had become acquainted with an artist of considerable celebrity, whose sketches of the environs of Rome, and Rome itself, greatly pleased him. Thus it was that, when about to proceed to Petersburg, the Russian suggested that his friend the artist should accompany him on his leave of absence, and take some Russian views. The artist, who shall be nameless, very willingly accepted the invitation, and doubtless looked forward with pleasurable anticipations to the profits as well as to the change. So, one fine morning, patron and painter left the Pontifical City far behind them, and journeyed on pleasantly towards that of the Czar of all the Russias. Having passed the Niemen, and reached Kovno, the worthy diplomatic prince, or baron, as might be, remarked that in a few versts, which probably meant a hundred—for distance is thus lightly alluded to in Russia—they should arrive at a posthouse, in the neighborhood of which he had a property, to which he would gladly pay a flying visit, "And," he added, "as you must be greatly fatigued, a good night's rest, while I am absent, will be doubtless most acceptable, and refresh your limbs after so many days and nights' confinement in a carriage." "Indeed it will," replied the artist, and thus the matter was decided.

On arriving at the posthouse the worthy postmaster regretted that he had no bed to offer but his own, but that was entirely at his Excellency's or his friend's disposal, as, indeed, were all the house and its contents; and with this assurance the noble diplomatist proceeded on a brief visit to his possessions, and the tired but happy artist was soon sound asleep between the landlord's sheets, dreaming doubtless of the fair lands of Italy and of his good fortune. While the postmaster, who was gladdened by the knowledge that he would receive no end of roubles for his courtesy, and who was "in physic," as they say, having imbibed a dose of castor oil, wrapped himself up warmly and stretched himself on the top of a warm stove in an outhouse—a Russian custom—and was soon as sound asleep as the artist. The night was one of those Northern nights when no traveller is desirous of being long detained for the change of horses; and a Russian colonel is by no means the most patient man in the world under such circumstances.

However, it unfortunately occurred that an officer of some rank, with his stars and ribbons, was on the road that night, and about two A. M. halted at the posthouse, and angrily called for fresh horses, as well as for the presence of the postmaster. Twenty minutes having elapsed without the appearance of either, he at length jumped from his carriage, and furiously entered the house.

"Where are the horses? and where is the postmaster?" cried the enraged soldier, addressing a miserable serf who stood trembling in the doorway; who assured the traveller that horses would soon be forthcoming, and that he had roused the postillions, but his master he could not find.

"Not find him? not find the wretch?" exclaimed the furious colonel. "Where is he gone? which is his room? show it to me immediately."

"This is his room, Excellency," said the trembling serf, opening a door at hand.

"This is his room, is it? I will teach him that this is not the manner to treat an officer of the imperial army. Here, you pig, bring me a light."

A light being brought, the offended traveller beheld, as he imagined, the postmaster in calm repose while he was kept waiting for his horses.

Without a moment's hesitation he rushed to the bedside, and seeing, as he believed, the unfortunate postmaster snug in bed, dragged him therefrom by the neck, and, ere he had discovered his error, immediately chastised the poor artist, as he stood in his shirt, with a heavy whip, notwithstanding his cries and shrieks, and diavolos, maledítos, struggles, vociferations in his native language. In the midst of this cruel and unmanly assault the postmaster entered the room, with terror depicted on his countenance, and offered every possible apology, stating that his absence was caused by severe indisposition, together with the fact of his having given up his bed to the traveller, and removed his own quarters to an outhouse.

Whether his apologies were accepted by the infuriated brute who disgraced the uniform he wore, or not, I never heard. Suffice it to say that this model officer and gentleman departed on his way, possibly rather elated than otherwise at having cruelly belabored an unoffending foreign traveller.

The feelings of the minister, however, were of a very different nature when he returned to the posthouse, and found his poor suffering, belabored friend writhing under the combined effects of pain, anger, and humiliation. No assurances on his part, however, that he would bring matters before the Emperor, in the hope of putting an end to such cruel proceedings; no entreaties that the artist would accompany him to Petersburg, where he might obtain redress, and procure medical advice, would avail. Not a yard further would the belabored traveller proceed.

"No, indeed, no," he protested; "had I known that you were bringing me from the Eternal City to this infernal den of savages, never would I have left fair Italy. I fully acquit your Excellency of any knowledge that the Emperor of Russia permitted his uniform to be worn by men such as he who has so cruellly assaulted me; but I have seen quite enough of the Czar's dominions, and I have no desire to learn more either of the country or its inhabitants; and thus they parted.

This little incident is only one among hundreds of a similar nature which daily occurred on Russian highways. Happily, under the present sovereign, civilization marches with giant strides.

The True Gentleman.—He is above a mean thing. He invades no secrets in the keeping of another. He betrays no secret confided to his keeping. He takes selfish advantage of no man's mistakes. He uses no ignoble weapons in controversy. He never stabs in the dark. He is not one thing to a man's face and another behind his back. If by accident he comes into possession of his neighbor's counsels, he passes upon them an act of instant oblivion. He bears sealed packages without tampering with the wax. Papers not meant for his eye, whether they flutter in at his window or lie open before him in unguarded exposure, are sacred. He possesses no privacies of others, however the sentry sleeps. Bolts and bars, locks and keys, hedges and pickets, bonds and securities, notices to trespassers, are none of them for him. He may be trusted, himself out of sight—near the thinnest partition—anywhere. He buys no office, he sells none, he intrigues for none. He would rather fail of his rights than win them through dishonor. He will eat honest bread. He tramples on no sensitive feeling. He insults no man. If he have rebuke for another, he is straightforward, open and manly. He connot descend to scurrility. Billingsgate slang does not lie in his track. From all profane and wanton words his lips are chaste. Of a woman, and to her, he speaks with decency and respect. In short, whatever he judges honorable he practices toward every man.

At a dinner party in France a toast was given, "The land we live in." "With all my soul," responded an Irishman, "here's to poor ould Ireland!"

EXTRACTS FROM EMERSON.

COMPENSATION.

HUMAN labor, through all its forms, from the sharpening of a stake to the construction of a city or an epic, is one immense illustration of the perfect compensation of the universe. The absolute balance of Give and Take, the doctrine that everything has its price—and if that price is not paid, not that thing but something else is obtained, and that it is impossible to get anything without its price—is not less sublime in the columns of a ledger than in the budgets of states, in the laws of light and darkness, in all the action and reaction of nature. I cannot doubt that the high laws which each each man sees implicated in those processes with which he is conversant, the stern ethics which sparkle on his chisel-edge, which are measured out by his plumb and foot-rule, which stand as manifest in the footing of the shop-bill as in the history of a state—do recommend to him his trade, and though seldom named, exalt his business to his imagination.

The league between virtue and nature engages all things to assume a hostile front to vice. The beautiful laws and substances of the world persecute and whip the traitor. He finds that things are arranged for truth and benefit, but there is no den in the wide world to hide a rogue. Commit a crime, and the earth is made of glass. Commit a crime, and it seems as if a coat of snow fell on the ground, such as reveals in the woods the track of every partridge and fox and squirrel and mole. You cannot recall the spoken word, you cannot wipe out the foot-track, you cannot draw up the ladder, so as to leave no inlet or clew. Some damning circumstance always transpires. The laws and substances of nature—water, snow, wind, gravitation—become penalties to the thief.

On the other hand, the law holds with equal sureness for all right action. Love, and you shall be loved. All love is mathematically just, as much as the two sides of an algebraic equation. The good man has absolute good, which like fire turns everything to its own nature, so that you cannot do him any harm; but as the royal armies sent against Napoleon, when he approached, cast down their colors and from enemies became friends, so disasters of all kinds, as sickness, offence, poverty, prove benefactors:

> "Winds blow and waters roll
> Strength to the brave, and power and deity,
> Yet in themselves are nothing."

The good are befriended even by weakness and defect. As no man had ever a point of pride that was not injurious to him, so no man had ever a defect that was not somewhere made useful to him. The stag in the fable admired his horns and blamed his feet, but when the hunter came his feet saved him, and afterwards, caught in the thicket, his horns destroyed him. Every man in his lifetime needs to thank his faults. As no man thoroughly understands a truth until he has contended against it, so no man has a thorough acquaintance with the hindrances or talents of men, until he has suffered from the one, and seen the triumph of the other over his own want of the same. Has he a defect of temper that unfits him to live in society? Thereby he is driven to entertain himself alone, and acquire habits of self help; and thus, like the wounded oyster, he mends his shell with pearl.

LOVE.

Every promise of the soul has innumerable fulfilments; each of its joys ripens into a new want. Nature, uncontainable, flowing, forelooking, in the first sentiment of kindness anticipates already a benevolence which shall lose all particular regards in its general light. The introduction to this felicity is in a private and tender relation of one to one, which is the enchantment of human life; which, like a certain divine rage and enthusiasm, seizes on man at one period, and works a revolution in his mind and body; unites him to his race, pledges him to the domestic and civic relations, carries him with new sympathy into nature, enhances the power of the senses, opens the imagination, adds to his character heroic and sacred attributes, establishes marriage, and gives permanence to human society.

The natural association of the sentiment of love with the heyday of the blood seems to require that, in order to portray it in vivid tints, which every youth and maid should confess to be true to their throbbing experience, one must not be too old. The delicious fancies of youth reject the least savor of a mature philosophy, as chilling with age and pedantry their purple bloom. And, therefore, I know I incur the imputation of unnecessary hardness and stoicism from those who compose the Court and Parliament of Love. But from these formidable censors I shall appeal to my seniors. For it is to be considered that this passion of which we speak, though it begin with the young, yet forsakes not the old, or rather suffers no one who is truly its servant to grow old, but makes the aged participators of it not less than the tender maiden, though in a different and nobler sort. For it is a fire that, kindling its first embers in the narrow nook of a private bosom, caught from a wandering spark out of another private heart glows and enlarges until it warms and beams upon multitudes of men and women, upon the universal heart of all, and so lights up the whole world and all nature with its generous flames. It matters not, therefore, whether we attempt to describe the passion at twenty, at thirty, or at eighty years. He who paints it at the first period will lose some of its later; he who paints it at the last, some of its earlier traits. Only it is to be hoped that, by patience and the Muses' aid, we may attain to that inward view of the law which shall describe a truth ever young and beautiful, so central that it shall commend itself to the eye, at whatever angle beholden.

And the first condition is, that we must leave a too close and lingering adherence to facts, and study the sentiment as it appeared in hope and not in history. For each man sees his own life defaced and disfigured, as the life of man is not, to his imagination. Each man sees over his own experience a certain stain of error, whilst that of other men looks fair and ideal. Let any man go back to those delicious relations which made the beauty of his life, which have given him sincerest instruction and nourishment, he will shrink and moan. Alas! I know not why, but infinite compunctions embitter in mature life the remembrances of budding joy, and cover every beloved name. Everything is beautiful seen from the point of the intellect, or as truth. But all is sour, if seen as experience. Details are melancholy; the plan is seemly and noble. In the actual world—the painful kingdom of time and place—dwell care, and canker, and fear. With thought, with the ideal, is immortal hilarity, the rose of joy. Round it all the Muses sing. But grief cleaves to names, and persons, and the partial interests of to day and yesterday.

The strong bent of nature is seen in the proportion which this topic of personal relations usurps in the conversation of society. What do we wish to know of any worthy person so much as how he has sped in the history of this sentiment? What books in the circulating libraries circulate? How we glow over these novels of passion, when the story is told with any spark of truth and nature! And what fastens attention, in the intercourse of life, like any passage betraying affection between two parties? Perhaps we never saw them before, and never shall meet them again. But we see them exchange a glance, or betray a deep emotion, and are no longer strangers. We understand them, and take the warmest interest in the development of the romance. All mankind love a lover. The earliest demonstrations of complacency and kindness are nature's most winning pictures. It is the dawn of civility and grace in the coarse and rustic. The rude village boy teases the girls about the school-house door; but to-day he comes running into the entry, and meets one fair child disposing her satchel; he holds her books to help her, and instantly it seems to him as if she removed herself from him infinitely, and was a sacred precinct. Among the throng of girls he runs rudely enough, but alone distances him; and these two little neighbors, that were so close just now, have learned to respect each other's personality. Or who can avert his eyes from the engaging, half-artful, half-artless ways of school-girls who go into the country shops to buy a skein of silk or a sheet of paper, and talk half an hour about nothing with the broad faced, good-natured shop-boy. In the village they are on a perfect equality, which love delights in, and without any coquetry the happy, affectionate nature of woman flows out in this pretty gossip. The girls may have little beauty, yet plainly do they establish between them and the good boy the most agreeable, confiding relations, what with their fun and their earnest, about Edgar, and Jonas, and Almira, and who was invited to the party, and who danced at the dancing-school, and when the singing-school would begin, and other nothings concerning which the parties cooed. By and by that boy wants a wife; and very truly and heartily will he know where to find a sincere and sweet mate, without any risk such as Milton deplores as incident to scholars and great men.

SPIRITUAL LAWS.

Nature will not have us fret and fume. She does not like our benevolence or our learning much better than she likes our frauds and wars. When we come out of the caucus, or the bank, or the Abolition-convention, or the Temperance-meeting, or the Transcendental club, into the fields and woods, she says to us, "So hot? my little sir."

We are full of mechanical actions. We must needs intermeddle, and have things in our own way, until the sacrifices and virtues of society are odious. Love should make joy; but our benevolence is unhappy. Our Sunday-schools, and churches, and panper societies are yokes to the neck. We pain ourselves to please nobody. There are natural ways of arriving at the same ends at which these aim, but do not arrive. Why should all give dollars? It is very inconvenient to us country folk, and we do not think any good will come of it. We have not dollars: merchants have; let them give them. Farmers will give corn; poets will sing; women will sew; laborers will lend a hand; the children will bring flowers. And why drag this dead weight of a Sunday-school over the whole Christendom? It is natural and beautiful that childhood should inquire, and maturity should teach; but it is time enough to answer questions when they are asked. Do not shut up the young people against their will in a pew, and force the children to ask them questions for an hour against their will.

NOTICE

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1865.

POPULAR SOUTHERN DELUSIONS.

IT is said that when Davis and his party read the proclamation of President Johnson, offering a reward for their capture, they burst into tears. The petticoat episode had already prepared the world for any womanish exhibition on their part, but a truer theory of this sudden and humiliating outburst, is found in the further statement that they expected banishment would be their greatest punishment. The proclamation was a sudden and significant blow to their hopes. Whether they were guilty or not of complicity with Lincoln's assassination, there was something terribly in earnest in this manifesto, which these politicians, bred to a contemptible estimate of the powers of a republican government, and of the spirit of the North, never contemplated. It was the last and most bitter awakening from a series of popular delusions in which the South have for half a century implicitly trusted. Lawless, self-willed and arrogant, governed by a code of ethics of which fillibustering, repudiation and lynching were the natural fruits, we have no doubt that they sincerely believed that they could wage war against the Government, and be subject only to the mortification of a defeat without personal responsibility. The Government seemed to them an institution as fickle and lawless as themselves; they could dissolve their union with it as easily as they could bolt from a political convention; they could carry measures thereiu by fraud or bullying as readily as they could govern a primary election. The idea of there being an eternal principle behind this abused polity, or that it had accumulated a tremendous conservative force through long years of trial, was something they never dreamed of; and their awakening to the truth has been gradual, and only through long suffering and humiliation. One by one they have been obliged to resign their popular fallacies. One by one they have given up those beliefs in their own superiority which the North for so long had half-generously, half-meanly yielded to them. They believed in their martial excellence and they have been out-generaled. They believed in their political pre-eminence and they have been out-statesmaned. They trusted in their financial superiority, and saw their currency depreciate in their own hands, while cotton, the capital that it represeuted, fell iuto the hauds of their enemies. They believed that Europe would interfere for the sake of this precious commodity, and they were cruelly disappointed. They believed that their slaves would fight for them, and have lived to see them guiding the Union armies. They believed that massacres and barbarity would check negro enlistments—and found ten regiments where there had been one. They believed in a division of the North, and lived to see it become "Abolitionized," and to return by an overwhelming majority the objectionable Chief Magistrate. They believed that the assassination of this man would paralyze the North and overthrow the Government. They have lived to see it more firmly strengthened, to find their friends discomfited, and the sympathy of the whole civilized world alienated from their cause. They believed that stratagem and flight would save them, and covered themselves with derision and ridicule. Is it any wonder that we find them, at this last moment, believing that a mild admonition and dismissal from the country is all the punishment which an indignant and betrayed Government can possibly extend to the traitor and assassin, and bursting into tears at the cruel disappointment. Believing still in their political sagacity, they have offered remedies by which the wounded commonwealth is to be healed. They might excite our laughter at these blunders but for our disgust at their treachery; we could feel pity for their ignorance but for indiguation at their crime.

THE SHERMAN GUARD will give their First Anniversary Ball on the evening of June 18th. The social status of the members of this company warrants us in saying that their festival will be one of the most pleasant reunions of the season. So, ladies, "Atteution!" and "Dress up!" as they say in the ranks.

THE San Francisco Amateurs' first dramatic entertainment on Thursday evening last, was a success, and a favorable augury for those which are to follow. We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation.

BLOT.

MONSIEUR BLOT's Cooking Academy in New York seems to have been a decided success. First families have sent their daughters to him to learn how to cook. Uppertendom has besieged his doors for tuition in culinary mysteries. The carriages of Petroleum and Shoddy have blocked up the street. At first it would seem that for once it had become fashionable for ladies to acquire useful knowledge; that ornament had giveu way to utility; that music, Italian, French and embroidery had giveu precedence to domestic skill and virtues. Alas, M. Blot teaches only fashionable cookery! His system requires a pleutiful larder, a full purse, and the latest style of a range. He does not tell how Love in a cottage may make tough mutton edible, (except figuratively,) nor how long a cold knuckle of ham may be made attractive.

Yet we can readily imagine how M. Blot opens a delightful vista to those young girls who have been prevented through circumstances or natural incapacity from acquiring merely ornamental accomplishments. Angelina, whose voice is somewhat thin, and whose execution is imperfect, may nevertheless excel in au omelet souffle. Maria, who does not dance gracefully, may attain eminence for her bouillon. The pate de fois gras of Sophronia may atone for her deficiencies in French. And what will be the result of these new accomplishments. Millionaires, bankers, and indeed all eligible partis, are mainly accessible through the stomach; it is only your poets, romancers, visionary and shiftless fellows, who are not, and such are not worth catching. Many men who are insensible to the charms of beauty and esprit, who take up a book when a piano is opened, can be led captive by an enticing dish. The girls who have worked profitless slippers, who have danced vainly at evening parties, or have patiently sat as wall-flowers, need no longer despair. Educated by the artful Blot, they find solace in the composition of some dish by which they revenge themselves for former slights. The lukewarm suitor is invited to dinner; Cupid's deadliest shaft lurks beneath the dish cover. He partakes, he demands explanation; he is told "it is Maria's"! Can anybody doubt what is the post-prandial sequel to this, or to what lengths a man might not go toward a proposal under the influence of a perfect digestion and French cooking?

We have been betrayed by a pardonable enthusiasm, perhaps, a little away from the original intention of this article, and are content to leave the suppositious incident sketched in the last paragraph in the hands of some future novelist, who will add this new charm to the list of his heroine's accomplishments, who is of course to appear in the opening chapter as superintending a pate over the kitchen fire, instead of the conventional situations at the piano or easel. Our purpose was to urge M. Blot to come to this country or to send one of his professors to open a Cooking Academy for California Young Ladies. As the tastes of the community are peculiar, mere graduates of the New York Academy will not suit. The subject must be studied here, under proper rules and regulations. If we are obliged to trust to Gazlay to take care of our literature in the East with his Pacific Monthly, let us, in Heaven's name, be independent in regard to our dinners, and order them at home.

We could recount many reasons for a Californian Cooking Academy. We are all proverbially good eaters. In no other country are the pleasures of the table as generously or as generally indulged. Nature has bountifully furnished us with material, but in the manner of using it, as in other things, we are vastly behind older civilization. The country that has produced six epicureau varieties of fish, has as yet provided no method of properly cooking them. We confess with shame that steaks are still openly fried, in the interior, and shudder to think of M. Blot in connection with the esculent bean and crisp bacon of the mining regions. But with a Cooking Academy, what a change might be ours. With our wives and daughters educated under the teachings of Blot, perhaps this country is destined to be again saved by the influence of tender woman. Who knows but that the coarseness and profanity of the miner's cabin will disappear, with his black coffee, his yellow salaratus bread and his indigestible bacon. Milder and more refined communities may spring from the ruins of broken and discarded frying-pans. Purer customs and gentler courtesies will come in with anchovy and claret sauces. Domestic felicity will be strengthened and increased; the fatal freedom of California society will be checked, and the sphere of woman will be removed from the hotel parlor and public street to the private kitchen. Husbands will not seek in restaurants the pleasures which their own tables will afford them. By all means let us have Blot!

A "SNARE FOR THE FEET OF THE WICKED."—Details of the assassination prove that Booth's leg was broken in his fall on the stage, which was effected by the folds of the national flag catching his spur as he leaped from the box. It would seem as if at the moment when human will was paralyzed by the suddenness of the calamity, the symbol of the Nation resented the insult, and casting the traitor at its feet inflicted that injury which hastened his capture.

CALIFORNIA CONCEITS.

COMMUNITIES, like individuals, when isolated and forced to occupy an independent position are apt to become self-saturated. The little country village that lies away from the railroad or highway, whose postal facilities are limited, very often acquires a morbid sensitiveness and an undue self-consciousness. The townspeople naturally seek out each other when abroad, and are apt to discuss and compare the great world outside from their village viewpoint. We see something of this tendency in our own young State. Separated by miles of ocean and desert from the older civilizations, California is in danger of becoming too Californian. That sentiment which the injudicious and generous praise of transient visitors has kindled is continually fanned by the fulsome and persistent puffery of the local press. We have laid claim to most of the honors and nearly all of the generals of the war. The pioneers of the country are glorified in daily paragraphs; the movements of Californians abroad are duly chronicled to the minutest details by Eastern correspondents, and reported to California readers. We are obliged to hear how Mr. Smith of Dogtown looked on Broadway, or we are expected to be struck dumb with the astounding intelligence that Judge Jones of Jonesville is stopping at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. When any of these distinguished gentlemen return, a flourish of newspaper trumpets announces the gratifying intelligence. We are not told in as many words, but it is dimly suggested by this same medium that the Atlantic States and Europe have been honored by their visits. If there be a momentary cessation of the compliments which we have so generously received from our Eastern brethren, we are led to suppose that they are growing envious of us. If they differ from us in opinion, it is because they don't understand us. Our Senator brow-beats Congress; our newspaper correspondents have dictated to the Administration.

And what is the result of this prodigious egotism. Mr. Smith projects a visit home. He is followed to his ship by admiring acquaintances, and the usual local paragraph about our respected friend visiting the scenes of his youth, is published the morning of his departure. Mr. S., with his two or three hundred fellow-passengers, arrive in New York. No paragraphist announces their arrival, their identity is instantly swamped in the circling vortex of a million men. They are jostled every day by thousands as wise, as rich, as polite as themselves. Very soon the novelty of their outward habits and opinions is worn away, and the great human waves of the metropolis roll over them as unceremoniously as over the indistinctive pebbles in the beach. They are disappointed and disgusted, and return here perhaps sooner than they intended, to point another patriotic moral for the paragraphist. No doubt that immigration and emigration will in time do away with this foolish sentiment, and the original cosmopolitan character of our people will check the spreading of such mischievous principles, but in the meantime we must only deplore the ignorance and folly that persists in this systematic self laudation.

A COURTEOUS ENGLISHMAN.—The publishers of Littell's Living Age have received a letter from one of the Southern Aid Society in England, acknowledging a receipt of the Narrative of Privations and Sufferings of United States Officers and Soldiers, while Prisoners of War in the hands of the Rebel Authorities, in the following words:

Cross Hill, Feb. 2, 1865.

GENTLEMEN:—I have received a pamphlet printed by you, which cost me 8*d*. Whatever the sufferings of the Federal officers and privates may be, they deserved it all, and ten times more, for fighting in such an unholy and uncalled-for war. The Confederate States had as much right to secede as the United States had to declare themselves independent of England. It is absolute nonsense to affirm that the Federals are fighting to abolish slavery. The Federal Officers and Soldiers have made war on the Confederates, and their wives and children, more like Goths, and Vandals, and Savages, than civilized beings. They have committed murders and other atrocities, and destroyed private property in a way unheard of in modern times, and not sanctioned by the laws of warfare. I hope the just vengeance of Heaven will shortly overtaken a country tainted with so many crimes, and that those who you call "Rebels," but whom I consider among the most noble, heroic, and unselfish nations of ancient or modern times, may obtain their just rights, and establish their independence.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,
C. F. CLARKE.

THE CALIFORNIAN, to-day, enters the second year of its existence. The fact that it has lived thus long—that it has passed through a period usually the most critical in the life of a journal—without having to abandon any of its claims to literary superiority, or without forfeiting its self-respect, is the highest compliment that can be paid to the paper and its patrons, and the securest promise that can be made for its success in the future.

THE leaders of the Mexican colonization enterprise were arrested on Thursday, for an alleged attempt to seize the steamer Colon, for the purpose of converting her into a privateer.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

THE first performance of Norma by Maguire's opera troupe was given to a very enthusiastic audience on Saturday evening last. The opera was well presented, although the role of "Norma" required more force than the prima donna was able to give it. Miss Phillips' "Adelgisa" was excellently sung and acted. On Monday night Trovatore was capitally rendered. It was one of the best performances of the season—certainly the best performance of this particular opera vouchsafed to Californians for many years. Il Ballo in Maschera was given for the first time in California on Thursday night. For a first performance the opera went off very smoothly. The music is graceful and spirited, very Verdi-ish, with one or two striking and original airs. The page's song exquisitely sung by Miss Phillips, a duet between "Ricardo" (Sbriglia) and "Amelia," (Sconcia) and the waltz in the last scene were the most marked features, and provoked hearty applause. The new basso did not appear to very fair advantage. The opera was finely placed upon the stage; the properties were liberal; the costumes were rich and elegant. We cannot praise the choruses of this troupe too highly, not merely for their artistic ability, but for the rapidity with which they acquire the music of new operas, with so few rehearsals. The opera is to be repeated to-night.

At the Metropolitan, Faust, by the Bianchi troupe, drew large audiences on Friday and Saturday of last week. People are beginning to show a better appreciation of Gounod's delicious music; the moresimple and quiet portions of the opera are applauded. The tenderly beautiful spinning song, "The King of Thule," the jewel song, the flower song, and all of the exquisite introductiou, are steadily growing in favor. Brambilla's conception of "Marguerite" was excellent; Norma was given on Mouday evening. Brambilla sings artistic taste and judgment.

Gottschalk's concerts and matinées during the past week have not drawn very large audiences, in spite of some new features of the programmes. Nevertheless, those who did hear him seemed to appreciate thoroughly his inimitable skill and genius. A Presto from Beethoven's Grand Sonata (opus 47) for piano and violiu, a fantasia on the corno di bassetto. by Mr. Drescher, and some paraphrases on Faust by Gottschalk were the uew and interesting selections. Miss Lucy Simons and Mr. Leach were the vocalists. On Friday evening Mr. Gottschalk gave his last evening concert, and last performance but one, previous to his trip in the interior. The grand marches in Faust and Tannhauser, arranged for six pianos by Mr. Gottschalk, and played by Messrs. Kuehne, G. Scott, R. Schumacher, L. Schmidt, Muzio and Gottschalk, were the great attractions. A "Grand Gala Family Matinee" is given this afternoon.

(For the Californian.)

HOW I WENT TO THE GREAT RACE BETWEEN LODI AND NORFOLK.

THERE can be no use in my writing any account whatever of the great race, because that matter has already been atteuded to in the daily papers. Therefore, I will simply describe to you how I went to the race. But before I begin, I would like to tell you about Homestead—Benj. W. Homestead, of the Incidental Hotel. [I do not wish to be too severe, though, and so I use fictitious names, to prevent your finding out who it is I refer to, and where his place of business is.]

It will ease my mind to tell you about him. You know Homestead, clerk at the Incideutal Hotel, and you know he has the reputation of being chatty, and sociable, and accommodating—a man, in fact, eminently fitted to make a guest feel more at home in the hotel thau in his own house with his own wife, and his own mother, and his wife's mother, and her various friends and relatives, and all the other little comforts that go to make married life a blessing, and create what is known as "Sweet Home," and which is so deservedly popular—I mean among people who have not tried it. You know Homestead as that kind of a man. Therefore, you would not suppose that attractive exterior of his, and that smiling visage, and that seductive tongue capable of dark and mysterious crimes.

Very well, I will ask you to listen to a plain, unprejudiced statement of facts:

On or about the 21st of the pretent month, it became apparent to me that the forthcoming race between Norfolk and Lodi was awakening extraordinary atteution all over the Pacific coast, aud even far away in the Atlantic States. I saw that if I failed to see this race I might live a century, perhaps, without ever having an opportunity to see its equal. I went at once to a livery stable—the man said his teams had all been engaged a week before I called. I got the same answer at all the other livery stables, except one. They told me there that they had a nice dray, almost new, and a part of a horse—they said part of a horse because a good deal of him was gone, in the way of a tail, and one ear and a portion of the other, aud his upper lip, and one eye; and, inasmuch as his teeth were exposed, and he had a villainous cast in his remaining eye, these defects, added to his damaged ears and departed tail, gave him an extremely "gallus" and unprepossessing aspect—but they only asked two hundred aud forty dollars for the turn-out for the day.

I resisted the yearuing I felt to hire this unique establishment.

Then they said they had a capacious riding-horse left, but all the seats on him except one had been engaged; they said he was an unusually long horse, and he could seat seven very comfortably; and that he was very gentle, and would not kick up behind; and that one of the choicest places on him for observation was still vacant, and I could have it for nineteen dollars—and so on and so on; and while the passenger agent was talking, he was busy measuring off a space of nine inches for me pretty high up on the commodious animal's neck.

It seemed to me that the prospect of going to the races was beginning to assume a very "neck-or-nothiug" condition, but nevertheless I steadfastly refused the supercargo's offer, and he sold the vacancy to a politician who was used to being on the fence and would naturally consider a seat astride a horse's neck in the light of a pleasant variety.

I then walked thoughtfully down to the Incidental, turning over in my mind various impossible expedieuts for getting out to the Ocean Race-Course. I thought of the horse-cars and the steam-cars, but without relief, for neither of these conveyances could carry me within four miles of the place. At the hotel I met the abandoned Homestead, and as uearly as I can recollect, the following conversation ensued:

"Ah, Mark, you're the very man I was looking for. Take a drink?"

I cannot be positive, but it is my impression that I either stated that I would, or else signified assent by a scarcely perceptible eagerness of manner common to me under circumstances of this nature.

While we were drinking, Homestead remarked, with considerable vivacity:

"Yes, I was just looking for you. I am goiug out to the great race on Tuesday, and I've a vacancy and want company. I'd like to have you go along with me if you will."

I set my glass dowu with a suddenness and decision unusual with me on such occasions, and seiziug his hand, I wrung it with heartfelt warmth and cordiality. It is humiliating to me to reflect, now, that at that moment I even shed some tears of gratitude, and felt them coursing down the backbone of my nose and dripping from the end of it.

Never mind the remainder of the conversation—suffice it that I was charged to be at the Incidental punctually at ten o'clock ou Tuesday morning, and that I promised to do so.

Well, at the appointed time, I was there. That is, I was as near as I could get—I was on the outskirts of a crowd that occupied all the pavement outside and filled the office inside. Youug Smith, of Buncombe and Brimstone, approached me with an air of superiority, aud remarked lauguidly that he guessed he would go to the races. He dropped his airs, though, very suddenly, and came dowu to my level when I told him I was going to the races also. He said he thought all the conveyances in town had been secured a week ago. I assumed a crushing demeanor of wealthy indifference, and remarked, rather patronizingly, that I had seen greater races—in Europe and other places—and did not care about seeing this one, but theu Homestead had insisted so on my going with him that—

"The very devil!" says young Smith, "give us your hand! we're compangyongs dew vo-yaj!" (he affects the French, does young Smith,)—"I'm going with Homestead, too, my boy!"

We grew cordial in a moment, and went around, arm-in-arm, patroniziug the balance of the crowd. But somehow, every man we accosted silenced our batteries as I had silenced young Smith's in the first place—they were all going with Homestead. I tell you candidly, and in all seriousness, that when I came to find out that there were a hundred and fifty men there, all going to the races, and all going with Homestead, I began to think it was—was—singular, at the very least, not to say exceedingly strange.

But I am tired of this infamous subject—I am tired of this disgraceful narrative, and I shall not finish it.

However, as I have gone this far, I wil l quote from a conversation that occurred in front of the hotel at ten o'clock. The degraded Homestead stepped out at the door, and bowed, and smiled his hated smile, and said, blandly:

"Ah, you are all here, I see. I am glad you are so punctual, for there is nothing that worries me so much when I am going on a little trip like this for recreation, as to be delayed. Well, boys, time presses—let's make a start."

"I guess we're all ready, Mr. Homestead," said one gentleman, "but—but how are you going?"

The depraved Homestead smiled, as if he were going to say something very smart, and then, "Oh," says he, "I'M GOING TO WALK!"

I have made a plain, simple statement of the facts connected with this outrage, and they can be snbstantiated by every man who was present upon that occasion. I will uow drop this subject forever.

MARK TWAIN.

THEATRICAL TALK.

THE Babes in the Wood held possession of the stage at Maguire's Opera House during the early part of the week, and crowded the house every night. This a capital play and it was admirably acted. Mr. Dan Setchell, as "Mr. Beetle," of course kept the audience laughing during the whole time he was on the stage. Mrs. Saunders as "the female Beetle" was wouderfully funny. The "babes," "Frank" and "Blanche Rushton," were very well represented by Mr. Frank Mayo and Mrs. Sophie Edwin, and quite enlisted the sympathies of the audience. Mr. Aldrich's "Lord Lazenby," was a fine piece of actiug, this clever actor displaying his versatility by playing the part of a good old man as skilfully as he does that of a villain.

On Thursday night the Washington Hose Company No. 1 took a benefit. The house was crammed full, of course, but this is now the rule. Mr. Dan Setchell delighted all present by his famous impersonation of "Captain Cuttle" in Dombey and Son. Last night the management managed to squeeze in a new farce for the benefit of those who go every night to see Mr. Dan Setchell and like to see him in something new. The richly humorous character of "Guy Goodluck," in John Jones, was received with no less favor than Mr. Setchell's other impersonations. John Jones was sandwiched between Ici on parle Francais and 1000 Milliners Wanted. which pieces huudreds who had seen them wished to see again. Do You Know Jones? is to be put on shortly and the night following John Jones will be played, so that everybody may become acquainted with "Jones." Those who don't know Jones should by all means go and see John Jones. This afternoou the Babes in the Wood will be played for the benefit of the children in San Francisco, and those who go early enough to get a seat will see the funniest "Beetle" they ever saw in their lives. To-night Mr. Dan Setchell will appear in three pieces, namely: Rough Diamond, John Jones aud the Kiss in the Dark, and will, no doubt, if pressed to do so, speak a piece.

Just as soon as people get a little tired of old pieces, which from present appearances will not be as long as Mr. Dan Setchell plays in them, Mr. Maguire intends to produce novelties of home mauufacture in the shape of productions of our local dramatists. He has several accepted plays in his hands, awaiting a lull in the storm which is now breaking in "showers of applause," (as the Alta critic says,) thunders of approbation, and "torrents of approbation," (as another says,) on the head of the reigning favorite, Mr. Dan Setchell. First, by right of seniority, stands Enoch Arden, by the author of Assessments. etc. The next in order, as received, is, I think, The Silver Cord, a dramatization of Shirley Brookes' novel of that name, by a gentleman long connected with the city press. If his play is as good as some poetry he has written, it is bound to be an immense success, and I rather fancy it will. Last because written last, not because least, is a play entitled The Palmetto, or The Depth of Woman's Heart, a sensation drama by the gentleman whose last work of that kind, The Magnolia, or Angel of the Swamp, had such a highly successful run. In the event of a foreign war and non-intercourse with England and France, our theatre can go ahead the same as usual. California can not only produce big squashes and pumpkins, but dramas enough without going abroad for them. Our home manufactured plays are going to turn out some pumpkins, or a great error of judgment is made by

TOUCHSTONE.

A correspondent of THE CALIFORNIAN, whose style its readers will probably recognize, sends us the following:

A VOICE FOR SETCHELL.

My voice is for Setchell. What with a long season of sensational, snuffling dramatic bosh, and tragedy bosh, and electioneering bosh, and a painful depression in stocks that was anything but bosh, the people were settling down into a fatal melancholy, and growing prematurely old—succumbing to imaginary miseries and learning to wear the habit of unhappiness like a garment—when Captain Cuttle Setchell appeared in the midst of the gloom, and broke the deadly charm with a wave of his enchanted hook and the spell of his talismanic words, "Awahs! awahs! awahs!" And since that night all the powers of dreariness combined have not been able to expel the spirit of cheerfulness he invoked. Therefore, my voice is still for Setchell. I have experienced more real pleasure, and more physical benefit, from laughing naturally and unconfinedly at his funny personations and extempore speeches than I have from all the operas and tragedies I have endured, and all the blue mass pills I have swallowed in six months. As a comedian, this man is the best the coast has seen, and is above criticism; and therefore one feels at liberty to laugh at any effort of his which seems funny, without stopping to undergo that demoralizing process of first considering whether some other great comedian, somewhere else, hasn't done the same thing a shade funnier, some time or other, years ago.

Mr. Setchell has established his reputation here, and a powerful verdict has been rendered in his favor. All who have seen good acting, and know what they are doing, endorse this verdict. True, I have heard one man say he was not as good as Burton in "Captain Cuttle," and another that he had seen better actors in A Regular Fix, but then I attached no great importance to the opinions of these critics, because the first named (judging by the date of Burton's death) could not have been above thirteen years of age when that renowned actor appeared for the last time upon any earthly stage, and the other was reared and educated in Little Rock, Arkansas, and therefore has not had as good an opportunity of forming a correct dramatic taste as if he had resided in London all his life. At least, such is my opinion, though I do not insist upon it.

One reason why I do not weaken before these two critics, is because every time Mr. Setchell plays, crowds flock to hear him, and no matter what he plays those crowds invariably laugh and applaud extravagantly. That kind of criticism can always be relied upon as sound, and not only sound but honest.

X.

THE SOLDIER'S LAST FAREWELL.

[FROM THE FRENCH.]

DEAR ROSE! it is my present intention
Of my health for a moment to sing:
The Army of France of triumphant,
And I—have an arm in a sling,
Besides the decided advantage
We have gained in the brilliant attack,
We have taken plenty of plunder,
And I have two shots in the back!

I am now in the hospital, where
I soon shall have ended my pains;
I send you ten francs—its the money
That purchased my mortal remains.
It is fitting that Rose should receive it,
Whose lover has vanished from earth;
It will lessen my grief at departing,
To know she has all I am worth!

My dog, pray do not neglect him,
And do not permit him to learn
His master has gone on a journey
From which he will never return!
O, could he but see me a corporal,
How madly he'd caper and dance—
And how the poor fellow would sorrow
To hear of my fatal mischance.

Adieu—my dear Rose! it were idle
At my final departure to grieve:
I am joining a regiment, dearest,
That never grants tickets of leave!
So everything round me is turning,
Ah, me! it will shortly be over,
I have taken my traveling orders—
Farewell—and remember your lover!

CHARLES LAMB, HIS FRIENDS AND BOOKS.

[THE following extracts are from an article in the Dublin Monthly Magazine, and present some of the quaintest selections of the quaint and charming "Elia":]

HONE had described, and pleasantly described, the memoirs of Captain Starkey, "a fine uncut copy of which was penes me," (a favorite expression of Lamb's,) and which in a few numbers after brought out some of that delightful "drollery" which, besides good as any official essay of Elia, furnishes a bit of biography really valuable. From it we find that both he and his sister went to a school where Starkey had been usher about a year before they came to it—a room that looked into "a discolored, dingy garden in the passage leading from Fetterlane into Bartlett's Building." Heaven knows what languages were taught there. I am sure that neither my sister nor myself brought any out of it but a little of our native English."

Bird and Cook, he says, were the masters. Bird had "that peculiar mild tone—especially when he was inflicting punishment—which is so much more terrible to children than the angriest looks and gestures. Whippings were not frequent, but when they took place, the correction was performed in a private room adjoining, whence we could hear the plaints, but saw nothing. This heightened the decorum and solemnity." He then described the ferrule—"that almost obsolete weapon now," and "the malignancy, in proportion to the apparent mildness with which its strokes were applied. To make him more formidable—if a pedagogue had need of these heightenings—Bird wore one of those flowered Indian gowns formerly in use with school-masters, the strange figures upon which we used to interpret into hieroglyphics of pain and suffering." This is in Lamb's most delightful vein. So, too, with other incidents of the school. "Our little leaden inkstands, not separately subsisting, but sunk into the desks;" and the theatrical Cato, a reminisence of which was supplied by Mary Lamb. "She describes the cast of the characters even now with relish. "Martha," by the handsome Edgar Hickman, who afterwards went to Africa, and of whom she never afterwards heard tidings; "Lucia," by Master Walker, whose sister was her particular friend; "Cato," by John Hunter, a masterly declaimer, but a plain boy, and shorter by a head than his two sons in the scene," etc. This is charming, and in Lamb's freest, gayest manner. The whole paper should have been in Elia, just before the "Christ's Hospital."

Later on he furnishes a little ramble, "In re Squirrels," beginning: "Be it remembered that C. L. comes here and represents his relations," asking, "What is gone with the cages, with the climbing squirrel, and bells to them, which were formerly the indispensable appendage to the outside of a tinman's show, and were, in fact, the only live signs? One, we believe, still hangs out on Holborn; but they are fast vanishing with the good old modes of our ancestors."

A correspondent, Tim Tims, gossiping about the ass, brings out Lamb again to plead for this suffering servant. Nature did prudently "in furnishing him with a tegument impervious to ordinary stripes . . . . His back offers no mark to a puny foeman. To a common whip or switch his side presents an absolute insensibility . . . . His jerkin is well fortified. . . . Contemplating this natural safeguard, his fortified exterior, it is with pain I view the sleek, foppish, combined, and curried person of this animal as he is transmuted and disnaturalized at watering places, etc., where they affect to make a palfrey of him. Fie on all such sophisticating. It will never do, Master Groom! Something of his honest shaggy exterior will peep up in spite of you—his good, rough, native pineapple coating."

Pineapple coating! How truly after Lamb's mind, the deceit in suggesting an agreeable image, which, on a second's reflection, shows as quite a different idea. Nothing, too, is more remarkable in him than his airy and special "etc."

But, surpassing these specimens is a little scene in the second volume, which shows us Lamb himself in one of his best attitudes, at a stall: "Rummaging over the contents of an old stall, at a half book, half old iron shop, in 94, Alley, leading from Warden street to Soho, yesterday, I lit upon a ragged duodecimo, which had been the strange delight of my infancy. . . . The price demanded was sixpence, which the owner (a little squab duodecimo of a character himself) enforced with the assurance that his own mother should not have it for a farthing less. On my demurring to this extraordinary assertion, the dirty little vender re-enforced his assertion with a sort of oath, which seemed more than the occasion demanded; 'and now (said he) I have put my soul to it.' Pressed by so solemn an asseveration, I could no longer resist a demand which seemed to set me, however unworthy, upon a level with his dearest relations; and, depositing a tester, I bore away the tattered prize in triumph." It turned out a delusion, but he thought it would have been a treat for "friend Hone." Another instance of Lamb's tender delicacy, as he knew Hone had been already pleased at being called "friend" by him.

He is again "brought out" by an allusion to Sir Jeffrey Dunstan, whom he had met and seen at his dwelling. "A strong odor of burnt bones, I remember, blending with the scent of horse-flesh reeking into dog's meat, and only relieved a little by the breathings of a few brick-kilns, made up the atmosphere." This is one of Lamb's wonderful "gatherings" of oddness; and even the quaint position of the word "I remember," is worth, of study. "If a few boys followed him," he goes on, "it seemed rather from habit than in expectation of fun. . . . What faults he had I know not. I have heard something of a peccadillo or so. But some little deviations from the precise line of rectitude might have been winked at in so tortuous and stigmatic a frame."

Every lover of Elia, and every reader of Lamb's life, will be prepared to associate with his house at Islington some of the most delightful evenings that could be conceived. Such would be accepted as the best human exemplar of the "Noctes Cænæque Divum." We would hardly be prepared to hear that those charming nights had "degenerated" into a sort of show place, where empty heads and "impertinents" came to stare, because many were eager to get admission, and to say that they had spent "an evening with the Lambs." Further, that the host himself was a stupid, unentertaining sort of man; and his sister used to "bustle and pother about like a gentle housewife, to make everybody comfortable;" but that "you might as well have been in the apartments of any other clerk of the India House, for anything you heard that was deserving of note or recollection."* With the common run of people he was odd, extravagant, grotesque and unnatural; as Hazlitt said, "always on a par with his company, whether high or low." But to see the true man, we should see him with one or two dear friends, when, we are told, he was perfectly natural, and made no violent puns or strange speeches. Strangers, therefore, generally took away with them an impression as of something odd and buffooning, and even disagreeable.

One of his most delightful letters is to this Mr. Patmore: "Dear P.," it ran, "I am so poorly. I have been to a funeral, where I made a pun, to the consternation of the rest of the mourners. And we had wine. I can't describe to you the howl which his widow set up at proper intervals. . . . O I am so poorly. I waked it at my cousin's, the book-binder, who is now with God; or if he is not, it's no fault of mine.

"We hope the French wines do not disagree with Mrs. Patmore. By the way, I like her. . . . Faugh! how sick I am! not of the world but of the widow's stout.

"She's sworn under £6,000; but I think she perjured herself. . . . 'No shrimps!' (That's in answer to Mary's question about how her soles are to be done.) . . . What you mean by poste restante God knows. Do you mean I must pay the postage? . . . Procter has got a wen growing out of the nape of his neck, which his wife wants him to have cut off; but I think it rather an agreeable excrescence." These are only scraps out of a most wonderful letter full of a boisterous and delightful extravagance.

From the same source we learn some traits of Lamb really characteristic—how, when he boarded with a sort of "save-all," Mrs. Leisham, at Enfield, who "screwed" every penny out of him that boarding could screw, she, on settling day, made a charge of sixpence for the extra sugar that Wordsworth put in his tea. How he told of his embarrassment when a poetical youth in the country, corresponding with him, enclosed his miniature; and above all, what seems to be a genuine trait of his nature and habits: a friend would come in, not opportunely, and find Lamb, as in "The Fraser Sketch," with his folio "tilted up" before him, revelling in, say Sir Thomas Browne or old Davenant: it would be a friend whom he would be really glad to see; yet it was an interruption; he would have preferred going on with Sir Thomas Browne; and his anxiety to disguise any appearance of this "unwelcome" made him fidgety, and bustling, and unnaturally hospitable. This is quite conceivable. A cento of stories was submitted to him in MSS.; and his marginalia are very pleasant. Thus: "'Pleasurable.' No word is good that is awkward to spell."

"'Looking like a heifer' I fear would do in prose. . . . . I should prefer 'garlanded with flowers, as for a sacrifice,' and cut the cow altogether." "'Apathetic.' Vile word." "'Mechanically.' Faugh! insensibly—involuntarily—in-any-thingly, but mechanically!" "'Re-action' is vile slang." "'Physical.' Vile word."

When he got with Haydon, the luckless painter of a "broad canvas," some one said they were like a pair of boys. The boisterous scene told in Haydon's diary, and told with such animation, of the simple comptroller of stamps, who had corresponded with Wordsworth, and who met him, unluckily, when Lamb was present, is admirable. The comptroller asked the poet the wonderful question, "Don't you think, sir, Newton was a great genius?" when Lamb rose, and taking up a candle, said, politely, "Sir, will you allow me to look at your phrenological development?" Then, at every remark of the poor comptroller, chaunted—

"Diddle diddle dumpling, my son John Went to bed with his breeches on."

Quite in the same way is his humorous treatment of the poet whose friend had submitted some newly-published verses to his inspection. He was to meet the gentleman at dinner, and the poems were shown to Lamb a little before the author's arrival. When he came he proved to be empty and conceited. During dinner Lamb fell into the delightful drollery of saying, now and again, "That reminds me of some verses I wrote when I was very young," and then quoted a line or two which he recollected, from the gentleman's book, to the latter's amazement and indignation. Lamb, immensely diverted, capped it all by introducing the first lines of Paradise Lost, "Of man's first disobedience," as also written by himself, which actually brought the gentleman on his feet, bursting with rage. He said he had sat by and allowed his own "little verses" to be taken without protest, but he could not endure to see Milton pillaged. This seems to be one of the best stories about Lamb, and the situation one in which he would have revelled.

A lady once bored him a good deal—"Such a charming man! I know him! Bless him!" To her, Charles, after repetition of this encomium, "I know him," "Well, I don't—but d—n him at a hazard." The "dipping" story, as illustrative of Lamb's stammer, is well known. "I am to be d-d-dipped," he said to the bathing men. "All right, sir," and he was plunged forthwith. He came up gasping "I am to be di-di-ppe-d," and he went down again. The third time he got it out—"only once." To some one, talking of matter-of-fact men, he announced gravely, "Now I am a matter-of-lie man." So, too, his taking his pipe out of his mouth to ask a disputant, "Did he mean to contend that a thief was not a good man?" So, too, his calling Voltaire a very good Messiah—for the French. So, too, his judgment on clever women. Mrs. Mulbald he pronounced the "only endurable clever woman he ever knew." A domestic talk with Miss Lamb, on his asking a friend: "Charles, who is Mr. Pitman?" "A clerk in the India House." "Then why ask him and give up the others—older friends?" "Pitman," said Charles, "was always civil. When the smoking club at Don Saltero was broken up he offered me all the ornaments and apparatus, which I declined, and therefore I asked him here to-night. I never could bear to give pain. Have I not been called the gentle-hearted Charles when I was young, and shall I now derogate?"

We can almost hear him gravely arguing this point.

His puns must, we may fancy, have been the least agreeable phase of his wit. "I'll Lamb-pun him," however, is truly characteristic; besides we should hear the voice, the struggle for utterance, and see the face, and the bright eye and smile. Good, too, were the puns after Swift's manner—deriving the name of the Man-t-chou Tartars, from their cannibal habits; and that of the Chinese Celtes, from sell-tcas.

IF you present yourself as a subject to a Chinese portrait-painter, you are asked the preliminary question: "How you likey? You likey handsome, or you likey likey?" You naturally reply that you wish the portrait to be like you; but woe betide you if, after that announcement, you object to the picture on the score of its ugliness. It is said that a sitter once venturing to do so, the aggrieved artist turned round to the collected audience, and with upraised hands exclaimed in expostulatory tones: "Suppose no have handsome, how can?" Great was the sympathy evinced for the aggrieved artist, and overwhelming the confusion of the caricatured sitter.

*Patmore.

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

Espceial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order.

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

CARPET CLEANING.

You can get your Carpets cleaned at the STEAM POWER CARPET Beating Machine for Five Cents per Yard.

Orders left in our boxes, at the following places, will be promptly attended to:

Southeast corner Clay and Dupont streets.
Southeast corner Broadway and Dupont streets.
Northeast corner of Stockton and Jackson streets.
Southeast corner of Powell and Union streets.
Northwest corner of Taylor and Pacific streets.
Southwest corner of Bush and Stockton streets.
Northeast corner of Geary and Taylor streets.
Northwest corner of Kearny and Market streets.
Southeast corner of Howard and Third streets.
Northeast corner of Second and Folsom streets.

Or at the Postoffice, or at Carnes' City Letter Express, 621 Montgomery street, directed to

J. SPAULDING & CO., 113 Fremont st.
mh11-3m.

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.

ap22-tf

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and For the City and County of San Francisco

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff; vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)

ap22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

AMALIE J. R SCHAEBEN, Plaintiff; vs. AUGUSTE A. SCHAEBEN, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to AUGUSTE A SCHAEBEN, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney, office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)

ap8-tjy8-inc

W. H. BROOKS,

STATIONER AND NEWS-DEALER,

No. 51 THIRD STREET,

Near the corner of Mission, - - - San Francisco.

DEALER IN

PLAIN & FANCY STATIONERY,

SCHOOL BOOKS, POCKET CUTLERY, SONGS and SONG BOOKS,

Local and Eastern Newspapers and Periodicals,

And Standard and current light Literature.

A large and well-assorted CIRCULATING LIBRARY on the most liberal terms.

Country orders promptly and accurately attended to.

mh25 3m

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office.

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,

Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S

no26 San Francisco.

REMOVAL! REMOVAL!!

WONDERFUL TRIUMPH

IN AMERICAN DENTISTRY.

DR. BEERS & CO.,

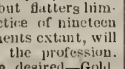
Having removed from 617 Clay street

To 129 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

ARE NOW MANUFACTURING THE NEW style of ARTIFICIAL TEETH so highly approved at the East, and which to be appreciated only requires to be seen. The Teeth, Gums and Plate are made of one entire piece of Porcelain without seam or joint, combining great strength and beauty with absolute purity and freedom from any metallic taste, while the coloring of the gums and the interior of the mouth are so perfect as to almost defy detection. All interested in the progress of the Arts are invited to examine samples of this work.

Superior Gold and Vulcanite Work also manufactured as usual, but at greatly reduced price. jul8

DR. LIBBEY,



WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracted with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no charge.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. dc10-3m

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be ready for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th March, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - $660.000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29 3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROSENFIELD, Actuary.

mh25 3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10,000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co. WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

no19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28-tf 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL THE

DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of doubt, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'

CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lachrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Augustare Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root, Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Pleurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtue of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG, M. D.,
Sole Proprietor, New York.

Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

(For the Californian.)

TAMALPAIS.

NORTHWARD he lies from our home in the town;
Over the ribbon of water that flings
A silver ruffle about his brown
Harsh hem in its tremulous eddyings.
Old Tamalpais! he looks so grave,
With his brow in the cloud and his chin in the wave.

Grand old monitor! proud in his might!
Silent and watchful, guarding us well,
Is it his eye that is piercing the night,
Or a giddy star that he caught as it fell?
Old fellow, 'tis fitting and meet that you are
In imperial majesty crowned with a star!

He is so old that his wrinkled hide
Is gray as a frown on the rough, mad sea;
But his might is alive, and the hurricanes glide
Not easily by him; he scatters the glee
Of the wild, roving winds; you may know when he wakes
In a laugh, for the echoing earth fairly quakes.

Broad banners of mist thread in through the Gate,
And gather about him as cold as a shroud;
But little he cares, for his bare, hoary pate
Is capped with the sunlight far over the cloud.
Brave Tamalpais! he looks so grand,
Bluffing the ocean off, guarding the land!

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 27th, 1865.

(For the Californian.)

IVY.

(HEDERA HELIX.)

THE Ivy was well known to the Greeks and Romans, and there are many mythological and traditional allusions to it in the writings of the Greek and Roman authors. Its Greek names were kissos and kittos, from Kissus or Cissus, the name of a boy whom Bacchus is said to have changed into ivy. By the Romans it was called Hedra, which name has been adopted by modern botanists. In old French its name was Hierre. The Ivy was dedicated by the ancients to Bacchus, whose statue is generally found crowned with a wreath of its leaves; and as the favorite plant of the god of wine, its praises have been sung by almost all poets, whether ancient or modern. Many reasons are given for the consecration to Bacchus of this plant. Some poets say that it was because the ivy has the effect of dissipating the fumes of wine; others because it was once his favorite youth Cissus; and others because it is said that the ivy, if planted in vineyards, will destroy the vines, and that it was thus doing an acceptable service to that plant to tear it up and wreath it into chaplets and garlands. The most probable, however, seems to be that the vine is found at Nyssa, the reputed birth-place of Bacchus, and in no other part of India. It is related that when Alexander's army, after their conquest of Babylon, arrived at this mountain and found it covered with laurel and ivy, they were so transported with joy, (especially when they recognized the latter plant, which is a native of Thebes,) that they tore the ivy up by the roots, and, twining it round their heads, bust forth into hymns to Bacchus and prayers for their native country.

Not only Bacchus, who Pliny tells us was the first who wore a crown, but Silenus was crowned with ivy; and the golden-berried kind before the transformation of Daphne into a laurel, was worn by Apollo and after him by poets. Pope, however, does not seem to allow this, and he gives the plant expressly to critics:

> "Immortal Vida, on whose honor'd brow
> The poet's bays and critic's ivy grow."

The priests of the Greeks presented a wreath of ivy to newly-married persons, as a symbol of the closeness of the tie which ought to bind them together, and Ptolemy Philopater, king of Egypt, ordered all the Jews who had abjured their religion to be branded with an ivy leaf. Numerous allusions to this plant occur in Homer, Virgil, Horace, Ovid and nearly all the ancient and modern poets, but few have given a more just description of it than Spenser, in the following lines:

> "Emongst the rest, the clambering yvie grew,
> Knitting his wanton arms with grasping hold,
> Lest that the poplar happely should rew
> Her brother's strokes, whose boughs she doth enfold
> With her lythe twigs, till they the top survew,
> And paint with pallid green her buds of gold."

We are indebted to the ivy for the picturesque beauty it throws around every object to which it attaches itself. No architectural ornament, however classical; no tracery, however light and elegant, can vie in graceful effect with this "wild tapestry." But not only is the eye indebted to it, the imagination also shares in the obligation for the touching imagery it supplies. Springing wherever there is ruin and decay, it decks indiscriminately "the loftiest height" and "the humblest grave," and with such exquisite grace that we doubt whether Adam, to whom his fair consort, (according to the poet,) assigned the task of directing "the clasping ivy where to climb" could have twined it more tastefully. Besides decorating the ruined remains of feudal and monastic splendor, there is not a more beautiful and characteristic feature of forest scenery than this trailing plant. Everywhere it may be seen covering the ground with its natural mosaic, and climbing the tallest trees, especially such as are dead or dying, (for which it has a decided preference,) round which it throws its verdant garlands, as if to hide the traces of decay. Once arrived at their summit, where further support is denied, it is necessitated to assume more independence of character, and it then makes an effort to sustain itself; to effect which its slight, flexible stems become short and woody; in this position its leaf also undergoes a change—from being lobed it becomes heart-shaped. Ingratitude has sometimes been represented by the ivy, as when it attaches itself to a young tree it confines the stem and consequently prevents the free circulation of the sap. A French writer has repelled this calumny. The ivy appears to him to be the emblem of eternal friendship. He says: "Nothing is able to separate the ivy from the tree around which it has once entwined itself; it clothes the object with its own foliage in that inclement season when its black boughs are covered with hoar frost; the companion of its destinies, it falls when the tree is cut down. Death itself does not detach it, but it continues to decorate with its constant verdure the dry trunks it had chosen as its support. Clare says:

> "The ivy shuns the city walls,
> Where busy, clamorous crowds intrude,
> And climbs the desolated halls
> In silent solitude;
> The time-worn arch, the fallen dome,
> Are roots for its eternal home."

And another poet asks:

> Hast thou e'er seen the ivy clinging
> Round fragments broken and decay'd,
> As if its mantling wreaths 't were flinging
> To hide the breaches Time had made?

But we love it best as the emblem of friendship, and we rejoice to see the ivied oak or

> "Aged elm in ivy bound."

And we are sure that none will deny its claim to this symbol, since it yields shelter to some of the smaller birds. Wordsworth tells us how they harbor 'mid its foliage:

> ——"From behind the roof
> Rose the slim ash and mossy sycamore,
> Blending their diverse foliage with the green
> Of ivy, flourishing and thick that clasped
> The huge round chimneys, harbor of delight
> For wren and red-breast, where they sit and sing
> Their slender ditties when the trees are bare."

The constancy of the ivy has rendered it a favorite device for seals, some of the best of which are a sprig of ivy, with the motto: "I die where I attach myself;" and a fallen tree still covered with ivy, with the words: "Even ruin cannot separate us." The ivy is the badge of the clan Gordon.

There is no evergreen capable of being applied to so many uses as the ivy; no garden plot, large or small, can dispense with it, and when trained on wire trellises they are very ornamental for either out or indoor decoration, for vases, hanging baskets, etc. They have no rival for their hardiness and beauty of foliage, requiring less care and attention than any other plant.

For edgings of beds, and planting where nothing else will grow, the ivy will flourish and form one of the most interesting features in the place. The ivy, when planted in good soil and kept moist, will attain a large size and become very luxuriant. Plants of it are now in existence whose main stem measures twenty inches in diameter. There are nearly one hundred varieties of all sizes and form of leaf, with every shade of color, some of them most beautifully variegated from white-and-gold to the deepest green.

IRIS.

BRYANT'S ODE ON LINCOLN.

[AT the funeral obsequies of President Lincoln in New York, the Rev. Dr. Osgood read and the multitude sang the following beautiful ode composed for the occasion by William Cullen Bryant:]

OH, slow to smite and swift to spare,
Gentle, and merciful, and just!
Who in the fear of God, didst bear
The sword of power, a nation's trust.

In sorrow by thy bier we stand,
Amid the awe that hushes all,
And speak the anguish of a land
That shook with horror at thy fall.

Thy task is done; the bond are free;
We hear thee to an honored grave,
Whose noblest monument shall be
The broken fetters of the slave.

Pure was thy life; its bloody close
Hath placed thee with the sons of light,
Among the noble host of those
Who perished in the cause of right.

NEW BOOKS.

WE have received from A. Roman & Co., the following new books:

The Matchmaker. By Beatrice Reynolds. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Co.

The assertion on the title page of this book that Beatrice Reynolds is also author of Charles Auchester and Counterparts, is a most extravagant bit of mendacity. Miss Elizabeth Shephard, who is the recognized authoress of Charles Auchester, is dead, and there is not the faintest similarity in style between The Matchmaker and the writings of the late Mrs. Shephard. Of itself, The Matchmaker out-Braddons Miss Braddon in those peculiar situation which are that lady's forte, and shrinks from no enormity in the pardonable intention of thrilling the reader. The book will probably have a quick sale among the large class who admire sensation stories.

Essays by R. W. Emerson. First and second Series. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

A blue-and-gold reprint of the first and second series of Mr. Emerson's well-known essays, complete in one volume. A very convenient and portable shape. It contains the celebrated essays on "Compensation," "Self-Reliance," "Spiritual Laws," "Love," etc. We have made liberal extracts in another column.

Southern Generals—Who they are and What they have Done. New York: Charles Richardson, 540 Broadway.

The compilation of this work is attributed to Pollard, although no authorship appears on the title page. It is written from a Southern view-point, and the biographies seem to have been compiled chiefly from Southern journals. As there is nothing in the individual history of many of these men to entitle them to any immortality beyond the ephemeral pages of a newspaper, the book is a work of supererogation. Mr. Pollard might attract more attention by adding to his volume and to his title page of the "Southern Generals, Who they are and What they have Done," the information "What will be done with them," a question, we fancy, more interesting to the surviving heroes than their abstract claims to immortality. We give below an extract from a letter of General Lee to his son, written in 1852, somewhat remarkable, as he commends as an example to his boy the conduct of a Connecticut Puritan:

"In regard to duty, let me, in conclusion of this hasty letter, inform you that nearly a hundred years ago there was a day of remarkable gloom and darkness—still known as "the dark day"—a day when the light of the sun was slowly extinguished, as if by an eclipse. The legislature of Connecticut was in session, and as its members saw the unexpected and unaccountable darkness coming on, they shared in the general awe and terror. It was supposed by many that the last day—the day of judgment—had come. Some one, in the consternation of the hour, moved an adjournment. Then there arose an old Puritan legislator, Davenport, of Stamford, and said, that if the last day had come, he desired to be found at his place doing his duty, and therefore moved that candles be brought in, so that the house could proceed with its duty. There was quietness in that man's mind, the quietness of heavenly wisdom and inflexible willingness to obey present duty. Duty, then, is the sublimest word in our language. Do your duty in all things, like the old Puritan. You cannot do more; you should never wish to do less. Never let me and your mother wear one gray hair for any lack of duty on your part.

"Your affectionate father,

"R. E. LEE.

"To G. W. CUSTIS LEE."

The Hillyers and the Burtons—A Story of Two Families. By Henry Kingsley. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

The scene of this novel is laid partly in Australia. The heroine is a young girl who, from a heroic sense of duty, devotes herself to her brother and rather slights her lover. Mr. Kingsley's style would be pleasant but for his alternate affectations of jocularity, superiority and occasional obtrusive familiarity. He has not the ease of a gentleman. An American and his wife (Mr. and Mrs. Nalder) are introduced as companions du voyage, and we are told that the sea breeze had a bracing effect on the lady. "On that magnificent American woman it had a bracing effect; it put new roses into her face, and made her stand firmer on her marine continuations—had I been speaking of an English Duchess I should have said her sea legs." This is rather cheap humor, but no doubt it goes very far with the English reader. The husband, who is from Chicago, expresses himself in this remarkable manner, "that Ostrellyan gels were as a jenule rule whimsical young cusses." This may be Mr. Kingsley's idea of a Western accent, but we submit that "gells" sounds more like Mrs. Poyser than Mrs. Nalder. However, the main idea of making an American speak grotesque English is attained. We doubt very much if any intelligent English readers will to-day endorse the following somewhat ambiguous statement, which seems to have been written at a time when McClellan was an English idol:

"Having relieved his heart by so much of the dear old prairie talk, and seeing Mr. Crompton was anxious and distressed, he began to speak in diplomatic American—absolutely perfect English, slightly Frenchified in style, and spoken a little through the nose; English which, under the present Presidency, seems to be going out of fashion, as Webster's English gives way to Lincoln's, and McClellan's to Grant's."

☞ THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co. THOMAS MOONEY, Secretary.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning. A. KOHLER, 424 Sansome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

BOOK-KEEPING.

All branches necessary to a complete BUSINESS EDUCATION, taught PRACTICALLY and THOROUGHLY, by J. S. LUTY, Professor of Book-keeping and Penmanship, 305 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Rooms open day and evening. fe4 3m

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6,500,000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
'y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

COMMERCIAL STEAM PRINTING HOUSE.
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.,
517 CLAY and 514 COMMERCIAL STREETS.

Every description of BOOK, JOB and POSTER PRINTING done in the best style and at the lowest rates.
BOOK-BINDING and RULING done to order.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

PRINTING ! PRINTING ! !
H. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
NO. 522 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery, - - San Francisco.

All Descriptions of JOB PRINTING done cheaper and as good as anywhere else in the city.
fe4-tf

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25-tf

VANDALL, CARR & CO.,
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 410 CLAY STREET,
(North side, between Sansome and Battery.

☞ Particular attention paid to the printing of Briefs and Records. fe11-tf

ALLCOCK'S
POROUS PLASTERS
RELIEVING AND
PAIN STRENGTHENING

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.
THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Brandreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.
☞ Sold by all Druggists. de17-3m

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent. including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7-30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent.	per day	on a $50	note.
Two cents	"	$100	"
Ten "	"	$500	"
20 "	"	$1,000	"
$1 "	"	$5,000	"

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.
March 25, 1865. ap29-3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency. JAY COOKE, my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
JUNE 13th!
OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK!
VIA NICARAGUA!
CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!
SHORTEST AND QUICKEST ROUTE ! ! !

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the commodious and favorite steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
J. H. BLETHEN, - - - - - Commander.

FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, NICARAGUA,
ON TUESDAY, - - - - JUNE 13TH.
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely,
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the new and splendid Steamship
GOLDEN RULE,
3,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

The transit of the Isthmus is a pleasant trip. Meals furnished free by the Company while crossing. A baggage-master will be sent through by each steamer. Insurance on Treasure at the lowest rates.

The steamer AMERICA will succeed the MOSES TAYLOR in July.

For information or passage, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, AGENT, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
my20 Up stairs, San Francisco.

HOOGS & MADISON HAVE REMOVED
TO NO. 316 MONTGOMERY STREET,
First door South of the Eureka Theatre.
Between California and Pine streets.
ap29-1m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:

Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.
9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40
FROM THE CITY
10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.

Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.
my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

DR. H. A. BENTON,
Electro-Magnetic Physician,
OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Appliances and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:
Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Vinton, American Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.
Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.
ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

ALAMEDA PARK HOTEL.

THIS new and elegant House will be opened for the reception of guests, on SATURDAY, the 18th instant. It is situated on the Alameda Encinal, within three minutes' walk of the San Leandro Railway, and three miles from the end of the wharf, between which and the foot of Broadway, steamers ply at frequent intervals during the day. The hotel can be reached by boat and rail, in forty minutes from Montgomery street. The location is in the midst of a dense grove, and, as a suburban resort, cannot be surpassed for beauty and healthfulness.

This hotel is splendidly fitted up with all the modern improvements, and in every respect will be conducted as a first class public house.

The proprietor would call especial attention of families to the attractiveness of this locality, so accessible, and yet retired, and free from the turmoil of the city.

Bowling Alleys, Billiard rooms, and all of the leading journals of the day will be at the disposal of visitors, while the sportsman can find an abundance of wild game in the vicinity of the hotel.

By a strict attention to business the proprietor hopes to merit the public patronage.
Terms easy.
fe18-tf FRANK JOHNSON.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
de17-5m NEW YORK.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE!

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE
Has fully established the superiority of
Redding's Russia Salve
Over all other preparations
FOR THE CURE OF
Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,
AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE
is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.
REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY, HAS BEEN USED FOR
NEARLY HALF A CENTURY,
With the most astonishing success in curing Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Croup, Liver Complaint, Bronchitis, Difficulty of Breathing, Asthma, and every Affection of The Throat, Lungs and Chest, INCLUDING EVEN
CONSUMPTION.

There is scarcely one individual in the community who wholly escapes, during a season, from some one, however slightly developed, of the above symptoms—a neglect of which might lead to the last-named and most to be dreaded disease in the whole catalogue. The power of the "medicinal gum" of the Wild Cherry Tree over this class of complaints is well known; so great is the good it has performed, and so great the popularity it has acquired.

In this preparation, besides the virtues of the Cherry, there are commingled with it other ingredients of like value, thus increasing its value tenfold, and forming a Remedy whose power to soothe, to heal, to relieve, and to cure disease, exists in no other medicine yet discovered.

The unequalled success that has attended the application of this medicine in all cases of PULMONARY COMPLAINTS
has induced many physicians of high standing to employ it in their practice, some of whom advise us of the fact under their own signatures. We have space only for the names of a few of these:

S. H. Finley, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.
E. Boyden, M. D., Exeter, Me.
Alexander Hatch, M. D., China, Me.
R. Fellows, M. D., Hill, N. H.
W. H. Webb, M. D., Cape Vincent, N. Y.
W. B. Lynch, M. D., Auburn, N. Y.
Abraham Skillman, M. D., Boundbrook, N. J.
H. D. Martin, M.D., Mansfield, Pa.

The proprietors have letters from all classes of our fellow-citizens, from the Halls of Congress to the humblest cottage, and even from beyond the seas; for the fame and virtues of WISTAR'S BALSAM have extended to the "uttermost bounds of the earth," without any attempt on our part to introduce it beyond the limits of our own country.

TO CALIFORNIANS AND OREGONIANS.
In future all genuine WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY for the Pacific Coast will be enclosed in a new wrapper which will bear the printed names of both SETH W. FOWLE & CO., Boston, Mass, and JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio, as well as fac-simile of the signatures of "I. BUTTS," "SANFORD & PARK," and "H. WISTAR, M. D."

WISTAR'S BALSAM of WILD CHERRY
Is for sale by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
de31-3m

AN ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

[The eruption of Vesuvius which occurred in May 1855, was thus described by an eye witness :]

On the morning of the 7th, the crater at the very summit, fired, as it were, two heavy cannonades ; and after sending forth lightning, flames and stones, broke up altogether. In the middle of the cone ten craters have been formed, and from these the lava pours forth like a river, and runs on the side of the Cavello as far as the Minatore. Here four other craters have been formed, which throw up bitumen in the manner of pyramids, and resemble gigantic exhibitions of fireworks. The whole of the summit of the crater is therefore like a sponge, and must inevitably fall in. The thin crust trembles under your feet. You may see the stones dance with the tremulous movement; the part immediately round the crater looks like the sides of a heated copper boiler. Such is a true statement of what is going on on the summit.

There are reports of an opening towards Pompeii which is not unlikely, and of another towards Resina, but I have not been up for some days, as the danger is now very great. Before I write again I shall make the attempt. Last night I went to the scene of most stirring interest, after an interval of two days. The whole length of this usually quiet road was like a fair, and such was the throng of carriages which were moving on in three lines, that it was with difficulty we ever arrived at our destination. As we approached the menaced neighborhood, the inhabitants were removing their goods, and on a bridge in the middle of the little township of Cercolo (through which in the winter time thunders down from the summit of Vesuvius one of those mountain rivers so well known in Italy,) stood a company of sappers.

Creeping under this solid, handsome bridge into the bed of the river, we went up in face of the lava which was now coming rapidly down. Here again were sappers raising mounds on either side, to divert the ruin from some private grounds, and keep the lava in one straight course. The smoke which rose over the heads of the multitudes told us we were close on the spot, and climbing up the bank and walking along the top, we looked down on this mighty mass of fire. How changed the neighborhood in two days ! Where I walked on Sunday night was now a sea of fire. The side road by which I had come down into the main stream from Pollena and Massi di Somme was now full of blackened coke. The houses on the borders of the village had fallen—in one thirty poor people lived ; a small chapel was swallowed up, a gentleman s villa, and a sad extent of vineyard and garden ground.

On the other side of the great lava bed another stream was branching off to San Sebastiano. We had hoped to have crossed it, and ascended to the cascade again, but it was no longer possible ; for, as one says speaking of a marshy country in the winter, the lava was out. The fire here had begun to enter the burial ground of the little town, but was diverted from its course by a wall. On the opposite side of the stream were the king and all the royal family. The banks on either side were thronged with curious and anxious multitudes, whose faces were lighted up with the blaze of hundreds of torches, and with the more resplendent flame of the rapidly descending lava. Since the morning it had moved a mile. It was like a vast river of glowing coke.

As it moved on, the tens of thousands of lumps rolled and tumbled one over the other, crackling, grinding and grating ; and when, from the very face of it, a large lump fell off, the appearance was that of an iron furnace when the iron is being drawn. To make the resemblance more complete, at such times men darted forwards with long poles, taken from the neighboring vineyards, and pulled out great masses of lava, in which they embedded money for sale. What struck me at first, and still strikes me as the most majestic feature in the whole scene, is the slow, silent, irresistible motion of that fiery flood. Active almighty power without an effort ! Sweeping everything before it, overcoming every obstacle, growing up against intervening walls or houses, and devouring them bodily, and then marching on in the same silent, unrelenting, irresistible manner as before.

There was a spot beneath my feet where a wall of mason work had been built to break the violence of the winter floods ; to this spot all eyes were directed. The fiery river would fall over it in an hour ; as yet it was distant from it seventy yards, perhaps. Gradually it rose in height, and swelled out its vast proportions, and then vast masses fell off and rolled forward ; then it swelled again as fresh matter came pressing down behind, and so it broke, and on it rolled again and again till it had arrived at the very edge. There was a general buzz and murmur of voices. The royal family stood opposite to me, intermingled with the crowd, looking on with intense anxiety.

At last it broke, not hurriedly, still with a certain show of majesty. At first a few small lumps fell down ; then poured over a pure liquid of metal, like thick treacle, clinging sometimes mass to mass, from its glutinous character, and last of all tumbled over gigantic lumps of scoriæ. Then on it moved once more in its silent, regular course, swelling up and spreading over the vineyards on either side ; and now there was a rush for the road which traverses this lava-bed. Houses and the bridge bordered the road, the carriages had all been ordered off, and the bridge was being broken down—we were cut off completely. The sentinels would not let us pass, and struck us and drove us back ; but we forced our way, and then found too surely that it was impossible to get on.

The bridge was half demolished, and by the light of the torches we could see the soldiers above working away with the pick and the axe. We had therefore to retrace our steps, and making a long circuit through the open country and over walls, came round to the top of the bridge. "Run," said the sentinels, "or you will be too late." We crossed the narrow parapet which was still remaining, and soon afterwards down went the whole fabric. In this way it is hoped that the lava will be diverted from the townships of St. Sebastiano, Massi di Somme and Pollena, which stand on either side, and have as yet only suffered partially. Cercolo, through which, however, the stream is rolling, will be sacrificed.

So grand and so destructive an eruption has not been known for many years, and even now we cannot tell how or when it will terminate. The mountain is literally seamed with lava, and many fear a violent explosion as the final scene of the tragedy.

Courtship in Denmark.—A traveler tells the subjoined story : In Denmark, where the men have not yet thought of selling their name for a woman's dowry, every marriage is what nature and morality pronounce that it ought to be everywhere—a marriage of inclination. The young man whose position is not yet secured, does not, the more for that, renounce a union with a girl whose charms and innocence are her only capital. After having made—almost always in the presence of the lady's parents—the mutual avowal of their inclination, the young man announces his matrimonial intentions, and solicits the favor of a betrothal. The parents accept, and from that moment the lovers are left completely at liberty. They go the theatre, or out walking, unaccompanied ; they are constantly together, and wait as patiently as they can for the time when the church shall bless their union. It is a very rare case, indeed, that the betrothed abuses the privilege allowed him. A man would be justly considered indelicate, if, after intimate acquaintance with a respectable girl, his affianced wife, he ran after other "flirtations," as the Americans phrase it. Nevertheless, it must be confessed, there are men sufficiently careless of public opinion, and light enough, to make an amusement of these preliminaries to wedlock, which they have the boldness to say they prefer to wedlock. One old bachelor in Copenhagen was said to have been betrothed the ominous number of thirteen times. Another faithless female turtle-dove, somewhat advanced in life, was spoken of in indignant terms, because she broke off her engagement after a courtship of eighteen years. Just at the moment of a definite union, she had the audacity to ask for a little longer time for reflection. Subsequently, she married quite a boy, without relations, advice or experience, whom she caught in his budding affections, as you take a young magpie from the nest. When she expected some manifestation of the wrath and resentment of her former sweetheart, she was not a little surprised to see him come to church and remain to witness the matrimonial rite. He pressed her hand more warmly than ever, and betrayed his secret thoughts by whispering : "Oh ! my dear madam, you don't know what a service you have rendered me !" To which the bride replied with equal emotion : "Ah, Henrick ! I love this lad because he reminds me of what you were twenty years ago."

Battle-Fields.—"Did I ever tell you," says a correspondent of an Eastern paper, "among the affecting little things one is always seeing on these battle-fields, now, on the ground upon which the battle of Bull Run was fought, I saw pretty, pure, delicate flowers growing out of empty ammunition boxes ; and a wild rose thrusting up its graceful head through the top of a broken drum, which doubtless sounded its last charge in that battle ; and a cunning scarlet verbena peeping out of a fragment of a bursted shell, in which strange pot it was planted ? Wasn't that peace growing out of war ? Even so shall the beautiful and graceful ever grow out of the horrid and terrible things that transpire in this changing but ever-advancing world. Nature covers even the battle-grounds with verdure and bloom. Peace and plenty spring up in the track of the devouring campaign ; and all things in nature and society shall work out the progress of mankind."

Negro Science.—A contraband explains how bloodhounds sent in pursuit of fugitives may be thrown off the track : "If dem hounds gets closer into you, why just get a long pole and hop about twenty feet if you kin. You do dis four or five times, and whenever you light why just put some pepper in de holes what your heels make, and when de hounds come dey lose dar scent, and den dey goes snuffin' roun', and bymeby dey snuffles up dat ar pepper into dar nostrils, and den dey'll go chee ! chee ! chee ! and dat'll be de last dem dogs can do dat day."

The Confederacy not to be Subjugated.—The Richmond Dispatch of March 8th said : "There are some facts worth considering by those who imagine that such a country as the Southern Confederacy can be readily subjugated if it is determined to be free. What has the enemy done already that the end is at hand ? There have been four years of war, and such war as has rarely been seen on this planet. In April, 1861, Mr Lincoln called for 75,000 men. In May of the same year, he called for 64,000. From July to December, he called for 500,000. In July, 1862, he called for 300,000 ; in August, 1862, for 300,000 ; in 1863, he drafted 300,000 ; in 1864, 300,000 more. With his last call and draft, this will make about two millions and a half of men called out to quell 'a gigantic riot.' What has been accomplished by the two millions summoned to the field before the present call ? With the headquarters and heart of the rebellion at Richmond, only 120 miles from Washington, the Federal metropolis and base, and half the way affording water facilities for transportation, seven different commanders have led immense armies, armed and equipped with every appliance of war that the wealth of the United States could purchase, and yet this outpost of the rebellion still stands unconquered and defiant. The march of Sherman through a portion of our vast territory is nothing more than a track of a ship on the ocean. The waves close around as it recedes, and bear no permanent trace of its progress. The capture of our seaports is no more than occurred in the first Revolution ; and instead of being a matter of glorification to the United States, it is the Confederacy which has reason to exult that, for four years, without a navy, it has been able to hold those seaside villages against a naval Power which boasts that it has 700 ships-of-war."

Women and Tobacco.—There are many women, wives particularly, who make tobacco a source of a large measure of family unhappiness. They are everlastingly railing against smoking, continually getting at sword's points with every male friend and relative, and gaining nothing by it but a grim defiance, which discovers the fact that in the long run a man's will is equally as strong as a woman's when he once sets out upon a subject with the preconceived determination of having his own way. Then there is the nervous woman who faints at the smell of tobacco smoke, and can detect a smoker a mile off ; and the particular creature who is afraid of the house and the furniture becoming impregnated with the vapor. These unphilosophical wives rush to the extremity of driving the smoker from home to indulge elsewhere in his failing for the obnoxious "weed." All this is a very grave error, and if the little wives knew how much unhappiness might (if it has not already) result from this very proceeding, they would reflect twice before resorting to such petty tyranny. Let the smoker have some cosy little nook to himself where he can puff as much as he pleases, without being constantly tormented about it until fault finding becomes a bore and a dread to him ; let it be sacred to cigars and meerschaums, spittoons and pipes, of whatever description. He has an equal right to home and the privileges the proprietorship should ensure him. You will find that he will not fall into that unpleasant trick of keeping late hours so frequently, and neglecting to spend his leisure hours at his own fireside.—Household Monthly.

Convenient Facts to Know.—Windows may be kept free from ice by painting the glass with alcohol with a brush or sponge. Odors from boiling ham, cabbage, etc., may be prevented by throwing red pepper pods or a few pieces of charcoal into the pot. Pigeons are hatched in 18 days ; chickens, 21 ; turkeys, 26 ; ducks and geese, 30. A cement which is a good protection against weather, water, and fire to a certain extent, is made by mixing a gallon of water with two gallons of brine, in two and half pounds of brown sugar and three pounds of common salt. Put it on with a brush like paint. Common cut-nails, or screws, are easily driven into hard wood, if rubbed with a little soap, hard or soft. To remove iron stains, the iron is first dissolved by a solution of oxalic acid in water. The oxalate of iron thus produced, which, unlike iron rust, is soluble, is readily removed by washing or soaking. Ink spots (tanogallate of iron) upon the printed leaves of books are removed in the same way ; but the lamp-black of the printer's ink is not at all affected. If fresh, such spots may be wholly effaced ; if old and dry, a very little remain. To get rid of bed-bugs, wash the bedstead with salt and water, filling the cracks they frequent with salt, and you may look in vain for them. Salt seems inimical to bed-bugs, and they will not trail through it. It is preferable to all "ointments," and the buyer requires no certificate as to its genuineness.

What was the Rubicon ? It was a generous red wine, a favorite with the Romans. Cæsar used to be a regular bottle-stopper ; so, as there were perpetual requests to him to "pass the rubicon," his doing it of his own accord was marked as a red-letter day in the Roman calendar. The dinner-table cry was afterwards shortened into "Pass the ruby," and in this abbreviated form it has been handed down to our own time.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will he despatched in the month of APRIL, 1865:

JUNE 3! - - - - - - - CONSTITUTION

From Folsom-street Wharf, at nine o'clock, A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will he conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
mh25 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

SAN JOSE.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY.....Proprietor.

As a desirable place of resort for health or recreation, the above Hotel is not surpassed in the State.

Excellent accommodations for families, by the day, week, or month, on reasonable terms.
ju25

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always he called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

FLOWERS! FLOWERS!!

The attention of the Public is invited to

The Floral Repository,

Of C. B. MILLER, Bush street, opposite Cosmopolitan Hotel.

Mr. MILLER keeps constantly on hand the rarest and choicest flowers that the season or the market affords, and will furnish parties or private houses with floral decorations at the shortest notice. Bouquets made to order, and sent to their destination with promptness. Mr. Miller would invite attention to some curious specimens of the Orchis family which his collection affords, and he would be pleased to have a call from all lovers of Flowers, whether they wish to purchase or not.

"HOME, SWEET HOME!"

No home of taste is complete without Aquaria, Gold Fish, Birds, Fern Cases, new and rare Plants, Bulbs and Seeds, Cut Flowers and Bouquets for Weddings, Hanging Baskets, Rustic Stands, Shells, Minerals, etc.

A long experience at the East justifies Mr. Miller in promising to please the patrons who may favor him with a trial. He will also be happy at all times to furnish those who take an interest in flowers with any information relative to their care and culture that may be desired.

MILLER'S 206 Bush street,
Opposite the Cosmopolitan, San Francisco.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

REGENERATING Extract of Millefleurs!

THIS UNRIVALLED PREPARATION

CLEANSES
—AND—
BEAUTIFIES
THE HAIR!

Immediately rendering the coarsest Hair soft and pliable, prevents Disease of the Scalp, premature decay of the Hair, and BALDNESS!

It may be used upon CHILDREN and YOUNG PERSONS with the greatest satisfaction and cheerful assurance of permanent benefit—producing Luxuriance of Growth, removing all impurities from the surface of the Head—stimulating and preserving the HAIR to the latest period of life.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
Corner of Clay San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

DIABETES, INDIGESTION, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, STRANGUARY CALCULUS, GRAVEL, CATARRH AND OTHER AFFECTIONS OF THE BLADDER.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

A BAD BREATH!

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

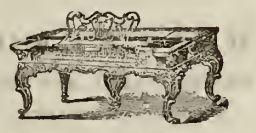
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers
—IN—
Fine Clothing
—AND—
GENTLEMEN'S
FURNISHING GOODS,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,
200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,

ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME!



WM. B. BRADBURY'S
New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimonials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.
A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

M. HARKINS,

MANUFACTURER OF
LADIES', MISSES', AND CHILDRENS
Boots and Shoes.

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BOOTS, SHOES and SLIPPERS MADE TO ORDER.

No. 151 FOURTH STREET,
Second door above Howard, east side,
SAN FRANCISCO

☞ Repairing of all kinds neatly and promptly done.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS

—TO—

Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO
FOR RED BLUFF,
EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

no5-tf J. WHITNEY, JR., President.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF
STOVES AND METALS,
Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

FURNITURE

Closing Out at any Price!

On account of the Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNDERSELL anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDSTEADS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS,
BEDDING, Etc.,

At Your Own Prices!

ap22 3m

OVERSTOCKED! AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS
—AT—
LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 526 Washington street.

NEW WHOLESALE STORE!

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

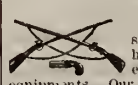
On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the best selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES!

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.
ap22-3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, ETC.



WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns. Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS, mn4-3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioner,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
ap22-tf

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!!

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.

ARE NOW OFFERING

AT

No. 7 Montgomery street,

At Reduced Prices,

300 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 50 each.
250 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 75 each.
500 Calico Dress Patterns, at $2 each.
450 Delaine Dress Patterns, at $2 50 each.
5,000 yards Dress Goods, at 37 1-2c per yard.
4,000 yards Dress Goods, at 50 cents per yard.

Just received, a full line of new and desirable Dress Goods for the Season, comprising French Printed Percalos, Cambrics, Lawns, Organdies, Linen Chambrays, Scotch Ginghams, etc., etc.

3,000 yards Black Paramatta, at 20 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Black Alpacas, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.

And a large assortment of new and desirable MOURNING GOODS, comprising 4-4 and 6-4 very fine Black Alpacas, English and French Bombazines, Black Byzantines, Tamise and Empress Cloths, Love and Crape Veils, Mourning Shawls, Crape Collars and sets, at reduced prices.

1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 per yard.
1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 25 per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 50 per yard.
3,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at 75 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at $1 per yard.
8,000 yds from $1 25 per yard to $8.

And a large assortment of new Chene Silks, Rep and Moires, which they offer at very low prices.

4,000 pairs Ladies' White Cotton Hose, at 25c per pair.
500 dozen from $5 to $7 per dozen.

Also, a full assortment of English, German and Balbriggan Hose and half Hose, Ladies', Misses and Boys' Merino Vests, etc., at greatly reduced prices.

100 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $1 37 1-2 per dozen.
125 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $2 50 per doz.
250 Linen Sets, Embroidered, at 37 1 2 cents.

Also, a full line of Embroidered Bands, Edgings and Insertings, at reduced prices.

DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT.

5 cases 4-4 fine Water Twist Muslin, at 20 cents per yd.
5 cases 4-4 best New York Mills, at 30 cents per yd.
35 cases of all the other standard brands, such as Hope, Lonsdale, White Rock, Androscoggin, Wauhegan, and Wamsutta, which we will offer at prices to suit the times.
8-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 45 cents per yard.
9-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 50 cents per yard.
10-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 55 cents per yard.
3,000 yds 4-4 Irish Linens, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 4-4 Irish Linens, (very heavy,) at 50 cents per yard.
1,000 yards 8-4 Bleached Table Linen, at $1 per yard.

And a very superior lot of real Barnsley Table Linen, at reduced prices.

2,000 yards Domet's Flannel, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 yards Shaker Flannel, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.
3,000 yards All Wool Shaker Flannel, at 45 cents per yard.

Also, a large and varied assortment of Towels, Towelling, Table Napkins, Piano Covers, Lace Curtains, Quilts and Blankets, all of which are offered at reduced prices.

ALEXANDRE'S BEST QUALITY OF KID GLOVES.

100 dozen Misses', at $1 25 per pair.
500 dozen Ladies', at $1 50 per pair.
200 doz. Gents', (double stitched,) at $1 50 per pair.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
my13-1m No. 7 Montgomery street.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

Engagement of the Celebrated Comedian,
MR. DAN SETCHELL,
SUPPORTED BY
THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Saturday Evening, May 27th, 1865,
Dan Setchell !
IN ROUGH DIAMOND,
JOHN JONES,
AND KISS IN THE DARK.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, May 27th,
FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
The Play of
Babes in the Wood.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - 50 cents
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7 ; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,

NO. 32 SECOND STREET. SAN FRANCISCO,

(OVER MRS. WHEELER'S,)

INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest EXPANDERS,

For Expanding the Chest, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

—

This Supporter possesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who have used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishing to possess

GRACE OF FORM
AND
SYMETRY OF PERSON.

It is comfortable to the frame, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of

GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of
BUST,
Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. EEAD also has a Supporter which she can confidently recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation; gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M. my27-tf

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

Pine street, near Montgomery.

T. MAGUIRE.....Proprietor and Manager.
J. H. WARWICK.....Stage Manager.

ON SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 27th,
MAGUIRE'S
Italian Opera Troupe

Will appear for the second time in Verdi's Grand Opera of Un Ballo en Maschera !

Amelia.....Signorina Olivia Sconcia.
Edgar.....Miss Adelaide Phillips.
Ricardo.....Signor Giovanni Sbrigha.
Renato.....Signor D. Orlandini.
Samuel, (first appearance)....Sig: Gerolamo Fossati.
Tom.....Mr. John De Haga.
Sylvano.....Mons Charles.
Ulrica.....Mmme Fleury.

The scene of the Drama is in Boston and its environs. The time is in the beginning of the eighteenth century.

ANTHONY REIFF, JR.....Conductor of Orchestra.

Seats can be secured two days in advance.

Books of the Operas can be purchased at the Box Office.

Dress and Family Circle.....$1 00
Orchestra Seats.....$1 00
Gallery.....50 cents
Private Boxes.....$10 and $5
Reserved Seats.....$1 50

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.

517

CLAY STREET, BET, SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY

my27

HOSIERY! HOSIERY!

TAAFFE & CO.

ARE OFFERING. AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,
GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO PURCHASERS IN
Gentlemen's Ladies', and Children's Undergarments, in
MERINO, SILK AND COTTON,

Consisting in part of

100 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $1 per pair.
200 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $1 25 per pr.
80 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $1 50 per pr.
75 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $2 per pair.
200 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, from $2 50 to $5.
1000 doz Gent's Cotton Half Hose, $3 per doz.
500 doz Gent's Cotton Hose, $3 50 to $7

ALSO,

Ladies' Cotton, Merino, Lisle Thread and Balbriggan Hose —all at package prices.
Children's do do at package prices.
Gent's Linen and Cotton Shirts.
Pocket Handkerchiefs, in Linen and Silk.
Cravats, Neck Ties, Gloves, etc.

Upon examination these goods will all be found FROM 20 TO 50 PER CENT. LESS than such goods are usually sold.

Terms Cash, and only ONE PRICE ASKED.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET.
my20-1tc LICK HOUSE.

REDUCED PRICES!

TAAFFE & CO.

WILL CONTINUE TO SELL AT
REDUCED PRICES!
THEIR EXTENSIVE STOCK
OF
Fancy and Staple Dry Goods,

CONSISTING IN PART OF

Rich Black, Colored and Plain DRESS SILKS. Poplins, Winseys, Linseys, Mohairs, Alpaccas, Merinos DeBages, DeLaines, Travelling Dress Goods, etc.

Cotton Sheetings and Shirtings; Linen Sheetings and Shirtings; Table, Damasks, Napkins, Towels and Toweling.

Jackonets, Swiss, Mull and Nainsook Muslins, In Plain Plaid and Striped, Lace and Muslin Curtains, Table and Piano Covers.

Blankets, Flannels, Quilts, Cloth Cloakings, etc.

Mourning Goods, in Bombazines, Alpaccas, Empress and Ottoman Cloth, Merinos, Silks, Challys, Prints, Ginghams, etc.

Also, French, English and American Prints, Ginghams, etc.

Purchasers will please to examine their stock before buying elsewhere, as they are offering great inducements.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET.
my20-1t LICK HOUSE.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY BALL

OF THE

"Sherman Guard."

TO BE GIVEN

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 16, 1865.

HONORARY COMMITTEE.

Gov. F. F. Low,
Hon. C. Cole,
Hon. D. C. McRuer,
Brig. Gen. J. Hewston, Jr.,
Major Andrews,
Col. F. G. E. Tittel,
Col. C. L. Taylor,
R. G. Sneath,
H. M. Newhall,
Samuel Brannan,
D. Scannell,
Maj. Gen. Irwin McDowell,
Brig. Gen. George Wright,
Col. Joseph Wood,
Col. J. W. McKenzie,
Col. M. C. Smith,
Col. A. J. Jackson,
William Sherman,
William Shew,
J. M. Johnson,
William G. Badger,
Col. Charles James.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

Captain S. Barker,
Lieut. J. D. Bartlett,
Serg't F. Ahell,
Lieut. S. A. Rounds,
Serg't F. Kennedy,
W. A. Stuart.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Capt. S. Barker,
Serg't F. Kennedy,
W. J. Newton,
Lieut. A. T. Ruthrauff,
Serg't F. A. Hoogs,
C. P. LeBreton.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

Lieut. J. D. Bartlett,
Serg't F. Ahell,
Serg't F. Kennedy,
John J. Mountain,
John Peunycook.

Tickets, $2. To be had of members, or at the door.
Music by Sander's Full Band, fifteen pieces. my27

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR

OF THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
TO BE HELD IN THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,
IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.

The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Exective Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.

No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.

A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.

Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 21 of August.

Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 21 of August.

The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.

The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.

The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.

The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.

No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.

All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.

All communications to be addressed to C. S. HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hanscom, Edward Nunan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons we can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfaction. my27 3m

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

Nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No. 2.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 3, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES—ORIGINAL:
- Answers to Correspondents.—By "Mark Twain."
- Pearls of Progress.—By "Antediluvian."
- Presented at Court.—By "Z."
- Lunacy in Business Circles.—By "Vox Populi."
- The Hazel.—By "Iris."
- California a Place of Exile.—By "Vaga."

POETRY—ORIGINAL:
- Hereafter.—By Ina D. Coolbrith.
- A Legend of the Blue-Birds.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.
- The Tale of a Pony—A True Story. By "Bret."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EDITORIALS:
- English Literary Curiosities.
- Gazlay's "Pacific Monthly."
- Musical Matters.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:
- Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

THEATRICAL TALK:
- The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Chapter XXX.

MISCELLANY:
- Interesting Selected Articles.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"WE that have free souls, it touches us not."

HAMLET—Act III., Scene 2.

WE see it stated that the yearly income of the poet Longfellow is $14,000 a year. We trust that he will not hang up his tuneful lyre and turn his Pegasus out to grass in consequence of this. Times are rather changed since King George II. said: "If heohles will be boets they must sdarve." Poetry has become such a saleable article that every one who can make two lines rhyme goes to work to manufacture it. There is very little new poetry now-a-days. It is most of it shoddy stuff. The manufacture of shoddy poetry is similar to the manufacture of shoddy clothing. The shoddy poet reads all the volumes of poetry he can lay his hands on, and grinding the poetical ideas up together in his brain, produces quite a respectable looking web, which he passes off as new cloth. Other poetasters, who have not the industry of the shoddy poet, will take a number of poems, and cutting a piece from each, join the parts together so skilfully that they fancy no one will be able to discover the seams, and then they pass off their patchwork for "original poetry." Oh, that these wretched turners, twisters, and distorters of the works of true poets, would apply their misdirected genius to the far more useful occupation of turning, mending and repairing—breeches instead of poems. The income which real poets of the present day derive from their literary labor, is a plain proof that "neglected geniuses" are not a reproach to the 19th century. Good poetry now sells with as much certainty as good mutton and beef, though, of course, it takes longer to introduce it to the market.

How wonderful are the workings of Fate! Now and again is the dark veil of the future drawn aside to afford to the vision of some favored mortal a glimpse of things yet to come to pass; and, filled with the spirit of prophecy, he opens his mouth and speaks, or commits his prophetic utterances to writing that they may be surely handed down to the future generations whom they concern. Often these wonderful written prophecies do not come to light until they have been accomplished—then they are discovered in secret drawers, nailed on the covers of boxes and in other extraordinary places. A case of this kind has recently occurred. We notice in the Sandwich Islands correspondence of the Bulletin, a statement to the effect that Queen Emma, the widow of the late king, is about to go to England. When we were in the Sandwich Islands, a short time ago, a Kanaka woman presented us with a cigar box of antique form which she stated to have been the property of the celebrated navigator, Captain Cook. It had descended to her as an heir-loom from her great-grandfather, who was the Cagliostro of the Hawiian Isles; he was a personal friend of Captain Cook, and foretold his death three days before it happened, repeating to him a line in the Kanaka tongue, which, as that language is not generally understood in this city, we translate for the benefit of our readers. The signification of the words used on the occasion is: "Three risings of the great fire, and a cook will be cooked." The great navigator gave no heed to this warning, and the particulars of his sad end are well known to all. On his death, the cigar box to which we have made reference fell into the hands of the great prophet of the Sandwich Isles, and was much prized by him. On examining this box more carefully than we had hitherto done, we found to our astonishment, under a piece of brown paper which had been caused to adhere to the inner portion of the lid by the use of some resinous gum, a thin slip of paper, yellow with age, on which were inscribed a number of closely-written sentences in the Kanaka tongue. The paper bore the date of the 5th of July in the year following that in which the great circumnavigator was killed. It was with a feeling of awe we deciphered these characters, traced by a prophetic hand long since mouldering in the dust. Wonderful to relate, these sentences embody a prophecy which is now in course of fulfilment and has immediate reference to the visit of Queen Emma to England. We prefer, instead of giving a bald, literal translation of the prophetic verse, to preserve the spirit of it while presenting it in English verse:

> "When a 1 and an 8 and a 6 and a 5
> Come together, then murderous slaughter shall thrive;
> When high Sandwich upper-crust Bull-beef shall see,
> Then and not until then shall Ham be set free."

It is evident that the "1 and an 8 and a 6 and a 5" make up the year we are now in, namely, 1865. The murderous slaughter happily now almost ended did thrive at the beginning of this year. The meeting of "high Sandwich upper-crust" with "Bull-beef" refers in the most unmistakable manner to the visit of Queen Emma—the very highest of the upper crust of Sandwich Island society—to the land of the beef-eating John Bulls. The freeing of "ham" by the temporary removal of the upper crust of the sandwich (Islands), plainly refers to the emancipation of the negro, the race of Ham. The prophecy is not yet fully explained, but time will make it clear. Our idea of the meaning of the visit of Queen Emma to England being connected with the emancipation and happiness of the negro race, is, that the question of "What shall we do with the negroes?" will be eventually solved by their exportation from this continent and final settlement in the Hawiian Islands. This may be an erroneous view, but we risk nothing in stating that Mr. Synge, the British Commissioner who accompanies Queen Emma, could, were he so disposed, lay before the United States Government a statement of what passed between himself and King Kamehameha which could not fail to prove interesting when taken in connection with the probable future of the African race. While we are, of course, delighted at having by a fortunate chance discovered this remarkable prophecy, we are deeply grieved that it should during such a length of time have remained in our possession unknown to us. It is, in our opinion, one of the most curious and interesting discoveries of the age, and is fully as authentic and reliable as the prophecies regarding the United States which have been recently discovered in all parts of the world.

THE Emperor Napoleon, having become an author, his fair wife, Empress Eugenie, took it into her head that she would like to see how books are printed. She accordingly paid a visit to a printing office at Clichy, and, it is said, set up a stickful of type. What a nice arrangement it would be, if Louis Napoleon should ever, like his illustrious uncle, be sent into retirement, for him to write books while Eugenie set them up. There's no knowing what may happen; she would find it quite an interesting amusement to learn the printing business, and her knowledge might be useful some day. One never knows what will happen in France. It would be sad to see an Empress at the galleys, an Emperor's form locked up in quod. Such an event would be subversive of all rules, and of course if it happened we should turn our rules to show our grief. The bourgeois element may rise in Paris and overcome the minions of Imperialism. We trust not. We hope Eugenie will never be reduced to sticking type for a living, but may live and die an Empress, and an imposing stone reared over her grave impress upon all who view it the affection the French people bore for her. There may be some faults in the composition of the Empress Eugenie, as no doubt there were when she set a stickfull of type at Clichy, but we are not without many proofs that she is a good and estimable woman, and the interest she has shown in the printing craft makes us all the more willing to except her from any dislike we may entertain for the craft of her husband.

THE Call says it has been shown a silver spoon which came from the Shenandoah! What an extraordinary curiosity! It has "Sea King" engraved on the handle. The Call tells a very pretty story as to how it happens to be in San Francisco: "It was 'nipped' by Captain S. J. Gilman of this city, while a prisoner on board the Shenandoah last November." It then tells us that "Captain Gilman was well treated by the Pirate Captain Waddell." Was he, indeed? And in return Captain Gilman stole his spoon! Captain Gilman is a cool customer; he "hath a nipping and an eager air." He ought to be made to fork over that spoon, or the first thing we know, Captain Waddell will get hold of a copy of the Call, read where his spoon is, and come and bombard San Francisco. We forgot to mention that Captain Waddell nipped Captain Gilman's schooner and burned it; however, that was no excuse for his conduct in stealing—nipping, we mean—Captain Waddell's spoon.

WE notice the following remarkable birth chronicled in an up-country newspaper:

"At North Fork, Trinity county, May 23d, the wife of Harmon Schlomer, of triplets—sons—all Union."

"All Union!" Siamese triplets! How very extraordinary. Harmon appears very proud of the consequence of his harmonious union. Trinity county is a fit place for triplets to be produced. We wonder how Harmon would feel if, after this remarkable birth, his wife should triple it next time. Harmon's Union motto is not E pluribus unum, but ex uno plures, or tria juncta in uno. Success to the trinity of Trinity Union boys. May it prove a pluri-buster.

WE gave up considerable space last week to the argument of Il Ballo in Maschera. We cannot afford so much this week; we will therefore do Martha up in short metre:

Lady Harriet finds Court dreary,
Drawing-rooms and levees weary,
And suddenly she takes a fancy
To go off with her maid, Miss Nancy,
To Richmond, where
Is held a fair,
Where maidens work desiring;
Each year repair,
For farmers there,
Their dairy-maids are hiring.
Her cousin, Sir Tristan, the fair Harriet
Takes with her, for fear into trouble she'll get,
To protect her and Nancy from countrymen rough,
But Sir Tristan turns out a most miserable muff.
Now at Richmond fair, by chance it befell,
Were two nice young farmers—one called Lionel,
The other one Plunkett—who'd come there to see
About hiring girls to work in their dairy;
After looking about, they found none that would please,
When Lionel suddenly cried, "That's the cheese!"
No sooner on Harriet he clapped his eyes,
Than he instantly thought that she was just the size;
Then Harriet and Nancy hired out just for fun,
But, alas! when their bargain they wanted undone,
They found 'twas good earnest what they thought a joke,
And legal agreements not easily broke.
In vain t' escape and run away,
The poor young ladies tried,
They were popped into a wagon,
And forced to take a ride.
When they got to the ranch, what a fix they were in!
The farmers immediately set them to spin;
But Martha and Betsey, as they their girls call,
They find useless—in fact, they'll do nothing at all.
After keeping the girls up till past twelve at night,
Plunkett gets a candle and gives them a light,
To see to undress by and get into bed,
And finally into their room pops his head,
To tell them he quite expects they'll look alive,
And have breakfast for him and his brother at five.
Soon as the farmers to bed have gone,
Out of their room came these maids forlorn,
Repenting most thoroughly playing such tricks,
And getting themselves into such a bad fix.
Hark! At the window's heard a tapping!
What is it? Is't spirit rapping?
No. Sir Tristan, who's not such a muff after all,
At the risk of his neck, climbing over a wall,
Now climbs in the window, and tells them that he
Has made all arrangements for setting them free.
Of course the young ladies are willing to slope,
So out of the window they quickly elope;
A carriage and four's waiting outside the gate,
And Tristan drives off at a dence of a rate,
Just as Lionel, Plunkett and all on the farm,
Come rushing to see what has caused the alarm,
Which has set the dogs barking as if they were mad,
The loss they discover makes both very sad,
Their two pretty misses they suddenly miss,
And neither as yet's had so much as a kiss.
But, cut the story short I must,
All the op'ra 'll see, I trust.
Lady Harriet goes out hunting,
Lionel she meets, and he,
Being in love most deeply, swears that
She his own dear wife shall be.
Such a vow must needs alarm her,
Lady Harriet wed a farmer!
Goodness gracious!!
How audacious!!!
She says he must mistaken be,
But Lionel turns out to be
The only son of the Lord Derby.
Lady Harriet learns it. Hey day!
What a change it makes in my lady!
Then she's willing to marry him—quite;
But young Lord Derby treats her right,
When he finds she's really smitten.
He, in his turn, gives her the mitten.
Lady Harriet hits on a plan
By which she knows this nice young man
May be made to love her as much as before,
He knew he was rich—it will catch him, sure:
She reproduces the scene of the fair,
And dresses herself as a peasant,
Just as she did before at Richmond, where
The consequence proved so unpleasant.
When Lionel sees her as Martha once more,
He loves her, if anything, more than before,
And the end of the matter turns out very well,
Lady Harriet's married to young Lionel,
While her maid and young Plunkett, who mutually fancy
Each other, become one, so Plunkett and Nancy,
As well as the Lord and the Lady, get married,
And the maids from the fair whom the two farmers carried,
Though they ran from their masters, now hire for life,
For each of the maids is at length made a wife.

WE notice an advertisement offering for sale: "A well-located butcher shop, long established and doing a clever business." There's evidently a typographical error here—it should be a "cleaver" business; that is, a good business in chops.

THE Secessionists in California are rapidly hitching on to the Union wagon, and will probably, for the future, keep within the traces without giving Gen. McDowell the trouble of putting any more of them in Alcatraces.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

By the author of "Aurora Floyd," "Three Times Dead," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Doctor's Wife," "The Outcasts," etc.

SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS PUBLISHED.

Ensign Harcourt Lowther, a gentleman of culture, and Francis Tredethlyn, the hero, (the son of a Cornish farmer,) a soldier in the same regiment, who is detailed as a confidential servant to Ensign Lowther, have been stationed in Van Diemen s Land for five years. In boyhood Tredethlyn had fallen in love with his rich uncle's only child, "cousin Susy," and a secret engagement had taken place between them, which was afterwards broken off, and he enlisted. Although he had written frequently to his cousin he had received no response or any intelligence from home, until the story opens with the reception of information of the death of his miserly uncle and his inheritance of thirty thousand pounds a year. He departs for England to take possession of his inheritance.

Upon his arrival in England, his first action is a vain attempt to find his cousin Susan, who had been forbidden her father's house in a moment of stormy passion, to divide his fortune with her. His monied influence gains him an introduction into the family and social circle of Lionel Hillary, an apparently wealthy merchant, whose family consists of his only daughter, Maude, and her friend and companion, Miss Julia Desmond, both cultivated and prepossessing young ladies. Tredethlyn soon becomes enamored with Maude, though the consciousness of his social inferiority causes him to hide his passion and endeavor to subdue it. Dazzled and flattered by his new position, he is made an easy victim to the designs of Miss Desmond, who sees in his fortune an incentive to the exertion of all her arts with a view to a matrimonial alliance that will at once free her from her situation of dependency, and give her wealth and position. An avowal and declaration is forced from Tredethlyn at a designed interview, by the artful Miss Desmond, and they are engaged.

A panic now occurs in the mercantile affairs of Lionel Hillary, and ruin stares him in the face. His daughter, noticing his changed manners and sleepless nights, watches him, and prevents him from committing suicide; winning from him the avowal that twenty thousand pounds are immediately required to save him from failure, disgrace and poverty. She seeks the frank, good-hearted Tredethlyn, and, in an impassioned manner, appeals to him to rescue her father from his situation. This interview brings forth an equally impassioned declaration from Tredethlyn of his love for her, of his conscious unworthiness, and his willingness to bestow the whole of his fortune for her benefit, if necessary.

Miss Hillary is surprised, shocked and offended by this avowal, and is about retiring in anger, when Miss Desmond, who has overheard enough to obtain a clew to the purport of the interview, enters; charges Maude with mercenary motives in supplanting her, and Tredethlyn with infidelity, and declares all is cancelled between him and herself. Miss Desmond leaves the house early next morning without an explanation. Tredethlyn attempts an apology to Maude, who refuses to listen to him. He, disgusted by the troubles his fortune and new position have environed him with, determines to estrange himself from them and fly to London. The next day twenty thousand pounds are placed to the credit of Lionel Hillary at his banker's, from an anonymous source. The merchant is all gratitude; points to Tredethlyn as his benefactor, and speaks of him in the warmest terms to his daughter.

Tredethlyn seeks again in vain for his cousin Susan, though he learns she has been entrapped into a mock marriage by a villain, who deserted her, and that she then fled to London. Subsequently new meshes are thrown around our hero by the designing Lionel Hillary; ten thousand pounds more are obtained from him, and he is admitted a silent partner in the house of Hillary & Co. Maude, who was betrothed to Ensign Harcourt Lowther—Tredethlyn's old master—before he left England, is commanded by her father to break off all correspondence with him and to look with favor upon an alliance with Tredethlyn. A chance encounter occurs, and Maude's amiability paves the way for a new hope and a new declaration. Acceptance and marriage speedily follow.

Just previous to the marriage, Ensign Harcourt Lowther returns from Van Diemen's Land, and seeks an interview with Maude, only to learn from her own lips the story of her forced engagement. Learning the name of the affianced, he tells her of the old relation of master and man, and makes Maude pledge him not to reveal to Tredethlyn the secret of their earlier love and engagement. Nettled and stung by his jealousy and pride, he plans a cultured and villainous revenge. After the marriage occurs and Tredethlyn and wife have become engrafted into the fashionable circles of London, he seeks him out and installs himself into the graces of the young Cornishman, and becomes his inseperable companion and mentor, leading him gradually into (for Tredethlyn) the dangerous confines of vice and dissipation and widening more and more the gulf between him and Maude, who had become the "sensation," the leading fashionable wife of London, whose parties, receptions and dinners were notable for their extravagance.

Maude one day encountered Miss Julia Desmond, who is occupying the position of governess, seeks her forgiveness and tenders her a home. Julia, still rankling with jealous passion, refuses the offer, except as a hired companion. Maude humors her foible, but insists on her promising to come as a "friend." Envy and jealousy urging Julia to seek a proper opportunity to become aveuged, she dissembles and accepts.

Tredethlyn, sickened by the constant round of gay and dissipated life, is withdrawn from the dangerous highways by the discovery of his cousin, whom he encounters one night as a supernumerary of one of the London theatres. He seeks an interview, with the determination of bestowing on her a portion of that fortune, which his innate convictions have always told him should have been hers.

Harcourt Lowther continues his daily visits to the house of Tredethlyn, and is constantly poisoning the wife's mind by noting the husband's absence and inventing excuses for him with the mock morality of a "Joseph Surface. Tredethlyn has a secret which calls him frequently from town during the day, which excites Lowther's curiosity, but his efforts to discover it are fruitless. The greater portion of Tredethlyn's time, however, is spent in the old way, with cards, at the race-track, and in dissipation, under Lowther's guidance.

CHAPTER XXX.

THE TWO ANTIPHOLI.

It was while the schemer was waiting that an event occurred which had some influence upon the current of his life.

His elder brother, heir to all that Robert Lowther, of Lowther Hall, Hampshire, had to leave, and expectant heir to the more important possessions of a very wealthy maiden aunt, returned unexpectedly from Belgium, where he had been established for some time as a member of the Corps Diplomatique, and dropped unannounced into Mr. Lowther's lodging while that gentleman was lounging over his breakfast.

The meeting between the two brothers was not remarkable for its enthusiasm. Roderick Lowther strolled lazily into the room, dropped into an easy chair, and indulged in a long leisurely stretch and a loud yawn before he addressed his astonished relative.

"Didn't expect to see me yet awhile, did you, old boy? Been travelling all night, and feel as if my bones were not so much bones as rheumatism—some fellow says something like that in a book, doesn't he? Came over in the Baron Osy; very bad passage, jolting and tumbling about all night, waves mountains high, as people say in books. So you've cut the line, dear boy, and are living on the proceeds of your commission. I suppose? The warrior blood of the Lowthers who fought at Bosworth and Flodden seems to have lost a little of its fiery quality in filtering through three centuries of country gentlemen. There was a Lowther who distinguished himself at bloody Malplaquet, by-the-by, and another was with young General Wolfe on the heights of Quebec. But we've done with all that now-a-days. We are peacefully disposed, and sell out on the earliest opportunity; and we steal a march on our beloved brother, and come home on the quiet to cultivate our maiden aunt."

"That's a lie," replied Harcourt, very coolly. "I haven't been near her since I came home."

"What did you come home for, then?" asked the other. "You came for something."

The two men looked at each other. They were very much alike. There was the same steelly light in the blue eyes, the same tight contraction of the thin lips. The elder looked at the younger with a glance of shrewd inquiry. The younger looked back sulky defiance.

"Come," said the traveller, after a second leisurely stretch, and a second prolonged yawn, "what is it, then, the little game? Say, my friend. You didn't sell out of her Majesty's service without a motive, and you didn't come home without a motive. By Jove! you never did anything without a motive. You are a schemer, my dear Harcourt. The schemer is born, and not made, and he must obey his instincts. Dear boy, I know your organization, and in these days of physiological science no man can keep himself quite dark. "Iago" would have been a failure if "Othello" had studied his Lavater. Be candid, Harcourt, and tell me what noble vessel, laden with the spoils of a new Peru, flaunts her white sails upon the wind, and invites the attention of the pirate."

"You are so deuced confiding yourself, that you've a right to demand another fellow's confidence," Harcourt responded, moodily. "When I want your help, I'll tell you my secrets. That has been your way of managing matters, I believe."

"My Harcourt bears malice!" exclaimed Roderick. "Antipholus of Ephesus reproaches Antipholus of Syracuse. Dear boy, I suppose, it's our misfortune to be too much alike. Perhaps, if you won't give me your confidence, you will at least oblige me with a chop. There was an atmosphere of smoky chimneys and warm train oil on board the Baron which incapacitated me for breakfast."

Mr. Lowther the elder possessed himself of the teapot, and appropriated his brother's breakfast-cup, while Harcourt rang the bell, and gave an order for additional rolls and chops.

"I didn't know you were coming to England," Mr. Lowther the younger said, after a pause, in which he had stared moodily at his brother.

"I suppose not," answered the other: "and I can't say that the heartiness of your welcome is very encouraging to the returning prodigal. However, as I have not been in these dominions for the last three years or more, and as my father and I are not the best friends—there's nothing so economical for a parent as a long-standing quarrel with all his children, by the way—I shall look to you, my dear Harcourt, for any friendly offices I may require. I have three months' leave of absence, and I have not—le sou. I come to England to recuperate, as brother Jonathan has it. I want to get on the blind side of my beloved aunt to the tune of a few hundreds; and I want to marry an heiress."

"Oh," said Harcourt, thoughtfully, "you want to marry an heiress?"

"Yes: can you help me to do it?"

"I think not."

"Humph! perhaps if I could make it worth your while to assist me, you'd tell another story. However, you can introduce me to some nice people, I suppose?"

Harcourt nodded, moodily.

"And I must look up my own old set. Not that I know many people, for I lived such a hide-and-seek sort of a life when I was in England. Can you get me rooms in this house? We can economize, you know. I left my portmanteaus on board the Baron. I suppose there's a boots, or a somebody of the scout species appertaining to this establishment, who can take a cab, and fetch them for me?"

Thus unceremoniously did Antipholus of Syracuse establish himself in the abode of his ungracious brother. Frankenstein, pursued by the monster of his creation, could scarcely have seemed more ill at ease than Harcourt Lowther under the infliction of his brother's society. Was it that these men were too much alike? Did Harcourt think that the keen eyes of his brother would follow every thread in the intricate network of his scheme, and the subtle brain of his brother would apply itself to plotting against him?

But the coolness so apparent in Harcourt's reception of the returning wanderer made no impression whatever on that gentleman. Roderick Lowther stretched his long legs upon his brother's hearth-rug, and smoked his brother's cigars, with a serene indifference as to his brother's feelings.

"If you dine anywhere to-day you can take me with you," he said, blandly; "and to-morrow I'll introduce you to a splendid set of fellows at the 'Traveller's.' You haven't thought of an heiress yet, I suppose?"

"No."

"Ah, you'll hit upon something in that way presently, I daresay, if you run your mind's eye over your visiting list. I'm in no hurry. Three months is a small eternity in these days of railroads and photography."

"And you really would marry?" said Harcourt, again very thoughtfully.

"Really would? Of course I would, if I could get the chance of making an advantageous match, and propitiate my aunt Dorothea by the sacrifice. You know how bent the prudent old lady has always been on my making a great marriage, and restoring the forgotten glories of the Lowthers. Yes, Harcourt, I come prepared for victory, and I trust to your brotherly friendship to help me to see and conquer."

"Humph! By-the-by, I suppose you have heard nothing of—"

"Not a word," answered Roderick, rather hastily; "I know what you're going to talk about, and as that's rather an unpleasant subject to me, we may as well agree to avoid it. I wrote a letter, candid, explanatory and so forth; promising to do what I considered my duty. I don't profess to be a generous man, and I freely acknowledge that I'm a very poor one; so the modest annual sum, which I considered my duty, was——well, very modest! However, the letter was unanswered. People drop through, you see," concluded Mr. Lowther the elder, blowing away a slender puff of blue vapor, as if he had been blowing away a troublesome subject; "and when people do, of their own election, drop through, I can't see that it's any fellow's duty to dig them up again. You haven't heard anything, I suppose?"

"Not a word."

"Fortunate for you! Sometimes that sort of person fastens on to one's relations. However, as I observed before, we'll agree to avoid the subject. Suppose we discuss your affairs?"

"I had much rather we did not."

"Of course, dear boy; but as I am candidly disposed myself, I don't mean to be kept in the dark by the most saturnine of brothers whoever sulked in the face of an amiable relative. You used to be engaged to an heiress—something in the Moorgate street line—Australian merchandise, wasn't it? a Miss Hillersdon, or Hillary, eh, dear boy? There used to be something of that sort on the cards, I believe?"

"There used to be, but there has ceased to be for the last twelve months. Will that do for you?"

"Ah, Miss Hillersdon—of Hillary—has jilted you, I suppose?"

"She has."

"And the man she has married—"

"Is my very good friend, the happy possessor of a charming wife and a large fortune, and the man at whose house I dine to-day."

"Oh!" exclaimed Roderick Lowther, lengthening the ejaculation to its extremest capacity of extension—"oh, I think I begin to understand your policy. Miss Hillary has married a rich man, and you are intimate with the husband and au mieux with the wife. The husband is a sickly fellow—consumptive—apoplectic, eh, dear boy?"

"The husband is something over six feet high, and has the shoulders of a lifeguardsman; and, if it were not for his dissipated habits, might live to be ninety."

"Ah, if it were not for his dissipated habits. And you are his intimate friend? My dear Harcourt, what a very transparent game you are playing! and what a consummate fool you must be if you supposed that I shouldn't see through it! Why not a bond of union between us—all for one and one for all, like Dumas's musketeers? Help me to find an heiress, and I'll help you auprés de Mrs. —— what's the lady's name, by-the-by?"

Harcourt Lowther allowed this last piece of information to be screwed out of him, and parted with it as grudgingly as he had parted with the rest. It is not a pleasant thing, when you are playing a very difficult game with the odds against you, to have an inconvenient brother swooping down upon you and insisting on looking over your hand.

There was no affection between these two brothers; the likeness which they bore to each other, morally as well as physically, seemed to have a blighting influence upon their relations. They knew each other, and they distrusted each other. Perhaps it would have been scarcely too much to say they hated each other.

But they went out to dinner together nevertheless, and Harcourt smilingly introduced his brother to Mrs. Tredethlyn and Miss Desmond. They had plenty of time to grow quite intimate in the drawing-room while they were waiting for Francis, who came in, flushed with a hurried toilet, at ten minutes to eight. He had been absent upon one of his mysterious excursions a little way out of town.

Roderick Lowther was received very graciously by the two ladies, and cordially welcomed by Mr. Tredethlyn. Harcourt, watching his brother ensconced in a nook of Maude's favorite ottoman, and discoursing at his ease upon Belgian notabilities, was troubled by dark misgivings of danger.

"I must find the fellow a quarry for himself," he thought, "or he'll be trying to stalk my game. He asks me to introduce him to an eligible parti as coolly as if life were a five-act comedy, with the traditional heiress always waiting to fall a prey to the traditional adventurer. An heiress! in these days of marvellous commercial successes there must be such things as heiresses. But the question is where to look for them."

One of Mr. Tredethlyn's pompous retainers opened the drawing-room door at this moment, and announced:

"Mr. and Miss Grunderson."

"Egad!" thought Harcourt Lowther, "there's the solution of my difficulty. Why not Miss Grunderson? Miss Grunderson is an heiress, or ought to be, if there is stability in any part of the commercial universe."

A young lady with a very rosy face, a young lady decidedly inclined to that quality which in the fair sex is elegantly entitled embonpoint, a young lady who was surrounded by surging flounces of pink aerophane, dotted about with more pink rose-buds and larger full-blown roses than were ever worn by any young lady with a judicious recollection of the sweeps on May-day, bounced into the room, and bounced up to Mrs. Tredethlyn; while an elderly gentleman, who was evidently the young lady's papa, beamed mildly at the company across an enormous expanse of embroidered shirt-front and black waistcoat.

But in the network that Harcourt Lowther has woven Miss Grunderson is destined to be considerably entangled, and deserves to be introduced more ceremoniously in a fresh chapter.

(To be continued.)

Piracy.—Piracy was, in early times, a favorite and fashionable pursuit. One of the most celebrated pirates of the Northern seas was a princess, Alvilda, the daughter of a Gothic king, who, according to the legend, embraced the occupation of a sea-rover, to relieve herself from a marriage which was sought to be imposed upon her, contrary to her inclination, with Alf, a Danish Prince. She habited herself in male costume, and selected as her rowers and crew a band of Amazonian damsels, who assumed the same attire. Touching at a strange port in one of her first cruises, she met an association of male pirates, who were bewailing the death of their leader, and, captivated by the gallant bearing of the heroine, they chose her as their chief. Thus reinforced, she became so formidable in her depredations, that her former suitor was sent to encounter her, and a fierce contest ensued at sea, in which, after vigorously repulsing for a time his warlike assaults, Alf at length boarded her bark, and, having slain numbers of her crew, she became his prisoner. The princess wore a casque which concealed her face; he raised it, and recognizing his former fair one, she fainted in his arms, and on his again offering her his hand she became his bride. A lawless spirit of piracy was created in the reign of Elizabeth by the very men, "the marines of England," who overthrew the Armada, and who, in their retaliatory reprisals upon Spain, acquired the name of "The Sea-hawks." Although the silent waters kept secret many of their deeds, we blush while we acknowledge that to them may be traced the origin of negro slavery, and many of their descendants became planters and slave-dealers. The French applied the term flibustier, which was adopted from our word "free-booter," and which has been since corrupted into "filli-buster," to the sea-robber of the West Indian seas. The appellation "buccaneer," by which a celebrated class of pirates was known, is of curious derivation: The American Indians had taught the early colonists a mode of curing the flesh of cattle, which, when cured, they called boucan; this the French settlers converted into the verb "boucaner," to dry red without salt; and this food becoming the usual sea provision of those depradators, they obtained the name of buccaneers. The subjects of Christian powers having been permitted and even encouraged to pursue their piratical inroads on Spanish trade, combined with the natural jealousies of states, may, perhaps, account for those same powers having so long endured the atrocities of an organized and it may even be called a legalized system of piracy by the barbarians of the Northern African shores. Even Great Britain, to the disgrace of our ancestors, entered into formal treaties with them, and our national connivance was constantly purchased by presents from their Deys of barbs and Arabian horses to our sovereigns.

In the "Hospital of Incurables," at Naples, there is at present an old woman who is suffering from a strange disease. Every day she eats at least five pounds of roast meat, seventy eggs, several loaves, and other food, of course including a good quantity of macaroni. When attempts are made to reduce her diet, she raves like a mad woman. She has what William Burch would pronounce rather a "healthy appetite," for an "incurable."

POLITENESS, INSULAR AND CONTINENTAL.

[The following extracts are from an article under the above title in London Society:]

THE ETIQUETTE OF BALLS.

At French balls, it is allowable to ask a lady to dance without being formally introduced to her—which has both more convenience and more common sense than our strict exigence of a presentation. In good society, nobody is supposed to be invited who is not fit company for the other guests. Any gentlemen, therefore, present is supposed to be an eligible, or at least a permissable partner for any lady. At any rate—says The Habits—if a gentleman in France comes up to a lady and asks her to dance, she must not reply, as a celebrated English beauty once did at the Tuileries: "I have not the pleasure of your acquaintance," by which she acquired the reputation of very bad breeding.

Invitations to a ball should be sent out at least a fortnight beforehand, to give time for the preparation of the ladies' dresses. Too brief an invitation looks as if the party invited were merely a stop-gap, an after-thought to fill up the vacancy caused by other refusals, or even as if they were not wished to come. When an invitation cannot be accepted, it should be declined with thanks and expressions of regret at the earliest possible opportunity.

The host and hostess ought to contrive that every lady, young or not young, plain or pretty, be asked to dance. Youngsters, ambitious of making their way in society, will render good service in the matter of wall flowers.

Dance as other people dance; neither better nor worse.

After dancing, you may not lead a lady to any other seat than that which she occupied before.

Do not delay asking a lady to dance until the orchestra has already struck up.

Never remain at a ball till daylight, unless you wish to be painfully undeceived in respect to both good looks and dress. You do not take leave of your hosts on quitting a ball, but call or drop a card within a fortnight afterwards. It is quite enough for the entertainers to undergo the fatigue of receiving. The quietest way of quitting is the best. Apropos to which, and what to avoid, take the following:

A German lady, who had been to Paris—what circles she frequented, I cannot specify—was making a call on a friend in Frankfort. Wishing to show that she had profited by her travels, when she rose to take leave, she hunted about the room for her pocket-handkerchief, without paying attention to anybody present, but upsetting tables and smashing one or two China ornaments.

"Good heavens, madame, what are you about?" cried the lady of the house.

"I am leaving the room, madame, a la Francaise."

AMATEUR MUSIC.

If you are asked to sing or play, either do it at once, without requiring to be pressed, or don't do it all. Be very cautious about doing it. In the first place, be sure that you can do it. It is painful to see a young gentleman looking up to the ceiling for the remainder of the words of the song, or feeling for them in his hair, and not finding them; it is provoking to hear a pianist break down in a passage through defective memory or execution. Secondly, be sure of your style, especially in accustomed circles. What is considered very fine in one set, may be thought very commonplace in another. What is relished in London, may not suit Paris; what is applauded in Berlin, may be coldly listened to by Italian ears.

While music is being executed—whether in the good or the bad sense of the word—talking is not polite; humming the air is a nuisance to others; beating time is absurd, because you will mostly beat it wrong; and exaggerated applause and admiration ridiculous. The last demonstration has been carried in Paris to a degree which it would be difficult to surpass. A certain pianist had ladies in his pay, at the rate of twenty-five francs per concert, whose duty was to faint with delight at his inimitable performance. One evening, however, a lady, paid to faint, deserted her post by falling asleep. Reckoning on the fainting of this female to interrupt the finale of a concerto, the pianist started his allegro at a speed impossible for human fingers to continue. But no fainting came to his relief. What could he do in that calamity? He did what the lady ought to have done, and fainted himself; people crowded round him; they carried him out of the room. The fainteress, waking, really fainted through vexation at having forgotten to faint.

PERILS OF THE DEMI-MONDE.

The above are errors occurring in respectable society, in The World, Le Monde; there are others to be warned against. The Demi-Monde is a bottomless pitfall.

However hard up a young man abroad—say in Paris—may be for means of amusing his after-dinner hours, it is an error for him to suppose that he will come to anything but grief by associating with the persons known as lorettes. It is impossible to ignore the existence of a class which has furnished a heroine to her Majesty's and other musical theatres; better is it to speak the truth about them. The Dame aux Camellias of Dumas' novel, and the Traviata of Verdi's opera, are as unlike real nature as the mermaid or the sphynx. Filles de Marbre, Hearts of Stone, is the aptest title ever applied to them.

The author of La Nouvelle Babylon informs us that there are not two lorettes in Paris. There is but one—her sketched by Gavarni—the same countenance, the same spirit. Of this type there are innumerable duplicates, as like to each other as the herrings in a barrel. The only way of distinguishing them, morally, would be to ticket them No. 1, No. 2, up to No. 1001.

With the experience of age united to the audacity of youth, the lorette, ever greedy after her prey, is mistress of herself on the field of battle; on her forehead you read the word "Defiance." Woe be to the man who loves her; she will ruin him with unsparing determination. Woe be to him who offends her; she will not wait long for her revenge.

"Are you expert with the small sword?" a lorette inquired of a young man who was warmly attached to her.

"Tolerably. But why?"

"You must quarrel with the Marquis de C., and kill him."

"But why should I quarrel with him? I don't even know him."

"You will fight him; if not, adieu!"

Not long afterwards, a couple of hackney carriages, at daybreak, rolled silently over the snowy road, and stealthily entered the Bois de Boulogne.

Two men got out of them, each accompanied by a couple of friends. They crossed swords, at first with great circumspection, each studying his adversary's mode of fence Suddenly the arm of one darted to its full length, like a projectile. The Marquis de C. clapped his hand to his heart, and uttered a stifled cry. He tottered, set one step backwards, and fell with his whole weight into his second's arms. He gazed on his vanquisher with glassy eyes, and asked: "I never saw you before last night; why have you killed me?"

"Because that woman would have it so."

This is not an imaginary anecdote. Out of nine duels fought in Paris, eight are sure to be for a lorette; and she mostly has something to do with the ninth.

The Confusion of Tongues.—A writer in Chambers' Journal says: "A worthy pair of very untravelled Britons came over lately to see the sights of Paris; and while doing the lions conscientiously they arrived in front of the Chamber of Deputies, on which is engraved in large letters, 'Corps Legislatif.' 'What place is that, my dear?' inquired the lady. 'That,' replied her husband, 'is Corps'——beginning to read, and pronouncing the word 'corpse.' 'Ah,' interrupted she, 'come away! That must be the Morgue, where the dead bodies are. I would not go in for the world!' In Germany curious misunderstandings take place, and, on the part of the natives, are even more prevalent than in France, for the following reason: A Frenchman, unless absolutely forced to do it, will seldom try to speak a foreign language. He is much too fond of his own, thoroughly convinced of its triumphant superiority to every other language under the sun, to willingly lend his lips to any barbarian utterance. A German, on the contray, loves to speak foreign tongues, especially English, even if he knows but half a dozen words of it. I remember once having to consult a good little German doctor, who was extremely proud of his knowledge of our language. Now, his German I understood perfectly, but his English was a great mystery. My daughter had a bad cough, and I requested him to prescribe for her. 'De Fraulein,' he said, after some consideration, 'must drink de milk of geese; de milk of geese will be very goot for the Fraulein.' 'Well, doctor,' I said, trying to keep my countenance, 'I daresay it would be very good, but I'm afraid it would be very difficult to procure.' 'No, no, no; not diffeecolt at all. You do say to de geese to come, and de people dey do bring de geese to your door, and dey do milk dem, and it cost ver leetle moneys, and it is excellent for de chest.' What the man meant I could not imagine. The more he continued to extol the virtues of the 'milk of geese,' the more mystified did I become. At length his meaning flashed upon me. In German, geiss is a goat, and geiss milch is goat's milk; so the worthy doctor imagined that of the latter words, 'milk of geese' was a most classic rendering. In German, the verb bekommen means to get or to receive. One day a lady asked an English-speaking German what would be the best method of ascending one of the Seven Mountains. 'Oh,' he replied, 'it is very easy. You do go in de train from Bonn, and you do cross de Rhine at Konigswinter, and den you do all become donkeys!' An advertisement of these said animals, for the benefit of English tourists, was couched in the following terms: 'Pious donkeys can be hired here.' In German, the word fromm, when applied to a person, means pious; when to an animal, tame, gentle. Hence arose the ludicrous blunder."

A new lady violinist has appeared at Milan. She is a Signora Arditi, a sister of the well-known orchestra director.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[All letters for this department should be addressed to Mr. Mark Twain, who has been detailed from the editorial staff to conduct it. Courting Etiquette, Distressed Lovers, of either sex, and Struggling Young Authors, as yet "unbeknowu" to Fame, will receive especial attention]

Discarded Lover—"I loved and still love, the beautiful Edwitha Howard, and intended to marry her. Yet during my temporary absence at Benicia, last week, alas! she married Joues. Is my happiness to be thus blasted for life? Have I no redress?"

Of course you have. All the law, written and unwritten, is on your side. The intention and not the act constitutes crime—in other words, coustitutes the deed. If you call your bosom friend a fool, and intend it for an insult, it is an insult; but if you do it playfully, and meaning no insult, it is not an insult. If you discharge a pistol accidentally, and kill a man, you can go free, for you have done no murder—but if you try to kill a man, and manifestly intend to kill him, but fail utterly to do it, the law still holds that the intention constituted the crime, and you are guilty of murder. Ergo, if you had married Edwitha accidentally, and without really intending to do it, you would not actually be married to her at all, because the act of marriage could not be complete without the intention. And, ergo, in the strict spirit of the law, since you deliberately intended to marry Edwitha, and didn't do it, you are married to her all the same—because, as I said before, the intention constitutes the crime. It is as clear as day that Edwitha is your wife, and your redress lies in taking a club and mutilating Jones with it as much as you can. Any man has a right to protect his own wife from the advances of other men. But you have another alternative—you were married to Edwitha first, because of your deliberate intention, and now you can prosecute her for bigamy, in subsequently marrying Joues. But there is another phase in this complicated case: You intended to marry Edwitha, and consequently, according to law, she is your wife—there is no getting around that—but she didn't marry you, and if she never intended to marry you you are not her husband, of course. Ergo, in marrying Jones, she was guilty of bigamy, because she was the wife of another man at the time—which is all very well as far as it goes—but then, don't you see, she had no other husband when she married Jones, and consequently she was not guilty of bigamy. Now according to this view of the case, Jones married a spinster, who was a widow at the same time and another man's wife at the same time, and yet who had no husband and never had one, and never had any intention of getting married, and therefore, of course, never had been married; and by the same reasoning you are a bachelor, because you have never been any one's husband, and a married man because you have a wife living, and to all intents and purposes a widower, because you have been deprived of that wife, and a consummate ass for going off to Benicia in the first place, while things were so mixed. And by this time I have got myself so tangled up in the intricacies of this extraordinary case that I shall have to give up any further attempt to advise you—I might get confused and fail to make myself understood. I think I could take up the argument where I left off, and by following it closely awhile, perhaps I could prove to your satisfaction, either that you never existed at all, or that you are dead, now, and consequently don't need the faithless Edwitha—I think I could do that, if it would afford you any comfort.

Mr. Mark Twain—Sir: I wish to call your attention to a matter which has come to my notice frequently, but before doing so, I may remark, en passant, that I don't see why your parents should have called you Mark Twain; had they known your ardent nature, they would doubtless have named you Water-less Twain. However, Mark what I am about to call your attention to, and I do so knowing you to be "capable and honest" in your inquiries after truth, and that you can fathom the mysteries of Love. Now I want to know why, (and this is the object of my enquiry,) a man should proclaim his love in large gilt letters over his door and in his windows. Why does he do so? You may have noticed in the Russ House Block, one door south of the hotel entrance an inscription thus: "I Love Land." Now if this refers to real estate he should not say "love;" he should say "like." Very true, in speaking of one's native soil, we say, "Yes, my native land I love thee," but I am satisfied that even if you could suppose this inscription had any remote reference to a birthplace, it does not mean a ruuch or eligibly-situated town site. Why does he do it? why does he?

Yours, without prejudice, Nomme de Plume.

Now, did it never strike this sprightly Frenchman that he could have gone in there and asked the man himself "why he does it," as easily as he could write to me on the subject? But no matter—this is just about the weight of the important questions usually asked of editors and answered in the "Correspondents' Column;" sometimes a man asks how to spell a difficult word—when he might as well have looked in the dictionary; or he asks who discovered America—when he might have consulted history; or he asks who in the mischief Cain's wife was—when a moment's reflection would have satisfied him that nobody knows and nobody cares—at least, except himself. The Frenchman's little joke is good, though, for doubtless "Quarter-less twain," would sound like "Water-less twain," if uttered between two powerful brandy punches. But as to why the man in question loves land—I cannot imagine, unless his constitution resembles mine, and he don't love water.

Arabella.—No, neither Mr. Dan Setchell nor Mr. Gottschalk are married. Perhaps it will interest you to know that they are both uncommonly anxious to marry, however. And perhaps it will interest you still more to know that in case they do marry, they will doubtless wed females; I hazard this, because, in discussing the question of marrying, they have uniformly expressed a preference for your sex. I answer your inquiries concerning Miss Adelaide Phillips in the order in which they occur, by number, as follows: I. No. II. Yes. III. Perhaps. IV. "Scasely."

Persecuted Unfortunate.—You say you owe six months' board, and you have no money to pay it with, and your land lord keeps harrassing you about it, and you have made all the excuses and explanations possible, and now you are at a loss what to say to him in future. Well, it is a delicate matter to offer advice in a case like this, but your distress impels me to make a suggestion, at least, since I cannot venture to do more. When he next importunes you, how would it do to take him impressively by the hand and ask, with simulated emotion, "Monsieur Jean, votre chien, comme se porte-il?" Doubtless that is very bad French, but you'll find that it will answer just as well as the unadulterated article.

Arthur Augustus.—No, you are wrong; that is the proper way to throw a brickbat or a tomahawk, but it doesn't answer so well for a boquet—you will hurt somebody if you keep it up. Turn your nosegay upside down, take it by the stems, and toss it with an upward sweep—did you ever pitch quoits?—that is the idea. The practice of recklessly heaving immense solid boquets, of the general size and weight of prize cabbages, from the dizzy altitude of the galleries, is dangerous and very reprehensible. Now, night before last, at the Academy of Music, just after Signorina Sconcia had finished that exquisite melody, "The Last Rose of Summer," one of these floral pile-drivers came cleaving down through the atmosphere of applause, and if she hadn't deployed suddenly to the right, it would have driven her into the floor like a shingle-nail. Of course that boquet was well-meant, but how would you have liked to have been the target? A sincere compliment is always grateful to a lady, so long as you don't try to knock her down with it.

(For the Californian.)

HAZEL.

(CORYLUS AVELLANA.)

THE first mention that we find of the Hazel is in the Bible, in Genesis, xxx., 37. The hazel-nut was known both to the Greeks and Romans; the latter, especially, frequently mention it. The filbert is said to have been brought originally from Pontus, whence it was called by the Romans, Nux Pontica. The Hazel, or Nux Avellana, we are told by Virgil, in the Georgics, was considered by the Romans to be as injurious to the vines, on account of its spreading roots, as the goat was for its propensity to browse on the young shoots; and the keepers of the vineyards used to sacrifice the goat to Bacchus, and roast its entrails on hazel spits. Corylus is said to be derived from Korus, a helmet, the fruit appearing as if covered with a bonnet; and, according to others, from the Greek word Karun, a nut. Avellana is named from Avellino, a city in Naples, where these nuts were extensively cultivated, and were called Nux Avellana. Hazel is from the Anglo-Saxon word Hæsil. In the dark ages, the hazel was valued for its supposed divining powers. Evelyn says that the "venerable and sacred fabric of Glastonburg, founded by Joseph of Arimathea, is storied to have been first composed of a few hazel rods, interwoven about a few stakes driven into the ground."

The nut has been cultivated for its fruit since the time of the Romans, who, according to Sir William Temple, called Scotland, Caledonia, from Cal-Dun, the hill of hazel. On the continent, the hazel is grown in large quantities in Spain and in some parts of Italy; the fruit from the former country is celebrated throughout Europe. The situation for the growth of the hazel in perfection is on hill-sides, in reddish brown mold, but, like most other hardy shrubs, will grow in any common soil where there is not stagnant water. When trained to a single stem it makes a beautiful tree, being one of the first to flower in the spring, with its long pendulous catkins and pretty foliage. The Troubadors and old French romance writers have scarcely a song that does not allude to the hazel bush or hazel-nut. Our own poets have also been lavish on the same theme. Cowley mentions that the hazel is the favorite resort of the squirrel:

——"Upon whose nutty top
A squirrel sits, and wants no other shade
Than what by his own spreading tail is made;
He culls the soundest, dext'rously picks out
The kernels sweet, and throws the shells about."

Thompson, in his "Spring," describes birds as building

——"Among the roots
Of hazel, pendent o'er the plaintive stream," and in his "Autumn," the lover searching for "the clustering nuts" for his fair one, and where he finds them:

——"Amid the secret shade;
And where they burnish on the topmost bough
With active vigor crushes down the tree;
Or shakes them ripe from resigning husk,
A glossy shower, and of an ardent brown."

Gray, in his "Shepherds' Week," alludes to the magic powers supposed to be possessed by the hazel-nut:

"Two hazel-nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
This, with the loudest bounce me sore amazed;
That, with a flame of brightest color blazed,
As blazed the nut, so may thy passion grow,
For 'twas thy nut that did so brightly glow."

From this custom of burning nuts in this manner on All-Hollow's Eve, that day (the 31st of October) has received in some parts of the country, the vulgar appellation of Nut-crack Night. Burns alludes to this in his "Halloween:"

"Among the bonny winding banks
Where Doon rins wimpling, clear,
Where Bruce once ruled the martial ranks
An' shook the Carrick spear—
Some merry, friendly, countra folks
Together did convene,
To burn their nuts, an' pou their stocks
And haud their Halloween
Fu' blythe that night."

The following pretty lines on this subject were printed in a collection of poems printed at Dublin in 1801:

"These glowing nuts are emblems true
Of what in human life we view;
The ill-matched couple fret and fume,
And thus in strife themselves consume;
Or from each other wildly start,
And with a noise forever part.
But see the happy, happy pair,
Of genuine love and truth sincere;
With mutual fondness, while they burn,
Still to each other kindly turn;
And as the vital sparks decay,
Together quietly sink away;
Till life's fierce ordeal being past,
Their mingled ashes rest at last."

Burns leads us down many a hazelly path, where "twin nuts cluster thick," and we almost hear:

"The little birdies blythely sing,
While o'er their heads the hazel hing,
Or lightly flit on wanton wing,
In the birks of Aberfeldy."

Shakspeare, in the Taming of the Shrew, says: "Kate, like the hazel twig, is straight and slender, and brown in hue as hazel-nuts and sweeter than the kernels."

Dryden asks:

"Why sit we not beneath the graceful shade
Which hazels, intermingled with elms, have made?"

There was a time when men were not united by any common tie, when the mother would deprive her son of the wild fruit with which he wished to appease his hunger, and if misfortune united them for a moment, the sudden sight of an oak laden with acorns, or a beech covered with beech-mast, rendered them enemies. At that period, the earth was filled with horror; there was no law, no religion, no language; man was utterly ignorant of his nature—his reason slept, and he was often seen more cruel than the ferocious beasts whose frightful howling he imitated.

According to ancient mythology the gods had pity on the human race. Apollo and Mercury exchanged presents and came down upon the earth. The god of harmony received from the son of Maia a tortoise-shell, of which he made a lyre, and gave in return a branch of hazel, which had the power of making virtue beloved and of reuniting hearts divided by hatred and envy. Thus armed the two sons of Jupiter presented themselves to men. Apollo first sang that eternal wisdom which had created the universe; he told how the elements were produced, and how every part of nature was united by the sweet bonds of love, and finally he taught men they should appease the anger of the gods by adoration and praise. At his voice, pale and trembling mothers were seen advancing with their little children in their arms, hunger was suspended, and thirst for vengeance fled from every heart. Then Mercury touched mankind with the wand Apollo had given him. He loosened their tongues and taught them to express their thoughts by words; he afterwards told them that union made strength, and that nothing could be derived from the earth without mutual labors. Filial piety and patriotic love were brought into action by his eloquence to unite the human race, and commerce he made the bond of the world. His last thought was the most sublime, for it was consecrated to the gods, and he told mankind that they might become equal with the gods by deeds of love and beneficence. Ornamented with two light wings, and serpents entwining themselves around it, the hazel wand presented to the god of eloquence by the god of harmony is still, under the name of Mercury's wand, the symbol of peace, commerce and reconcilliation. Iris.

We have had no dispatches from the East during the week.

(For the Californian.)

A LEGEND OF THE BLUE-BIRDS.

WITH having seen it brace its little wings
Upon the verge of Winter and the Spring;
With having seen it floating in the mists
That bind the wounded Spring from Winter's roughness;
With having found it often in the gloom
Of some wild forest; (for a hollow tree
Is all its tomb, and lichen is its pall;)
With having thought upon the floating bird,
The verge of snows, and flowers, and of the tomb,
The woody-tomb and lichen—for all this:
It is no legend I have gleaned from books,
It is no marvel coming from the seas
And the far isles, sung by the singing winds;
But only this that I have gathered from dreams,
With dreaming of the matter: So I find,
For fleeing early that sweet budding south
And floating northward, (since the times are cold,
And white the field for snowy drift and sleet,
And white the hollow arches of the wood,)
The harm of chilliness and the fright of cold
Hath driven the winged wanderer nigher the sun,
Nigher for warmth's sake; the numb bird is caught,
Is tangled, floating, seeking the sun's warmth
Among the heaven's blueness, and the cloud
Hath lost a part of blueness, for the bird
Hath caught a tuft of blueness on its wings
For having flung its wings among the mists
In sport and joy, of warmth. Lo! there was spray
Of sunlight beating at the eastern verges
Of the cloud-gardens in flaky-seas of gold.
A dream hath woven the story.

So the bird,
For having wandered all among the blue
Of God's own heaven, bears the badge of light,
The banner of angels, all upon its wings,
And on its bosom tintings of the cloud,
The bluest blueness of the gardens of heaven,
Where bloom the stars, where spring the founts of dew.

So hath the delicate bird its color caught.
And was it God that drew the creature up,
Nearer himself, through many mists and vapors;
Nearer himself, that the numb bird was blent?

Come, little bird! and dip thy wings in skies
As fair as ours, and let thy bosom cleave
The clear blue ripples of our drifting clouds.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

(For the Californian.)

LUNACY IN BUSINESS CIRCLES.

WE cull the following amazing extracts from the Weekly Stock Circular, of this city:

"The financial condition of certain companies is now, and has been for two months past, much less flattering than the public were led to believe, and their net earnings for thirty or sixty days hence will be absolutely required to liquidate obligations incurred in the payment of dividends to stockholders. A different policy must prevail hereafter, or the public will have no confidence in the future management of these companies. Heavy losses have been sustained by many dealers, and they seem now fully conscious of the folly and insecurity of blindly entrusting their interests to the hands of others, whose incapacity, dishonesty or impudence, unwatched or unguarded against, may at any time involve them in ruin. There has been, unquestionably, a radical defect in this business somewhere, and we may take it for granted that any board of trustees or directors that shuns the light of full and free investigation, and refuses to parties interested such disclosures as are necessary to a correct and proper understanding of the affairs of the corporation whose servants they are, deserve no confidence, and are actuated by sinister motives."

* * * * * * *

"The Yellow Jacket mine looks well, and the average yield is 200 tons per day, but the debt is $130,000. The last dividend ought to have been applied to the debt of the Company."

* * * * * * *

"The indebtedness of the Savage Company upon the payment of their May dividend, exceeded $80,000, and at this time their liabilities amount to $100,000. This latter does not include obligations to be incurred in the completion of the new hoisting works."

If this style of doing business does not imply either lunacy—or imbecility—on the part of mining companies as well as buyers and sellers at large of mining stocks, what does it imply? It will scarcely be considered wisdom for a mining company that desires public confidence to hide its movements from the light of day, nor is it a proof of the intelligence of the public to buy mining property of the actual worth of which they have no more idea than they have of the value of real estate in the moon. Is it not more charitable to suppose that all parties concerned are afflicted with that least respectable and mildest form of insanity called imbecility? It is customary to call our system of stock dealing "gambling"—but it is a slander upon the intelligence of the sporting fraternity. Your legitimate gambler bets his money only when the specie to pay his winnings is in full view—nor is he verdant enough to walk blindfold into the great Yellow Jacket Faro Bank or the great Savage Faro Bank, where all is silence and mystery, and nothing in sight, and bet on a list of extremely Desperate Chances—or if he should happen to do it once, would he ever happen to do it again, after experience had taught him that the money he placed on the ace would be gently confiscated to pay the man who won on the king the night before? Hardly. It is foolish to try to confer a bogus dignity upon this absurd stock dealing, by claiming for it either the intelligence or fairness of respectable gambling.

We were informed by a broker the other day, that a magnificent "bearing" operation in Yellow Jacket was ruined by the unexpected arrival of an order for a hundred feet of the stock from New York. Let our friend rest easy; that kind of meddlesome interference on the part of New York will cease just as soon as New York, by being cruelly deceived several times, gets thoroughly enlightened as to our unique style of doing business. New York has suddenly rushed her capital into our Washoe stocks with great enthusiasm—but let us keep cool—when she comes to "know us well" and appreciate the merits of our system, her depression and panic will probably be in inverse proportion to her former enthusiasm.

In the Eastern States, the law compels banks, railway companies and other corporations which are entrusted with the people's money, to make quarterly statements of their affairs in the minutest detail, and these are published in full in the newspapers. Would that method help our case any? In our opinion, it would. For instance: If the Yellow Jacket had published a statement a few weeks ago, as follows: "We are in debt a hundred and thirty thousand dollars, but nevertheless we declare a dividend of seventy-five dollars a foot," the reader would have probably concluded that either the Yellow Jacket was an ass or else it had made up its mind that he was one? But he would have been benefited—he would have been saved—because he would not have paid two thousand dollars a foot for Yellow Jacket and felt the misery of seeing it decline to twelve hundred—(at which figure, doubtless, he has since been seized with panic agonies and sold out.)

And if the Savage had said publicly, "We owe eighty thousand dollars, but the value of our stock will not suffer in consequence; the marvellous sagacity of our Board of Trustees has discovered to them a plan by which a fine large dividend may be paid just as usual—which is simply to borrow the money"—what would he have thought of that? Doubtless he would have said, "I admire 'cheek'—I adore sagacity; but this is altogether too dazzling." And he would have sold out, then, at six hundred dollars less on the foot than he paid for his stock—not because he believed for a moment that the Savage mine was worked out; but because he was satisfied that even if the mine yielded solid silver bars by the ton there would still be no security for his money in the hands of a secret tribunal of trustees who could create immense debts without his consent, and "cook" dividends without his knowledge, and then emerge from their dim obscurity and buy his stock for a song after they had got him thoroughly scared.

Let the reader peruse those extracts from the Stock Circular again, and convince himself, if possible, that the Yellow Jacket and the Savage companies would have declared their recent dividends if custom compelled them to publish quarterly statements of their affairs. Would those stunning revelations of the Challar Company made some months ago ever have seen the light in a quarterly statement?—would the transactions themselves ever have been ventured upon except in the dark? Let him recall that Esmeralda concern where the Secretary and the Superintendent, by means of impenetrable mystery in its management, swindled the public for months and months before they were detected. And also call to mind the various "Stories of Promising Mines" which have been published from time to time in the daily papers, and read with such absorbing interest by the community. If we chose, we could mention several prominent companies on the Comstock lead who have never declared a dividend, and never failed to levy an assessment every forty-five days since we can remember. Assessments enough have been levied upon one of the smallest of these mines to sink a shaft from here to China, and "hard-finish" and paper it from top to bottom; yet that concern has always been as silent as the grave, and no outsider knows to this day whether the mine they are prospecting is a limestone mine, or a grindstone mine, or a brimstone mine; but, arguing from the results attained, no man has any right to suspect that it is a silver mine, anyhow. Do these companies ever intend to make a showing? Could they be persuaded to open their mysterious books and publish the damning details of five years of squandered assessments? Not readily.

Our own capitalists here are taking their money out of Washoe mines that pay seventy-five dollars a ton and putting it into California gold mines that pay ten dollars. But they can watch it in the latter case, and see that it pays a profit, because they own the whole concern individually, while in the former case they are at the mercy of closeted and irresponsible trustees. How does this fact speak for our system? And how far will it go toward persuading Eastern capitalists to invest in Washoe mines? Rather let us confess that the system is rotten to the core, and can be productive of nothing but periodical panics, and ruin and disaster to all save—the Trustees.

A quarterly statement of the affairs of the great mining companies, published in a full and comprehensive form, is the only plan of salvation that offers for those who deal in Washoe's staple, and the sooner law or the public clamor shall enforce this reform, the better it will be for all concerned. This matter was urged some eight or nine months ago, in one of the daily papers of this city, and for a while the subject was discussed with considerable interest by the public, and several companies, who had by extraordinary moral exertions attained to a degree of honesty above the average, began to frame quarterly statements, and even gave public notice of the day upon which they would be published; but no more startling revelations happening to turn up for a while, and the interest dying out in consequence, the matter was finally dropped. However, the community will agitate this subject every now and then, until it becomes familiar to their ears and their lips, and at last, like all reforms that are permitted to be talked about and freely examined by everybody, it will be adopted some day.

VOX POPULI.

(For the Californian.)

HEREAFTER.

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth."

I READ how earth and heaven should pass away,
And how a new world should supplant the old;
And of those jasper walls, with gates of pearl,
Encompassing a city of pure gold;

Wherein no grief might come, nor night be known,
Nor need of sun and moon to rise and set,
For Christ should be the radiance thereof,
And the glory of the Lord should lighten it;

And laid the Book aside, and bowed my head—
Thinking of all the sorrow which we know:
The fond, familiar faces, year by year,
That fade from us, although we love them so;

The treasured hopes which lie like precious gems
Scattered and lost amid the roadside dust,
With all the wrecked believings of our youth,
Its broken promises—its shattered trust;

And wondered, if with this our mortal garb,
We laid aside the memories and loves
Which hallow it; nor ever, 'mid the ways
Of that fair world through which the spirit roves,

Sought wistfully within the shining throng
Of angels, for some well-beloved face,
Which failing us, straightway a gloom would fall
E'en in the brightness of the Holy Place?

Or, if that One whose name is Love could bind
Once more the links of love's dissevered chain,
And all the scattered jewels of our lives
Be gathered, and restored to us again?

Ah, me! but knowing each its secret grief,
Our hearts do shape, dear Lord! some fond conceit,
To meet its sweet fulfillment when we lay
Our crosses, meekly, at the Savior's feet;

And reaching through our tears, we fain would rend
The veil of that dim land to which we go,
And pierce the mystery of the parted soul,
Whose true hereafter only Thou dost know.

INA D. COOLBRITH.

LOCAL ITEMS IN BRIEF.—The examination of the public schools passed off with success, showing care and ability on the part of the teachers. . . The National Fast Day was generally observed, stores and places of business being closed. . . A full-grown bear, being moved from Gilbert's Museum, broke loose, and promenaded some distance on Montgomery, Sutter and Kearny streets, on Thursday afternoon, clearing those thoroughfares in short time. He finally took refuge in a stable, where he was captured. . . On Thursday morning a fire broke out on Jackson street near Drumm, among some old frame shells. Thirty buildings were burned, the inmates, in many cases, having scarcely time to escape. After a hard battle, the fire was confined to the lower half of the blocks between Davis and Drumm streets. The loss will amount to $45,000 or $50,000. The body of Samuel McCarty, a steamboat fireman, was found, the legs and right hand entirely consumed. He had gone to bed intoxicated. . . The meeting on Thursday night to express sympathy with the Liberal party of Mexico, and in favor of the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine, was large and enthusiastic. Resolutions were adopted, expressing sympathy with struggling Mexico, demanding the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine, and asking the co-operation of citizens in the interior and elsewhere.

SUMMARY OF "ONLY A CLOD."—The subscription list of THE CALIFORNIAN having greatly increased since the period when we commenced publishing Miss Braddon's new novel, "Only a Clod," we give in the present number a summary of the story as far as published, for the benefit of the more recent subscribers to our paper.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MORNING CALL.—On the 1st instant the San Francisco Morning Call entered its eighteenth volume. A thoroughly independent, clever and piquant journal, its present prosperous condition is the natural result of its merits.

HELP THE POOR.—From various causes, the San Francisco Benevolent Association have their hands full, and appeal to the public for old garments, to meet the immediate wants of the destitute who throng their office. We trust their appeal will meet a ready response.

THE STORY OF M. MATHIEU MARTINEL.

[The following is related of a French officer, M. Mathieu Martinel, adjutant of the First Cuirassiers :]

IN 1820 there was a fire in the barracks at Strasburg, and nine soldiers were lying sick and helpless above a room containing a barrel of gunpowder and a thousand cartridges. Every one was escaping, but Martinel persuaded a few men to return into the barracks with him, and hurried up the stairs through smoke and flame that turned back his companions. He came alone to the door of a room close to that which contained the powder, but found it locked. Catching up a bench, he beat the door in, and was met by such a burst of fire as had almost driven him away; but just as he was about to descend, he thought that, when the flames reached the powder, the nine sick men must infallibly be blown up, and, returning to the charge, he dashed forward, with eyes shut, through the midst, and with face, hands, hair and clothes singed and burnt, he made his way to the magazine in time to tear away, and throw to a distance from the powder, the mass of paper in which the cartridges were packed, which was just about to ignite, and appearing at the window, with loud shouts for water, thus showed the possibility of penetrating to the magazine, and floods of water were at once directed to it, so as to drench the powder, and thus save the men.

This same Martinel had shortly before thrown himself into the river Ill, without waiting to undress, to rescue a soldier who had fallen in, so near a water-mill that there was hardly a chance of life for either. Swimming straight towards the mill-dam, Martinel grasped the post of the sluice with one arm, and with the other tried to arrest the course of the drowning man, who was borne by a rapid current towards the mill-wheel; and was already so far beneath the surface that Martinel could not reach him without letting go of the post. Grasping the inanimate body, he actually allowed himself to be carried under the mill-wheel, without losing his hold, and came up immediately after on the other side, still able to bring the man to land in time for his suspended animation to be restored.

Seventeen years afterwards, when the regiment was at Paris, there was, on the night of the 14th of June, 1837, during the illumination at the wedding-festival of the Duke and Duchess of Orleans, one of those frightful crushes that sometimes occur in an ill-regulated crowd, when there is some obstruction in their way, and there is nothing but a horrible blind struggling and trampling, violent and fatal because of its very hopelessness and bewilderment. The crowd were trying to leave the Champ de Mars, where great numbers had been witnessing some magnificent fireworks, and had blocked up the passage leading out by the Military College. A woman fell down in a fainting fit, others stumbled over her, and thus formed an obstruction, which, being unknown to those in the rear, did not prevent them from forcing forward the persons in front, so that they too were pushed and trodden into one frightful, struggling, suffocating mass of living and dying men, women, and children, increasing every moment.

M. Martinel was passing, on his way to his quarters, when, hearing the tumult, he ran to the gate from the other side, and meeting the crowd, tried by shouts and entreaties to persuade them to give back, but the hindmost could not hear him, and the more frightened they grew the more they tried to hurry home, and so made the heap worse and worse, and in the midst an illuminated yew-tree, in a pot, was upset, and further barred the way. Martinel, with imminent danger to himself, dragged out one or two persons; but finding his single efforts almost useless among such numbers, he ran to the barracks, sounded to horse, and, without waiting till his men could be got together, hurried off again on foot with a few of his comrades, and dashed back into the crowd, struggling as vehemently to penetrate to the scene of danger as many would have done to get away from it.

Private Spenlee alone kept up with him, and, coming to the dreadful heap, these two labored to free the passage, lift up the living, and remove the dead. First he dragged out an old man in a fainting fit, then a young soldier, next a boy, a woman, a little girl—he carried them to freer air, and came back the next moment, though often so nearly pulled down by the frantic struggles of the terrified, stifled creatures, that he was each moment in the utmost peril of being trampled to to death. He carried out nine persons one by one; Spenlée brought out a man and a child; and his brother officers, coming up, took their share. One lieutenant, with a girl in a swoon in his arms, caused a boy to be put upon his back, and under this double burden was pushing against the crowd for half an hour, till at length he fell, and was all but killed.

A troop of cuirassiers had by this time mounted, and through the Champ de Mars came slowly along step by step, their horses moving as gently and cautiously as if they knew their work. Everywhere, as they advanced, little children were held up to them out of the throng to be saved, and many of their chargers were loaded with the little creatures, perched before and behind the kind soldier. With wonderful patience and forbearance, they managed to insert themselves and their horses first in single file, then two by two, then more abreast, like a wedge, into the press, until at last they formed a wall, cutting off the crowd behind from the mass in the gateway, and thus preventing the encumbrance from increasing. The people came to their senses, and went off to other gates, and the crowd diminishing, it became possible to lift up the many unhappy creatures who lay stifling or crushed in the heap. They were carried into the barracks, the cuirassiers hurried to bring their mattresses to lay them on in the hall, brought them water linen, all they could want, and were as tender to them as sisters of charity, till they were taken to the hospitals or to their homes. Martinel, who was the moving spirit in this gallant rescue, received in the following year one of M. Monthyon's prizes for the greatest acts of virtue that could be brought to light.

THE STOLEN GIPSY GIRL.

A NUMBER of years ago, two little girls, each about the age of five or six years, disappeared about one and the same time from the houses of their respective parents, who lived at separate and distant points in the south of France. The cause for the disappearance of these children was the same in both cases: namely, the dread of domestic correction for some trifling fault. Marguerite Cogordan, one of the girls, was taken away from the town of Valensole by a band of gipsies, who met the child at a fair there, and found her not unwilling to go with them. For nearly twenty years, Marguerite Cogordan lived with the gipsies, passing with them from place to place, but always retaining an indistinct recollection of her native spot, though she had forgot its name. Her longings to return to her parents, and her imperfect remembrances, were treated by those around her as the ravings of insanity.

At length Marguerite left the company of gipsies, and got into service with a judge of the town of Carcassone, also in the south of France. To her new master the girl disclosed the wandering reminiscences that preyed on her mind respecting her home and friends. The judge pitied the young woman, and paid every attention to her statements, with the view of discovering her relatives for her. At length it struck him that her descriptions of scenery applied to the district of the Lower Alps, and he addressed letters to a chief magistrate of Digne, the chief town of the department. The party addressed knew of no case where a girl had disappeared from Digne, but he chanced to remember that the name of Cogordan was not an uncommon one in the little neighboring town of Valensole, and wrote to Carcassone, stating this fact to Marguerite's master, and adding that her description of the scene of her birth applied perfectly to Valensole.

Upon receipt of this information, the judge set out with Marguerite Cogordan for Valensole, and at once found a family there, which had sustained the loss of a child, suiting Marguerite every way in name and age. But a strange circumstance overthrew the poor girl's hopes. The parents, while admitting that they had once lost their child, declared at the same time that they had long since recovered her, and produced a young woman whom they called their daughter. The unfortunate Marguerite was rejected by the parents; they looked coldly on her, and repulsed the testimonies of her affection. This cruel and unexpected disavowal threw the poor young woman into a violent fever. This warmth of feeling smote upon the hearts of the parents. They began to doubt, and, finally, opened their arms to the new-comer, declaring their belief that she was their own—their real child.

Hitherto the false Marguerite had held her peace, or, at least, had made no confession to explain the mystery. But being now closely interrogated, she avowed that her name was Baptistine Bartelet, and that she was the daughter of a fisherman at Marseilles. She had left her home, she stated, when a child, and had been picked up by a blind fiddler, with whom she had travelled for several years up and down the country. Passing one day through Valensoles, three years after the disappearance of Marguerite Cogordan, the parents of that girl had seen her, believed they recognized her to be their daughter, and had claimed her as such. Fearing to be sent back to a home where she had been ill used, she had given countenance to the deception, and had kept her real name secret. She remained with the Cogordans, and custom had at length made her feel as if she were truly in her own home. Once, indeed, she had tried to find service somewhere else, but she had been brought back.

This disclosure made Margnerite Cogordan happy, and she now lives with her long-lost parents.

The hat was passed around in a certain New York congregation for the purpose of taking up a collection. After it had made the circuit of the church it was handed to the minister, who by the way, had "exchanged pulpits" with the regular preacher, and he found not a penny in it. He inverted his hat over the pulpit cushion and shook it, that its emptiness might be known; then looking toward the ceiling, he exclaimed with great fervor: "I thank God that I got my hat back from this congregation."

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE ABROAD.

At the funeral of President Lincoln the following German Societies were represented, numbering more than a thousand singers: Liederkranz, Teutonia, Saengerrunde, Colonia, Concordia, Euphonia, Frohsinn, Fidelia, Germania, Harmonia, Der Helvetia, Loreley, Liedertafel, Liedertafel Williamsburg, Liedertafel der Vereingten Social Reformer, Lyra Maenner Chor, Mozart Verein, Orpheus, Quartet Club Hoboken, Rheinische Saengerbund, Saengerbund Williamsburg, Schillerbund, Saengerrunde Jersey City, Social Reform Gesang Verein, Social Reform Liedertafel, Sing Academie, Uhland Bund, Social Maenner Chor, Quartet Club Williamsburg, Beethoven Maenner Chor, Schwaebishe Saengerbund, Melomanen, Arminia Maenner Chor. Under the direction of Mr. A. Paur, the conductor of the Liederkranz Schubert's "Chorus of the Spirits," and the "Chorus of the Pilgrims," from Tannhaueser, were sung, and while passing the hearse the "Dead March," from Hiller's Saul, arranged for brass instruments by Mr. Paur, was performed. The whole was an imposing and touching tribute paid by the German singers to our lamented President.

An operatta in one act, called Les Memoires de Fanchette, words by M. Néreé Desares, music by Count Gabrielli, has been produced at the Lyrique, Paris. The word mémoires in this connection means memories. The story is founded on an incident in the life of Dufresny, the great grandson of Henry IV. and Jeanne d'Albret, who, notwithstanding the bounties he received from Louis XIV., was, in consequence of his expensive habits, often without a sou. According to Le Sage, he was at one time so much in debt, and had so little chance of ever getting out of his difficulties, that on his laundress presenting her "memoire," and badgering him for money, he proposed himself pour solde de compte, was accepted, and married her.

Herr Wachtel, the German tenor, has achieved a success at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. He sang in "Il Trovatore, and created a great excitement in the air, "Di quella pira"—giving out the high C three times with tremendous force and resonance. Of M'lle Fricci s "Leonora," the Times says: "Without any pretensions to genius, this lady, by earnest endeavor and studied correctness, genuine ability as a vocalist, zeal and intelligence as an actress, has earned for herself a legitimate position. To attain the first rank lies scarcely within her means; but for whatever character M'lle Fricci is announced, from "Valentine," in the Huguenot, to "Leonora," in the Trovatore, her name, in the absence of 'stars' of the first magnitude, must always be more or less welcome."

The Handel and Haydn Festival.—Dwight's Journal of Music says: "The chorus will number about six hundred voices, and the orchestra one hundred instruments, including nearly all of the old "Germanians" and the best musicians in New York. The Festival opens on the 23d of May, with Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," than which nothing can be more appropriate to the times, and will end on the following Sunday evening with the "Messiah," Oratorios ("Israel in Egypt," "Elijah," "The Creation,") and grand concerts of orchestral and vocal music will occupy the days and evenings interveniug."

Schulhoff, the eminent pianist, was recently invited to play before a very eminent personage in Paris. The artist was glad of the opportunity of doing so, and entered the gaily-lighted salons radiant with the expectation of having an audience who could appreciate his delicate and sentimental morceaux. Imagine, then, his horror when he found that he was to be assisted in the musical department by the notorious tavern vocalist, Teresa. Schulhoff very properly declined to enter into competition with this virago, and bowed himself out.

A new composer—M. Achille Graffigna—has made his appearance, whose opera of La Duchessa di San Giuliano has been played with moderate success. The libretto is spoken of as perfectly frightful, and there is evidently a disposition to say the same of the music. As it is, says the New York Weekly Review, the composer is reported to have shown a rather burglarious preference for the works of Donizetti and Verdi. M. Graffigna is one of the chefs d'orchestra attached to the Theatre Italien.

The customary annual rumor that Rossini is engaged on a new opera has again taken wing. It is rather later than usual this year, but we are always glad to meet an old friend...The name of a female imitator of Offenbach is Susanne Lagier, who has written an opera, Jupiter and Leda, in the peculiar style of the Grand Mogul of burlesque. In this opera the swan kisses "Leda" on the stage and then rises towards the sky; an accommodating variation from the myth.—N. Y. Review.

For the Californian.)

CALIFORNIA A PLACE OF EXILE.

HOMESICKNESS is a disease of more consistency in our Pacific coast life, probably, than anywhere else in the United States. Amerieans are reported a roving race, and change habitation or elimate with less effort than any other nation of civilization. At the same time, the reason of this facility of self-exile rests mainly on the fact that the home of nativity is visited oftener in this country by the pilgrim of fortune, the prodigal sons or the enterprising emigrant, than would be praeticable in Europe. When Tom goes out to Kansas or Minnesota in the Spring, he bids his mother adieu with a sense of confidenee in a speedy return the next winter, and there is nothing of desolation in an absence which may be bridged over by a day or two of railroad discomfort. And when Mary leaves her mother in Boston and seeks her home on an Illinois prairie, she knows very well that her visits to the parent nest will be often and satisfaetory enough to remove whatever abruptness there exists in the dissolution of filial and parental ties. The young midshipman who boasts in the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table that his home is wherever the American flag floats above him, can make the assertion with more ease, when he reflects that no spot having any specially dear nature to him need remain unvisited for years. To the native inhabitants of the Atlantic States, there is something inexplicable in a grief that has for its foundation mere absence from one's native village and childhood's associations. When Bridget, after a long day of toil, seeks the post office, and returning empty-handed, sits down in her kitchen and buries her face in her hands, crooning forth her lyrics of Celtic woe, her American mistress may wish to console her, but her sympathy is a creature more of artifice than nature. She has not passed a month for years, probably, without visiting or being visited by some blood relation, and her heart has not been trained to the sense of desolation, "for years, forever to part" from everything that clusters around childhood and its friends. But place the continent between her and her attachments; let her depend on the steamer or overland mail for her budget of gossip; and let the years glide on without family gatherings or family feasts, and the iron will enter her soul. There will be one subject never alluded to without a sigh, and the day of sorrow will take its place in the monthly calendar with punctual rigidity. Her children grow up around her and give her the second idea of home, but her pride is dashed with the regret that she cannot exhibit her jewels to the good people far away in some New England valley, and give the youth of her darlings the benefit of the same associations which left so warm an impress upon her own heart. There will times come, when she has allowed her mind to dwell imprudently long upon the subject, that her grief will be hysterieal. The rose tree at her door bears buds far purer, perhaps, far more perfect than any she ever gathered at home; but they cannot please her; the air may contrast soothingly with the bluster of an Atlantic winter, but one day of that raw weather would be worth a month of sunshine and exile. Fortunate she is if her sojourn here has brought wealth and leisure. The busy packing up, the noisy wonder of the children, and the embarkation on the sullen steamer become quasi pleasures which only forerun the grand one of "Domum, dulce, dulce domum."

But to the poor man's wife, to the desolate widow, or the wearied school-mistress there is no relief. The Pacific and Atlantic are obstacles which no longing can overcome. The pilgrimage is not one of duty but of pleasure, and the scrip must be well filled or the end is not gained. In all her attempts at money-getting or money-saving, there is a sense of absurd improbability in any idea of laying by enough to "go home on." The mutterings of her heart form a constant accompaniment of a sort of minor key sadness, and "Hame, hame, hame fain wad I be," whistles itself in the sea breezes, peals from the church bells, and clatters on the wheels of the droning hacks as they roll steamerward.

I speak of women as being fit exponents of nostalgic sadness. It is perhaps they who feel most keenly the dreary miles that they have wandered from the cradle and hearth of protective parents and family circle. But they are not alone in their griefs. The stories of old miners about companions who would die of nothing but homesick despair at their forlorn condition, have a rude ethos about them which delineates the terrible result of too long and too highly strung sensibility in that direction. But the comforts of life, the luxuries even, cannot suffice to balance that which every man must now and then be granted, or he will be unhappy—a glimpse of home, a mother or a sister's kiss, or a father's cheery greeting. That ballad so popular at melodeon performances, "Rock me to sleep," has nothing very glowing in either music or words, and yet the crude sentiment which it shadows forth has given it a tender nestling place in the heart of every gold-seeker on the Slope. I often fancy that the strains in the prison scene of Trovatore, have their meed of admiration on some similar ground.

Watch a crowd of men such as can be seen nowhere but in California, as they loiter around the cheaper hotels. Each individual has somewhere a little network of social relations from which he has rent himself, either to satisfy his pecuniary ambition, or to gratify a restless whim; and each countenance is a patent index of an aching sense of its owner's solitary condition. Those men possess probably a more than average amount of companionability. At home, over the country store counter, at the post office door, or at the corn-husking, they are grateful to the eye, and their talk is worth hearing, and their flashes of wit have doubtless set many a country tavern table in a roar. But here, their laughter is like a single cymbal clashing upon stone, guiltless of anything sonorous or musical; and the wit is swallowed up in stale sarcasms upon steamer sufferings or anathemas upon their own folly in rambling. They are not pleasant at all for the Epicurean in physiognomy to study. They leave an impression of dissatisfaction mingled with something hostile, desperate, and suicidal. Truly, it is not good for man to be morally or mentally alone.

But this democracy of travellers does not monopolize all that there is of the dementia solitudinis. Our dissipated classes show the disease in perhaps more indirect but not the less unmistakable forms. There is many a young man who fancies that he is peopling his crowded city solitude with visions that repair the absence of the angels of flesh and blood who should be standing sentinel over him, when he is tarrying over the wine cup and conjuring up merely grinning imps and sneering demons. He wakes to a sense of the horrors of his meretricious world, and has no refuge where he can be certain of what he needs. Society does not court any one: it must be wooed and won by cautious and careful methods; and deliberation of that character ill consorts with the disposition of the urban Arab. There is no court to whose jurisdiction he will submit; there is no jury which he will not challenge, save that of the old household, which has so often condemned his faults and as often recommended him to merey. But the judge is not on the bench, and the jury can never be empanuelled. He must perform the duties of both, and still sit in the box as criminal. He judges himself without merey, and finding the criminal an old offender, plunges him still deeper into social wickedness.

Were it possible to fold the Atlantic edge of the continent over upon the Pacific by some moral upheaval of the globe, how much happiness would be consummated! How many hearts that will never again feel each others' beatings would be brought together into one blissful pulsation! Nulla vestigia retrorsum is the painful decree of fate to many a man and woman whose feet will grow weary long before they can travel back to kin and country. The telegraph gives us a sort of intellectual connection with our eastern brethren, but the sensibilities are too delicate for electricity to transport. How the clever operator would smile as you handed him a tender message to forward: and, indeed, what space could one find for affectionate adjectives when limited to "ten words, names included."

We are all suffering with the complaint of Ulysses. The physician advises impossibly expensive remedies. We must be cured by some general treatmen. Since the homesick Mahomet cannot go to the mountain, let us have the mountain removed to him by some great act of railroad faith. Ye transportation kings who rule in such matters, hasten your surveys, and set your laboring subjects at their tasks: sell your stock with ability; lobby generous appropriations through Congress—your lavish corruption will be viewed with lenient feelings, if success but crown the result; let no pure-minded patriot pick flaws in your plans or fight your mighty monopoly. Let us have a railroad before it is too late to bless many of our aged friends with a swift sight of what has lingered so long unsatisfied in their life. The "sweet day of return" is a pleasure which we cannot slight, and we will, assuredly, never look the iron horse in the mouth, should you favor us promptly with so magnificent a gift.

Morality will begin to show new life among us. The disappointed will be relieved of half their load, while the prosperous will have their pleasures immeasurably heightened. With the first train that reaches the Golden City there will come a gush of hearty feeling into California such as will make the Pacific pulse rise until all bad blood is cleansed from the popular veins, and Hypochondria and her sisters will be known no more forever.

VAGO.

AT the first representation of "La Flute Enchantée," in Paris this season, two ladies of the court, who were seated in a private box, talked so loud that even the orchestra began to manifest evidences of impatience. They paid no attention to the fact and continued the annoyance. Presently a lady, who occupied the adjoining box, came to their loge, and, getting the usher to open the door, said to them: "Excuse me, mesdames, but I love Mozart, and I have come from the country expressly to hear him." She then slammed the door, leaving the offenders agape with astonishment, and the neighbors amused. It was Rosa Bonheur.

RAILLERY is the lightning of calumny.

GOUNOD'S NEW OPERA.

[THE composer of Faust has written a new comic opera entitled The Mock Doctor, of which the London Examiner says:

AT Covent Garden, happy in the Christmas success of an attractive pantomime, the English Opera Company has just been importing from Paris what will be one of its stock operas as long as it remains a company, Moliere's Le Médécin Malgré Lui, with M. Gounod's apt and delightful musical touches. They are very charming, and the humor of Moliere shines even through the obscuring dullness of two interposed librettists. We never have understood, and we shall never understand, the pains that seems to be taken at opera houses to prevent good music and good literature from coming together. There must be a notion that, as they are next of kin, marriage between them is immoral; for sometimes, as in this case, extraordinary pains seems to have been taken to keep them apart.

The play, with its interspersed music, is given to us as the Mock Doctor, and under that very name we have Moliere's play Englished by Fielding, as great a humorist as himself. Fielding's Mock Doctor, as a "ballad farce," which was acted at Drury Lane in 1733, with interspersed songs, (just as it is now acted. only with better music and worse words, at Covent Garden,) has credit in theatrical tradition as the first play in which—in the great room over St. John's Gate—Garriek performed in London. Nothing would have been simpler, easier, cheaper or better than to have taken Fielding's version of Moliere, omitting only the words for music originally introduced into that, and substituting those required by the new music of M. Gounod. Less trouble than has been taken to produce dialogue miserably spoilt, would have made this Mock Doctor perfect at all points, one of the most thoroughly delightful entertainments of our stage. As it is, we have, in an English version of the French libretto, the good flesh of Moliere's shrewd, simple prose fishified by Mr. Kenney into what we suppose that gentleman to consider elegant verse.

We strongly advise the management of the English opera at Covent Garden to ameliorate the sad condition of the libretto of the Mock Doctor, and promote to the office of translator of Moliere, Henry Fielding, vice C. L. Kenney, resigned. As it is, however, the incidents being all repeated and even the dialogue reproduced, though in a wishy-washy way, there is enough of the ghost of Moliere in the spoken libretto to make it more pleasant than one half the stuff that the ill-fed play-goer is content to swallow for his entertainment. And wherever M. Gounod strikes in, Moliere seems to live again, and Louis XIV. himself to be sitting in state behind us, although M. Gounod wrote the music only seven years ago.

The music is quaint and piquant; exquisitely dramatic, where—as in the opening quarrel between "Sganarelle" and his wife, it touches "Martine's" back with the cudgel, and plays into her strain of wrath—it is following the spirit of Moliére's dialogue. And when the little entertainments that Moliére introduced into his plays by a company of musicians or otherwise are to be represented, we can't help fancying that we hear Lulli revived, and that "les petits violons du roi" are in the Covent Garden orchestra. "Fais nous rire, Baptiste," Moliére used to say to Lulli, and M. Gounod provokes laughter and smiles while he delights the ear with melody that, genuine as it is, probably was not written without a little previous study of the music of Lulli, Charpentier and Cambert. Then, too, the piece has the advantage of Mr. A. Harris's genius for stage management. Well arranged little troops are poured on the stage, in old pastoral groups, to blend song and dance in that most exquisite finale of woodcutters resting from labor, and woodcutters' wives bringing them victual and companionship, which blends in unison tenors and basses with sopranos and trebles, interweaving them both with a third theme in a minor key.

The melody of that finale recurs with admirable effect at the close of the opera. "Lucinda's" lover appears bright with ribbons when he comes as chief singer in the entertainment of musicians, and the musicians carry antique instruments as if from the old family chest of viols, trebles, tenor and bass, guitar sort, viol da gamba sort, rebeck, theorbo, or whatever other antique instrument there be. Every morsel of the music is delicate in itself, and deliciously in character with the work to which it is wedded. It is well sung, too, at Covent Garden. Every part seems to be duly valued by its representative, Mr. Corri making much of "Sganarelle;" Miss Poole of "Martine;" Mr. Aynsley Cook of "Geronte;" Mr. Dussek of "Valere;" indeed, there is not a part ill sung. The entertainment would be pretty nearly faultless if it were but purged of the Mock Poet, and Moliere were left to speak for himself through Fielding's English.

MAN may bend to virtue, but virtue cannot bend to man.

Repentance is the spring of virtue.

Virtue does not give talents, but it supplies their place. Talents neither give virtue nor supply the place of it.

He who finds pleasure in vice, and pain in virtue, is a novice both in the one and the other.

NOTICE

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1865.

GAZLAY'S PACIFIC MONTHLY.

WHO Mr. Gazlay is, and why he should produce a Pacific Monthly, are questions that suggest themselves to every one who turns over the leaves of his periodical. If he were a myth—and, in the absence of any individual flavor in his periodical, the supposition is a fair one—we submit that the publisher might have found a more euphonious title, or at least one less gaseous in its suggestions. If, on the other hand, this alleged Gazlay is really co-existant with his magazine, we come no nearer to a satisfactory conclusion. That he should produce a single number is not of itself objectionable; that he should feel impelled to issue a periodical of this quality at stated and regular intervals, is a matter which concerns every Californian, and can only be accounted for by supposing that this gentleman's recollection of California is simply a singular instance of Panama fever developed in a new and appalling form.

We do not mean to argue the question whether it is necessary or not that an expositor of California's literary and mineral resources should be published in New York. Mr. Gazlay has settled that it is. This question disposed of, the trifling consideration of selecting a conductor is of secondary importance, and we are rather inclined to believe that perfect consistency demanded Mr. Gazlay's elevation to that important position. Our present object is to show the manner in which California is represented, by its self-constituted journal.

Its principal contributor is Dr. Bellows. The position which this gentleman occupies in its pages is perhaps only parallelled by that which Edward Everett once held in the columns of the New York Ledger. Like the panegyrist of Washington, Dr. Bellows is actuated by a laudable motive. As the President of the Sanitary Commission, he is anxious to advance the interests of everything which bears the name of the State whose bounty has contributed so liberally to his Commission. We question, however, whether a thoughtful consideration of his duties as director of a charitable organization would not have kept him from supporting a periodical so antagonistic to its principles, and capable of producing a degree of enervation and depression which no cordial in the stores of the San. Com. can alleviate. One merit of Dr. Bellows is, that he writes about California, whether fairly or not—a subject on which Mr. Gazlay's contributors are usually reticent, and always incorrect. The May number contains, with Dr. Bellows' letter, an article on the Sierra Madre, and another on Virginia City. By a stretch of fancy, the article on the "Progress of Civilization in Siam" might be considered as a geographical approximation to California topics, or as embracing generally the social progress of the West. Occasionally, Rev. S. B. Bell, late of Oakland, combines with Dr. Bellows in lending a clerical jauntiness to the Monthly, but both these gentlemen being actually engaged with interests at home, their contributions are apt to be retrospective in character, their reminiscences not always accurate, and their writings touch upon subjects which in this fast country have been for six months forgotten. In this quality Mr. Gazlay excels: he reproduces as a picture of to-day the San Francisco of 1860; his statements possess the value of antiquity to the California reader, and next to a file of old newspapers, we know of nothing so mournfully suggestive as the perusal of his descriptions. He talks familiarly of people who are dead and past, and with that sad persistency which is one of the peculiarities of garrulous old age, he does not seem to conceive that the world has progressed since he has stopped growing. Sometimes, fortified by Eastern papers, he patches new facts to his old recollections, affording a most incongruous medley.

But in the calm seclusion of the editorial sanctum does Mr. Gazlay particularly shine. In this penetralia most of those respectable old jokes which have done duty for the last half century are clothed anew and again sent forth on their dreary pilgrimage. Occasionally, with a conscientious regard to business, some illegitimate bantling of California's late humorist, Phœnix, is taken in and decently cared for. We protest against this unhallowed resurrection of defunct facetiæ. A certain law governs the motions of all wandering witticisms; their return can be as accurately computed as that of the comets, and neither Mr. Gazlay nor any other person has a right to infringe that law. The reader must not suppose that the entire editorial labor falls upon Mr. Gazlay. Those familiar correspondents and "old friends," who still haunt the editor's sanctum of the cheap monthlies, are found here. Mr. Gazlay greets them with Californian familiarity. "Welcome, George Cooper, welcome," is at once gushing and explicit. The reviews are characterized by the like spontaneous cheer and exuberance. Books are spoken of as abounding in "soul-elevating thoughts," "ingeniously plotted," "emanations of first-class minds lit up by fires of awe-commanding genius." In short, Mr. Gazlay's Pacific Monthly, to borrow one of his own criticisms, is like "the gleaming of a naked sword or the flash of mountain lightning." Whether or not these peculiar features are Californian, we leave the reader to judge.

ENGLISH LITERARY COURTESIES AND CURIOSITIES.

IN spite of blockade runners and Alabamas, it has always been a favorite hypothesis of loyal men that, while the aristocracy of England were inimical to the success of Northern arms, the deep, honest heart of the English people throbbed responsive to their own. The general character of these imaginary responses may be gathered from the following extracts, which we have taken from a review in an English magazine, of the popular pantomimes of the past season. It serves to show the kind of rhetoric with which the children of the middle classes are regaled during the Christmas holidays, the historic truths which Young England sucked in with its sugar candy and oranges, and a brief "abstract and chronicle" of the opinions of respectable tallow-chandlers, green-grocers and haberdashers on American affairs.

Our first extract is a comparatively mild one; it is from the pantomime of St. George and the Dragon, being the expression of one of those good fairies whose business it is to review passing events, and who is responsible for the following oracular utterance:

> America still keeps up her civil strife,
> Reckless of the wanton sacrifice of life.
> Abe Lincoln, too, as was generally expected,
> Has, by a large majority, as President been re-elected.
> Let's hope he'll adopt some more pacific plan,
> And prove to be a wiser, if not a sadder man.

But this is simply a Times' editorial set to rhyme, without being improved by succint and concise expressions. The next extract is much more original and striking. The pantomime is called Dame Durden, and among other personified nationalities, introduces America (?) who thus expresses herself:

> From Southern port I've issued forth,
> You don't know me, and make that admission,
> Peace would have come if we'd had recognition.
> Yet the time will come when, hand in hand,
> The South shall have a voice in ruling her land,
> Come, Britannia, own you are to blame,
> Let recognition come soon to save new-numbered slain.

It appears that "Britannia," to whom this remarkable speech is addressed, and who might be Earl Russell in petticoats, with characteristic diplomacy, does not commit herself, but at once changes the subject. The author, however, mindful of the sympathies of his audience, is unwilling to abandon it. So an artful scapegrace, "Bob," is introduced, who, anticipating Mr. Roebuck and the Saturday Review, convulses an intelligent and unprejudiced British audience by the following attic witticism:

> I'll join the crew of a Federal man-of-war,
> One of those brave chaps who are not of the fighting sort,
> And capture vessels by treachery in a neutral port.
> They boast the captured Florida, the forfeit of the hour,
> Because they knew the neutral port belonged to a weaker power.

Not merely the politics of America is satirized by the scathing pen of the pantomime writer, but she again comes in for a crushing blow, in the following allusion to the great prize fight:

> Like Joe Coburn, who never meant to fight,
> He came here thinking to rule the roast,
> With a coward heart covered with Yankee boast.
> If he'd have fought Jem Mace, tho' once they had a doubt of him,
> As the Irish say, Jem would have knocked saucepans out of him.

We confess that while we have a general idea that the writer is using bad language concerning us, there is a covert satire in this latter extraordinary culinary allusion which we fail to comprehend. We cannot understand whether he intends to convey the idea that saucepans are a necessary feature of the American anatomy, or whether the discovery is one of purely Celtic origin. A certain ambiguity, however, which is generally conceded to lend great force to the epithets of writers of this kind, must naturally be expected. We might extract further, but we think this will do. Believing that what are technically termed the "gags" of a play often give a better illustration of the tastes and opinions of the majority than even the pages of the daily press, we think that the above extracts will satisfy people who still indulge in sentimental theories of the affections of our Transatlantic Cousins, what is really the exact nature of their sympathies toward us.

(For the Californian.)

PEARLS OF PROGRESS.

THERE are some words in the English language which have been so overworked that justice—not to say mercy, demands they be permitted to rest. One of these pack-mules is the word Progress—so belabored and goaded up hill and down hill, that it presents a far more pitiable spectacle than the ass in the Sentimental Journey. We hoped when we turned to Mrs. Ira G. Hoit's Essay on Education, delivered before the San Francisco Teachers' Association, and republished in the Bulletin of May 29th, that for once, the poor jade would not be called upon to trot his accustomed round. In this we have been disappointed. Mrs. Hoit persists in urging "Progress" around the course with—to use her own expression, "the ponderous educational car" attached, and, what is worse, with the retired Board of Education seated comfortably inside. It was said by many, some day's ago, that if Lodi ran another heat on a heavy track, he would be ruined as a racer. There were those who entertained doubts as to this, but no one can doubt that Progress would quickly break down if the late Board were to be tied to his heels. In reading the article, we again meet with the Telegraph, the Steam Engine, the Printing Press, etc., and those old stock-actors Dr. Franklin, Professor Morse, Newton and others, are made to play for the thousandth time their well known parts. From time immemorial, however, teachers, male and female, have written, read and published essays on this threadbare topic, and as they have done in the past they will doubtless continue to do in the future. Mrs. Ira G. Hoit's essay is nothing but what we have seen before, and what we greatly fear we shall be forced to see again. If, by exposing some of the many errors to which writers of her class so tenaciously cling, we could effect their dislodgment, we would willingly afford more of our space to an examination of the theories advanced in this address than we can now do, knowing that it is vain to look for any such success.

Mrs. Hoit begins by paying a very graceful tribute to the late Board of Education, which is none the less graceful for not being deserved, and then proceeds "to the duties of the present hour," which duties appear to be "to cast a backward glance upon the world's history and note from various points our slow, but sure advancement." In doing this, Mrs. Hoit, in quite a lofty manner, informs us of her contempt for everything and everybody in existence previous to the Reformation, and gives us to nuderstand that before Lord Bacon, the world was no very great affair after all. Or, as she somewhat more poetically expresses it:

"After Luther's bold stroke for freedom, and the flashes of light brought into the scene by Faust and Guttenberg, Bacon came to us, and with his clear, patient, comprehensive, truth-seeking intellect, he wandered high and low, near and far, amid the collected mass of scientific facts, and turned over for the enrichment of the world everything that withstood his constantly applied test of practical use. Newton, Locke, Leibnitz, Paley, Kepler and many others following in his footsteps, gave each his noble contribution to human knowledge and human happiness. The Royal Society of London, and the Academy of Sciences at Paris, founded on Lord Bacon's experimental philosophy, are still in existence, enduring monuments of the worthy impulse given by him to the world's education. Thus was overthrown the hoary dynasty of ages, and man was fairly launched on the great mission of thinking for himself. Since then, a gradual but sure advancement, the world, no longer "marking time" as of old, has been 'marching on' to its present proud position."

We do not know to what range the feminine vision extends, but surely this view of the world's history is limited. In fact the backward glance is not cast upon the world's history, but only upon European history, and upon a very small portion of that. Old Californians date everything from the year 1849, and people in Sacramento are already beginning to reckon from "the flood." The Reformation is Mrs. Hoit's '49, and the experimental philosophy of Bacon stands for the Sacramento flood. If a starting point is needed from which to trace the world's progress, we are not aware of any reason why Mrs. Hoit might not select "the spring of '49 or fall of '50," to use the phrase of Mr. William Birch, nor why Governor Burnett might not be made to do duty in place of our old friend Martin Luther. Could Mrs. Hoit have bridled her contempt for the past, which she would have done by increasing her knowledge, she might have learned that the principles of what is called the Baconian Philosophy had long been known and in practice before either Bacon or the Reformation were dreamed of; that the art of printing, which she tells us brought flashes of light into the scene, had been discovered and in use in China two thousand years before it was introduced into Europe by Faust and Guttenberg. The Reformation and Lord Bacon do very well from which to view the history of England's and some portion of Europe's progress, but they have little to do with the history of the world's progress in education or in anything else. There is no one principle established by the Reformation which was not recognized, nor is there one benefit resulting from that movement, which was not enjoyed by various nations of the earth existing before Europe was an inhabited country. There is not a single result in natural science which has been attained by the world, which is to be attributed to Lord

Bacon, nor is there a single theory propounded by him, nor a solitary scientific fact discovered by him, which was not fully known by thousands of men, many ages before he was born. Leaving her theories, we turn to say that we do not recollect of having elsewhere met with such extraordinary statements as are to be found in this remarkable production. We may not fully comprehend the idea sought to be conveyed in the obscure sentence, "The science of medicine was never devoted to alleviate and heal." Standing as it does, we can only construe it as meaning, that the science of medicine, before the Reformation and Lord Bacon, was never practically applied to the alleviation of pain or the healing of the sick. Had Mrs. H. read a few pages of the great Hippocrates, whose name she tosses about so unceremoniously, she would never have ventured such an assertion. Many hundreds of years before the Reformation, there lived barbarians called Saracens, whose history, of course, has not attracted the attention of Mrs. H. They early began to apply chemistry to the theory and practice of medicine. In the city of Cordova, we think in the ninth century, the most formidable operations were performed by Saracenic surgeons. The cautery and knife were as freely used then as now. The many words used by our apothecaries—Julep, Sirup, Exlixir Alcohol, etc.—are derived from this source. Just as in mathematics, which science Mrs. Hoit seems to think, with medicine, somehow or other, a product of the Reformation, the words cipher, logarithm, algebra, etc., are derived from Arabia.

As a proof of the world's progress, and to show how much it was behind-hand up to the fourteenth century, and, by inference, how immeasurably it has advanced in the nineteenth century, our author, with amusing confidence, tells us that "The human frame was never dissected until the fourteenth century." As a matter of fact, however, the human frame was dissected some 1700 years before the time ascribed to that performance by Mrs. Hoit. Three hundred years before Christ, in the Alexandrian Museum, originated by Ptolemy Philadelphus, dissection of the human frame was carried on as it is to day in the medical colleges of the United States. In the words of a great medical writer, "The medical school of Alexandria was based upon dissection." Not only so but vivisection was allowed, both of animals and men. Criminals who had been condemned to death were reserved for that purpose by the state. We fear Mrs. Hoit must give up surgery. She is not happy in medicine. And notwithstanding her admiration for the young operator, of whom she read in the newspaper, and the apparent relish with which she relates the ghastly witticism of Buffon, we are more inclined to compliment her for her poetry than her pharmaccy.

It is impossible for us further to note the many misstatements in regard to men and things contained in this essay. So many names are mentioned, so many facts are asserted, that to do justice to them or to our author, would require the entire columns of our paper. We therefore pass Lebnitz and Euclid, Socrates and Plato. Indeed, we admit them to be much beyond our flight. We do not stop to relate that female teachers other than Hypatia and Maria Agnesi have existed; that in the past there have been schools for the education of girls—and in those very sciences, anatomy and mathematics, so much admired by Mrs. Hoit. There remains for notice her extravagant laudation of our common school system. Yet we pardon the praise, which is natural, while we point out the untruth, which is common. We understand her to directly ask the question:

"Who of us does not know that we can find in any one of those little wayside schools that bestar our Northern land, from Puritan New England to ultra California, more sound practical wisdom than in all the temples of Attica or tomes of Egypt?"

This is said with genuine feminine rashness. Mrs. H. triumphantly pits one of these little wayside schools against all the temples of Attica and all the tomes of Egypt. Perhaps, as this interrogatory was originally put to an assemblage of teachers, "who of us" may not include ourselves, and we might be told to speak when we are spoken to. But since the article is in print, we feel at liberty to reply. We do not know who of the assemblage of teachers—nor yet of "The Board"—knows this fact. Still, with fear and trembling, we answer that we do not know it. And we trust that we will be excused in saying we do not believe that our author knows it; unless she claims to have gathered all the wisdom stored in all the temples of Attica, and read faithfully and understandingly all the tomes of Egypt. This is nothing to what follows:

"Ancient abstractions have given way to intelligent performance; the wild visions of the poet to mathematical demonstrations. I will read you a few statistics bearing on that subject. We must remember that free schools belong especially to free States—though every State, thanks to God and our martyred thousands, is now free! The figures are these:

"Of the 16,685 patents issued to the several United States from 1790 to 1850, 14,359, or more than six-sevenths of the whole, were issued to the free States, and only 2,326, or less than one-seventh, to the slave States. New York received patents for 5,245 inventions; and Virginia, the self-graduating mother of States and statesmen, received 567. The number issued to good old Massachusetts alone is 2,171, or only 155 less than the number issued to all the slave States together. I do not mention these with any thought that there is greater superiority of mind in one section than another, but I think it shows the practical enlivening influence of our district school system—of the mathematical training given our scholars from stately colleges down to the little, square, pine buildings where thumbs and fingers are first counted. To this silent and unpretending cause we may attribute the discovery of the established laws of our earth and of new worlds in our heavens."

Now, in all fairness, we ask, what does this mean? What is the silent and unpretending cause here mentioned. To what do the words, "to this" refer? Does Mrs. Hoit mean to say the discovery of the established laws of our earth and of new worlds in the heavens is to be attributed to the Patent system of the United States? Is the silent and unpretending cause by which these discoveries have been made our District School system? Or is it the mathematical training given our scholars? It would not surprise us if any one of these three causes, or all three of them combined, were meant. Were it not that we are expressly told that "this cause" is a "silent and unpretending" one, we should believe that it was intended to intimate with modest vagueness that "The Board" was this———"great cause least understood."

But to all this wild rhapsody we will say that there is a country which does not figure in the roll of patents; which has no District School system—no Board of Education; which has utterly rejected Martin Luther, the Reformation, and all its blessings; which believes in Leonardo de Vinci, instead of Lord Bacon; which has not given up the wild vision of the poet for mathematical demonstration; which cannot even yet be called a free State; which, in short, is completely and entirely under what Mrs. Hoit calls "the hoary dynasty of ages"—yet, notwithstanding its abject condition, this country has done more for the "discovery of the established laws of our earth," and for "scientific progress" generally, than any nation, small or great, in Christendom. Should Mrs. Hoit desire to learn the name of this country, doubtless she can readily obtain it by applying to any one of the erudite members of the late Board of Education.

ANTEDELUVIAN.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

IL Ballo in Maschera was given on Monday and Tuesday evenings, at Maguire's Academy of Music. The mistakes and short-comings incidental to the first performance have been gradually removed, and the last representation was quite faultless. By well-managed scenic illusions a greater apparent depth was given to the stage in the final ball scene. The music of this opera seems to have captivated our people from the first, and we doubt if the troupe appear to better advantage in any other performance. The roles taken by Seoncia, Phillips and Sbriglia were excellently conceived and rendered. The new season was commenced on Thursday evening with Martha. If the crowded houses and satisfied faces of the audiences were any indication of the new season, the manager ought to rest content for the future. If the capital singing and acting of this opera and the liberal style of its appointments be any criterion of future performances, the audiences have as much reason to be satisfied. Seoncia's "Lady Harriet," Sbriglia's "Lionel," and Orlandini's "Plunkett," were capital, and were only excelled by Miss Phillips' "Nancy," which surpassed in vocal execution and acting any previous performance of the character on this coast. Rigoletto will be given to-night.

Faust was repeated at the Metropolitan on Monday night by the Bianchi troupe. Their performance of this beautiful opera is one of their best efforts, and each representation seems to bring out new beauties. I' Lombardi was produced on Wednesday. Don Giovanni was announced for Friday evening, but Lucia di Lammermoor substituted in its place.

FIFTH ANNUAL FAIR OF THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE.—The fifth industrial exhibition of the Mechanics' Institute of San Francisco will be held at the Pavilion in August next. The last Fair was of incalculable benefit to the State as a demonstration of its resources and the great progress made in mechanism and manufactures. For the coming exhibition there can be "no such word as fail;" the Executive Committee is composed of some of the most energetic members of the Institute, who are fully impressed with the responsibility of their position, and have determined to make the Fair of 1865 the Institute's crowning success. Gold, silver and bronze medals, as well as diplomas, are to be awarded. Every convenience will be afforded exhibitors.

WE acknowledge the receipt of the following volumes from A. Roman & Co. A press of other matter compels us to defer our regular notices until next week: Christian's Mistake, Luttrells of Arran, Napoleon's Julius Cæsar, Religious Duty, Three Years in the Army, Husbands and Homes, Mark Lemon's Jest Book, Golden Deeds, and Silent Struggles.

(For the Californian.)

THE TALE OF A PONY.

A TRUE STORY.

NAME of my heroine, simply "Rose;"
Surname, tolerable only in prose;
Habitat, Paris, that is where
She resided for change of air;
Ætat twenty; complexion fair,
Rich, good-looking and debonnair,
Smarter than Jersey-lightning,—There!
That's her picture—done with care.

In Paris—whatever they do besides—
EVERY LADY IN FULL DRESS, RIDES!
Moiré antiques you never meet
Sweeping the filth of a dirty street;
But every woman's claim to ton
Depends upon
The team she drives, whether phæton,
Landeau or britzka. Hence it's plain
That Rose, who was of her toilette vain,
Should have a team that ought to be Equal to any in all Paris!

"Bring forth the horse!"—the commissaire
Bowed, and brought Miss Rose a pair
Leading an equipage rich and rare:
"Why doth that lovely lady stare?"
Why? The tail of the off gray mare,
Is bobbed—by all that's good and fair!
Like the shaving-brushes that soldiers wear,
Scarcely showing as much back-hair
As Tam O'Shanter's "Meg"—and there
Lord knows she'd little enough to spare.

The stare and frown the Frenchman knew,
But did—as well-bred Frenchmen do—
Raised his shoulders above his crown,
Joined his thumbs, with the fingers down,
And said "Ah, Heaven!"—then, "Madamoiselle," Delay one minute, and all is well!"
He went; returned; by what good chance
These things are managed so well in France
I cannot say—but he made the sale,
And the bob-tailed mare had a flowing tail.

All that is false in this world below
Betrays itself in a love of show;
Indignant Nature hides her lash
In the purple-black of a dyed moustache;
The shallowest fop will trip in French,
The would-be critic will misquote Trench;
In short, you're always sure to detect
A sham in the things folks most affect;
Bean-pods are noisiest when dry,
And one always winks with his weakest eye;
And that's the reason the old gray mare
Forever had her tail in the air,
With flourishes beyond compare—
Though every whisk
Incurred the risk
Of leaving that sensitive region bare,
She did some things that you couldn't but feel
She wouldn't have done had her tail been real.

Champs Elysees: Time, past five;
There go the carriages—look alive!
Everything that man can drive,
Or his inventive skill contrive—
Yankee buggy or English "chay;"
Dog-cart, droschky and smart coupé,
A desoblegeante quite hulky,
(French idea of a Yankee sulky;)
Band in the distance, playing a march,
Footmen standing stiff as starch;
Savans, lorettes, deputies, Arch-
Bishops, and there together range
Sous-lieutenants and cent-gardes—(strange Way these soldier-chaps make change,)
Mixed with black eyed Polish dames,
With unpronounceable awful names;
Laces tremble and ribbons flout,
Conchmen wrangle and gend'armes shout—
Bless us! what is the row about?
Ah! here comes Rosey's new turn-out!

Smart! You bet you, it was that!
Nifty! (short for magnificat)
Mulberry panels—heraldic spread—
Ebony wheels picked out with red,
And two gray mares that were thoroughbred;
No wonder that every dandy's head
Was turned by the turn-out—and 't was said
That Caskowhisky, (friend of the Czar,)
A very good whip, (as Russians are,)
Was tied to Rosey's triumphal car,
Entranced, the reader will understand,
By "ribbons" that graced her head and hand.

Alas! the hour you think would crown
Your highest wishes, should let you down!
Or fate should turn, by your own mischance,
Your victor's car to an ambulance;
From cloudless heavens her lightnings glance,
(But these things happen, even in France;)
And so Miss Rose, as she trotted by—
The cynosure of every eye—
Saw to her horror the off-mare shy—
Flourish her tale so exceeding high
That, disregarding the closest tie,
And without giving a reason why,
She flung her tail so free and frisky,
Full in face of Caskowhisky!

Excuses, blushes, smiles: in fine,
End of the pony's tail, and mine! BRET

LOVE-SICKNESS.

(AN OIRISH MALADY.)

ME heart's with me Flora, how great is the pleasure
I feel whin I hear the sweet sound of her neem;
I'd soon took a thrip, if I'd money an' leisure,
To London's great city to see my ould fleem.

That dee down at Richmond! I'll never forget it,
Ah! thin me affeshuns wer' youthful and green;
Our gyarmints were certainly thoroughly wetted,
But she was the fairest I ever had seen.

Such throifles as reen an wet clothes he who woise is Neglects when the part of a shuthor he'd play,
He well knows that Kyoopid all gyarments dispoises,
And Vanus looks fairest just out o' the say.

Though the damp rather dims a young leedy's complexshun,
And rooins a best three an'.tinpenny glov,
Can umbrellas ibscure the broight glance ov affeshun,
Or showers o' reen damp the ardor ov lov?

The "Star and the Gyarther," that hall of symphozia,
A refyidge afforded us all from the reen;
We ate our fawgrah as it had been ambrozhia,
An' quaffed the broight necthar ov sparklin' champeen.

The next time we meet, be it sunshine or torrence,
The question I'll pop while iscortin' her home;
Next winther, she tould me, she's goin' to Florence,
Who knows but she'd, maybe, go over to Rome!

GUZMAN EL BUENO.

IN the early times of Spanish history, before the Moors had been expelled from the peninsula, or the blight of Western gold had enervated the nation, the old honor and loyalty of the Gothic race were high and pure, fostered by constant combats with a generous enemy. The Spanish Arabs were indeed the flower of the Mahomedan races, endowed with the vigor and honor of the desert tribes, yet capable of culture and civilization, excelling all other nations of their time in science and art, and almost the equals of their Christaiu foes in the attributes of chivalry. Wars with them were a coustant crusade, consecrated in the minds of the Spaniards as being in the cause of religion, and yet in some degree freed from savagery and cruelty by the enemy, and by the fact that the civilization and learning of the Christian kingdoms were far more derived from the Moors than from the kindred nations of Europe.

By the close of the thirteenth century, the Christian kingdoms of Castille and Aragon were descending from their mountain fastuesses, and spreading over the lovely plains of the south, even to the Mediterranean coast, as oue beautiful Moorish city after another yielded to the persevering advances of the children of the Goths; and in 1291 the uephew of our own beloved Eleanor of Castille, Sancho V., called El Bravo, ventured to invest the city of Tarifa.

This was the western buttress of the gate of the Mediterranean, the base of the northern Pillar of Hercules, and esteemed one of the gates of Spain. By it five huudred years previously had the Moorish enemy first entered Spain at the summons of Count Julian, under their leader Tarif-abu-Zearah, whose name was bestowed upon it in remembrance of his landiug there. The form of the ground is said to be like a broken punch-bowl, with the broken part towards the sea. The Moors had fortified the city with a surrounding wall and twenty-six towers, and had built a castle with a lighthouse on a small adjacent islaud, called Isla Verde, which they had connected with a city by a causeway. Their fortifications, always admirable, have existed ever since, and in 1811, auother five hundred years after, were successfully defended against the French by a small force of British troops under the command of Colonel Hugh Gough, better known in his old age as the victor of Aliwal. The walls were then unable to support the weight of artillery, for which of course they had never been built, but were perfectly effective against escalade.

For six months King Sancho besieged Tarifa by land and sea, his fleet, hired from the Geuoese, lying in the waters where the battle of Trafalgar was to be fought. The city at length yielded under stress of famine, but the king feared that he had no resources to enable him to keep it, and intended to dismantle and forsake it, when the Grand Master of the military order of Calatrava offered to undertake the defence with the knights for one year, hoping that some other noble would come forward at the end of that time and take the charge upon himself.

He was not mistaken. The noble who made himself responsible for this post of danger was a Leonese knight of high distinction, by name Alonso Perez de Guzman, already called El Bueno, or "The Good," from the high qualities he had manifested in the service of the late king, Don Alouso VI., by whom he had always stood when the present king, Don Saucho, was in rebellion. The offer was readily accepted, aud the whole Guzman family removed to Tarifa, with the exception of the eldest son, who was in the train of the Inlant Don Juan, the second son of the late king, who had always taken part with his father against his brother, and on Sancho's accession, continued his enmity, and fled to Portugal.

The king of Portugal, however, being requested by Sancho not to permit him to remain there, he proceeded to offer his services to the king of Morocco, Yusuf-ben-Yacoub for whom he undertook to recover Tarifa if 5,000 horse were granted to him for the purpose. The force would have been most disproportionate for the attack of such a city as Tarifa, but Don Juau reckoned on means that he had already found efficacious; when he had obtuined the surrender of Zamora to his father by threatening to put to death a child of the lady in command of the fortress.

Therefore, after summoning Tarifa at the head of his 5.000 Moors, he led forth before the gates the boy who had been confided to his care and declared that, unless the city were yielded instantly, Guzman should behold the death of his own son at his hand! Before, he had had to deal with a weak woman on a question of divided allegiance. It was otherwise here. The point was whether the city should be made over to the enemies of the faith and country, whether the plighted word of a loyal knight should be broken. Tho boy was held in the grasp of the cruel prince, stretching out his hands and weeping as he saw his father upon the walls. Don Alonso's eyes, we are told, filled with tears as he cast one long, last look at his firstborn, whom he might not save except at the expense of his truth and honor.

The struggle was bitter, but he broke forth at last in these words: "I did not beget a son to be made use of against my country, but that he should serve her against her foes. Should Don Juan put him to death, he will but confer honor on me, true life on my son, and on himself eternal shame in this world and everlasting wrath after death. So far am I from yielding this place or betraying my trust, that in case he should want a weapon for his cruel purpose, there goes my knife!"

He cast the knife in his belt over the walls, and returned to the castle, where, commanding his countenance, he sat down to table with his wife. Loud shouts of horror and dismay almost iustantly called him forth again. He was told that Don Juan had been seen to cut the boy's throat in a transport of blind rage. "I thought the enemy had broken in," he calmly said, and went back again.

The Moors themselves were horror-struck at the atrocity of their ally, and as the siege was hopeless they gave it up; and Don Juan, afraid and ashamed to return to Morocco, wandered to the court of Granada.

King Sancho was lying sick at Alcala de Henares when the tidings of the price of Guzman's fidelity reached him. Touched to the depths of his heart, he wrote a letter to his faithful subject, comparing his sacrifice to that of Abraham. confirming to him the name of Good, lamenting his own inability to come and offer his thanks aud regrets, but entreating Guzman's presence at Alcala.

All the way thither, the people thronged to see the man true to his word at such a fearful cost. The court was sent out to meet him, and the king, after embracing him, exclaimed, "Here learn, ye knights, what are exploits of virtue. Behold your model."

Lands and honors were heaped upon Alonso de Guzman, and they were not a mockery of his loss, for he had other sons to inherit them. He was the stanch friend of Sancho's widow and son in a long and perilous minority, and died full of years and honors. The lands granted to him were those of Medina Sidonia, which lie between the rivers Guadiana and Guadalquiver, and they have ever since been held by his descendants, who still bear the honored name of Guzman, witnessing that the man who gave the life of his firstborn rather than break his faith to the king has left a posterity as noble and enduring as any family in Europe.

RECIPE FOR PREVENTING SEA-SICKNESS.—Notwithstanding the sea had lulled, it blew a stiff breeze still, and the Crusader rolled and tossed upon the huge toppliug waves of the Atlantic in such a way that I was again sick; but, having some little experience of what genuine sea sickness really is since crossing the Bay of Biscay, I managed to avoid much of the unpleasantness I then suffered, priucipally by the following means, which I would strongly recommend to all landsmen. If you feel sickish, or know by experience that you will be sick, go to bed, close your eyes, and remain lying on your back, if possible, without motion: abstain from food, but not altogether; I would rather say, eat sparingly, and of solids, such as a little broiled meat, or biscuit, as I have known most alarming effects arise from "total abstinence," to say nothing of the violent straiuing and fruitless retching it occasions. Drink sparingly of cold water, or brandy and water in sips, but taste no hot liquid of any kind. In keeping the eyes shut, I would remark, that the effect of vision and its sympathy with the stomach are not enough attended to; for though at rest in the berth, the swinging backwards and forwards, and motion of the vessel and things around, are often sufficient to produce what we wish to avoid. There is, however, one point at which emesis becomes inevitable—it is when the mouth fills with saliva, and then the sooner it takes place the better.—Wilde's Narrative.

FUNNY PARAGRAPHS.

A LAUGHABLE blunder was made by Mrs. Gibbs, at Covent Garden Theatre, in the season of 1823, in the part of "Miss Stirling," in The Cladestine Marriage. When speaking of the conduct of "Betty," who had locked the door of "Miss Fanny's" room, and walked away with the key, Mrs. G. said, "She had locked the key and carried the door in her pocket." Mrs. Davenport, as "Mrs. Heidelberg," had previously excited a hearty laugh, by substituting for the original dialogue, "I protest there's a candle coming along the gallery with a man in his hand;" but the mistake by Mrs. Gibbs seemed to be so uniutentional, so unpremeditated, that the effect was irresistible; and the audience celebrated the joke with three rounds of applause.

AT a club, of which Jerrold was a member, a fierce Jacobite, and a friend, as fierce, of the cause of William the Third, were arguing noisily, and disturbing less excitable conversationalists. At length the Jacobite, a brawny Scot, brought his fist down heavily upon the table, and roared at his adversary: "I tell you what it is, sir, I spit upon your King William!" The friend of the Prince of Orange was not to be outmastered by mere lungs. He rose, and roared back to the Jacobite; "And I, sir, spit upon your James the Secoud!" Jerrold, who had been listening to the uproar in silence, hereupon rung the bell, and shouted: "Waiter, spittoons for two!"

A MAN was described in a plea as "I. Jones," and the pleader referred in another part of the plea to "I" as an "initial." The plaintiff said that the plea was bad, because "I" was not a name. Sir W. Maule said that there was no reason why a man might not be christened "I" as well as Isaac, inasmuch as either could be pronounced alone. The counsel of the plaintifl then objected that the plea admitted that "I" was not a name by describing it as "an initial." "Yes," retorted the judge, "but it does not aver that it is not a final as well as initial letter."

FRANKLIN, when ambassador to France, being at a meeting of a literary society, and not well understanding the Freuch when declaimed, determined to applaud when he saw a lady of his acquaintance express satisfaction. When they had ceased, a little child, who understood the French, said to him, "But, grandpapa, you always applauded the loudest when they were praising you!" Frankliu laughed heartily, and explained the matter.

LORD WILLIAM POULAT was said to be the author of a pamphlet called The Snake in the Grass. A gentleman abused in it sent him a challenge. Lord William protested his innocence, but the gentleman insisted upou a denial under his owu hand. Lord William took a pen and began: "This is to scratify that the buk called The Snak—" "Oh! my Lord," said the person, "I am satisfied; your Lordship has already convinced me you did not write the book."

SYDNEY SMITH was once dining in company with a French gentleman, who had been before dinner indulging in a number of free-thinking speculations, and had euded by avowing himself a materialist. "Very good soup, this," said Mr Smith. "Oui, monsieur, c' est excellente," was the reply. "Pray, sir, do you believe in a cook?" inquired Mr. Smith.

LAMB and Coleridge were talking together on the incidents of Coleridge's early life, when he was beginning his career in the church, and Coleridge was describing some of the facts in his usual tone, when he paused and said: "Pray, Mr. Lamb, did you ever hear me preach?" "I never heard you do any thing else!" said Lamb.

DIGNUM and Moses Kean the mimic were both tailors. Charles Bannister met them under the Piazza in Covent Garden, arm-in-arm. "I never see those men together," said he, "but they put me in miud of Shakspeare's comedy, Measure for Measure!"

JUDGE MAULE, in summing up a case of libel, and speaking of a defendant who had exhibited a spiteful piety, observed, "Oue of these defendants, Mr. Blank, is, it seems, a minister of religion—of what religion does not appear, but, to judge by his couduct, it cauuot be any form of Christianity." Severe.

WHEN Lord Eldon resigned the Great Seal, a small barrister said, "To me his loss is irreparable. Lord Eldon always behaved to me like a father." "Yes," remarked Brougham, "I understand he always treated you like a child."

"NATURE has written 'honest man' on his face," said a friend to Jerrold, speaking of a persou in whom Jerrold's faith was not altogether blind. "Humph!" Jerrold replied, "then the pen must have been a very bad one."

AN Irish crier at Ballinasloe being ordered to clear tho court, did so by this announcement: "Now, then, all ye blackguards that isn't lawyers, must lave the coort."

THE CHILDREN OF BLENTARN GHYLL.

BLENTARN GHYLL is the name of a little narrow gorge in those Westmoreland mountains, called Langdale Pikes, at whose feet lie the lovely green vale and lake of Grasmere. The lake is fed by mountain streamlets, called in the north becks. One of these becks comes down another beautiful valley called Easedale, sheltered by mountains and green with grass, as smooth and soft as on a lawn, from being cropped short by the sheep, which can be turned out here earlier in the spring than on the other mountain-sides. At one end, Easedale opens on the village of Grasmere, at the other is a steep ascent, leading to a bare stony ravine, shut in on all sides by high mountains, and with no outlet except the rough descent into Easedale, and likewise a dangerous winding path about six miles over the mountains to Langdale Head. This lonely ravine is called Far Easedale, and at the upper end there formerly stood a cottage named Bleutarn Ghyll. Ghyll means a cleft worn in the rock by water: and just above the cottage there is such a cleft, opening from a basin in the rock that must once have been a tarn, or mountain lakelet, but the pool is now dry, and for want of the living eye of sparkling water, it is termed Bleutarn or Blind pool.

The cottage was the dwelling of an honest old soldier named George Green, who had taken the little mountain farm, and married an active, bustling woman, who kept her home in great order, and regularly sent her children, tidily dressed, to school at Grasmere, whenever the weather did not make the long, wild mountain walk impossible for them.

It was in the winter of the year 1807 that there was an auction of furniture at a farm-house at Langdale Head. These sales are great occasions among the people of these hills; every one attends them for a considerable distance round, and there is much friendly hospitality, much business of all sorts transacted, and many meetings of old friends, who scarcely ever see each other at other times. To this gathering George and Sarah Green set off early in the forenoon of a bright winter day, leaving their cottage and six little ones in the charge of the eldest sister, a girl of nine years old, named Agnes, for they had neither indoor nor outdoor servant, and no neighbor nearer than Grasmere.

Little Agnes was, however, a remarkably steady and careful child, and all went well through the day, but towards night the mist settled down heavily upon the hills, and the heavy sighing in the air told that a storm was working up; the children watched anxiously for their parents, but the fog cut off their view, flakes of snow began to fall, and darkness closed in early on them.

Agnes gave the others their supper of milk and oatmeal porridge, and they sat down waiting and watching, and fancying they heard sounds in the hills; but the clock struck one hour after another, and no step was on the threshold, no hand at the latch, no voice at the door, only the white silent flakes fell thicker and thicker, and began to close up the door, and come in white clinging wreaths through the crevices of the windows. Agnes tried to cheer the others up, but there was a dread on them all, and they could not bear to move away from the peat fire on the hearth, round which they were nestled. She put the two youngest, who were twins, to bed in their cradle, and sat on with the others, two boys and another girl, named Catherine, till the clock struck twelve, when she heard them one by one say their prayers, and doing the same herself, lay down to rest, trusting to her Heavenly Father's care.

The morning came, and no father or mother; only the snow falling thicker than ever, and almost blocking them in; but still Agnes did not lose hope; she thought her father and mother might have taken shelter at night in some bield, as she would have termed a sheepfold, or that the snow might have prevented them from setting out at all, and they might come home by Grasmere in the morning. She cheered herself up, and dressed the others, made them say their prayers, and gave them their breakfast, recollecting as she saw the lessening stores that her mother must know how little was provided for them, and be as anxious to get home as they were to see her there. She longed to go down to Grasmere to inquire; but the communication was entirely cut off by the snow, for the beck was, in the winter, too wide for a child to leap, and too rapid to be waded, and the crazy wooden bridge that crossed it had so large a hole in it, that, when concealed with snow, it was not safe to attempt the passage. She said afterwards that she could not help being terrified at the loneliness and desolateness, but that she recollected that at least if she could not get out, no bad men could get in to hurt them; and she set herself resolutely to comfort and help the lesser creatures who depended on her. She thought over all that could be done for the present, and first wound up the clock, a friend that she could not allow to be silent; next she took all the remaining milk and scalded it, to prevent it turning sour; then she looked into the meal chest, and made some porridge for breakfast, but the store was so low that she was forced to put all except the babies upon short allowance; but to reconcile the others to this, she made cakes of a small hoard of flour, and baked them on the hearth. It was snowing so fast that she feared that the way to the peat stack would be blocked up, and therefore her next work was, with the help of the two boys, to pull down as much fuel as would last for a week, and carry it in-doors; and she examined the potatoes laid up in bracken leaves, but fancying that if she brought them in, the warmth of the cottage would spoil them, she only took enough for a single meal. Milking the cow was the next office performed by this orderly little maid, but the poor thing was half starved and had little to give. Agnes saw that more hay must be given to her, and calling the boys, scrambled with them into the loft, and began to pull down the hay; but this was severe work for such young children, and darkness came on in the midst, frightening the two little fellows, so that it required all the sister's steady resolution and perseverance to finish supplying the poor cow with even that night's supper and bed. Supper time came, and after it the motherly child undressed the twins, and found voice to sing them to sleep, after which she joined the huddle of the other three, nestled on the hearth, and hour after hour they listened for the dear voices, till they fancied they heard sounds on the howling blast, held their breath, and then as it died away, were conscious of the silence of the lull. So fierce was the snow-drift that Agnes had to guard the door and window from admitting long wreaths of it, and protect the fire from being put out as it came hissing down the chimney. Again her watch lasted till midnight, and no parents, no help came; again she went to bed, and awoke to find the snow falling thicker than ever, and hope failing within her. Her fond, active mother, her strong, brave father, a noted climber, would surely long ago have found the way home to their children had all been well with them. Agnes described herself as getting through this third lonely day by keeping her little flock together on the hearth, and making them say their prayers aloud by turns.

By the following morning the snow was over, and the wind had changed, so sweeping away the drifts that though the treacherous bridge might not be attempted, a low stone wall had been exposed, which these little mountaineers knew would serve as a guide into Grasmere, by a circuit, which would avoid crossing the brook. It would be needful to force some gaps, that is, to push down the loose stones of the uncemented stone walls that divided the fields, and the little boys came with Agnes to help her in this as far as the ridge of the hill; but the way was long and unsafe for small children, and Agnes sent them back, whilst she made her way alone, a frail little being in the vast slopes of snow, to the house nearest in Grasmere.

She knocked at the door and was made kindly welcome, but no sooner did she ask for her father and mother than smiles turned to looks of pity and dismay. In half an hour the news that George and Sarah Green were missing had spread through the valley, and sixty strong men had met at Kirktown, the hamlet close to the parish church, to seek for them. The last that was known of them was, that, after the auction, some of their friends had advised them not to try the dangerous path so late; but when they had gone no one knew. Some of the people of Langdale likewise had heard wild shrieks at midnight on the night after the sale, but had fancied them merely the moans of the wind.

One day after another the search continued, but still in vain. The neighbors patiently gave up their work day after day to turn over the deep snow around the path from Langdale, but for three, or some say five days, no trace of them was found. At last dogs were used, and guided the seekers far away from the path, until a loud shout from the top of a steep precipice told that the lost was found. There lay Sarah Green, wrapped in her husband's great-coat, of course dead; and at the foot of the rock his body was found, in a posture that seemed to show he had been killed by the fall without a struggle. The neighbors thought the mist and snow must have bewildered them till they had wandered thus far in the darkness, and that George had been making a few steps forward to make out the road when the fall took place, but that his wife had very possibly been unconscious of his fall, and stood still where he had left her, uttering those sad cries that had been so little regarded at Langdale, until she was unable to move and was benumbed by the sleep of cold. Those who knew them best, thought the poor woman's grief and terror for her lonely little ones had probably so overpowered her as to disturb her husband's coolness and presence of mind, and that if he had been alone, he would probably have easily saved himself. The brave little girl, keeping her patient watch and guard over the five younger ones, and setting out on her lonely way through the snow, must have had more of the spirit of her soldier-father than her mother. It was to Dorothy Wordsworth, the sister of the poet, that little Agnes was persuaded to tell the history of this calm, resolute, trustful, waiting-time, which, simple as it is, we think our readers will own as truly worthy to be counted among Golden Deeds. The father and mother were buried on a lovely spring day at St. Oswald's Churchyard at Kirktown, and Wordsworth wrote:

"Now do these sternly-featured hills
Look gently on this grave,
And quiet now the depths of air
As sea without a wave.

"But deeper lies the heart of peace,
In quiet more profound;
The heart of quietness is here,
Within this churchyard bound.

"And from all agony of mind
It keeps them safe, and far
From fear, and grief, and from all need
Of sun or guiding star."

After the funeral, the farm folk of the neighborhood were all pressing forward to beg to adopt one or other of the little orphans. The twins were kept together, Catherine was taken by the Wordsworth family, Agnes and her brothers found separate but comfortable homes among their parents' friends. Help came pouring in. Queen Charlotte and her daughters were greatly touched by the mountain child's tender motherliness, and sent a handsome donation for the benefit of the orphans, and so many subscriptions were offered, that at last Miss Wordsworth declined receiving any more, lest the children should be injured by having too much wealth for the station to which they were growing up.

THE LAW OF HONOR.—On the publication of the Duc d'Aumale's celebrated letter to Prince Napoleon, in 1861, it was generally thought that a duel was inevitable, and the Imperialists were sadly scandalized at the refusal of their champion to take up the gauntlet so pointedly and contemptuously flung down. The ladies, as usual, were most touched by the want of spirit betrayed; and a fair cousin is reported to have told him that he was the first Bonaparte who confessedly wanted courage. The precise details of Pitt's duel with Tierney (1798) will be found in Earl Stanhope's excellent Life of Pitt. It arose from some remarks by Pitt in the House of Commons to the effect that Tierney's opposition to a Government bill was owing to a desire to impede the defences of the country—an imputation which Pitt refused to withdraw. He apprised the Speaker (Addington) privately of what was about to happen, trusting to his honor not to interfere in any way. They met at Wimbledon, and exchanged two shots without effect. The current story was that Pitt's second, Mr. Ryder, on delivering him his pistol told him to be careful as it had a hair trigger. "I do not see the hair," said the statesman, calmly holding the pistol up against the light. He states in a printed letter that his conduct was approved by George III. Wilberforce gave notice of a motion in the House of Commons on the subject; but reluctantly withdrew it on Pitt's declaring that, if carried, it would compel his retirement from public life. Fox's duel with Adam (1779) also arose out of a speech in the House of Commons; but, unlike his great rival, Fox, on the first request for explanation, declared he had no intention to offend. Adam, who appeared satisfied at the time, came again the next day, to complain of the versions of the newspapers, (with which Fox said he had nothing to do,) and on the ground that his friends required something more, called upon Fox to print his disclaimer, which was refused. Fox was slightly wounded in the breast at the first exchange of shots, but either did not know or did not mention the fact; and to a fresh overture or demand, replied that the affair must proceed. After the second fire an arrangement was effected, upon which he opened his waistcoat and showed his wound. The feeling that prevailed under George III. was also strongly shown in the affair of the "Blueviad," a satirical poem on the "Blues," published in 1805, by a very young officer, who has since risen to social and professional distinction as a civilian. The officers came to a resolution to prosecute, but not to fight; but one of them, a captain who had joined in it, shook his whip at the satirist as they passed each other in Rotten-row. This led to a challenge, which was refused on the score of the resolution, with the approval of six of the officers. The captain was forthwith posted, literally and actually, on large bills pasted against the walls proclaiming him a coward. One of these met the eye of George III.: "What, what, what? A captain in my household troops a coward! What are the Horse Guards about?" A court of inquiry sat, and every officer who had approved the captain's conduct in offering an affront for which he did not intend to be responsible, was compelled to leave the regiment along with him.

THERE is a little fish that Providence has placed at the North Pole which is called the lamp fish, that melts all away in broiling. It is a capital lubricator, and is used as a lamp by having a string of bark drawn through it. It is proposed to incorporate a company to bring this new discovery into competition with petroleum. We regard the project as the fin-ishing attack of the oil fever.

IT was customary, years ago, to publish from the pulpit, in Connecticut, bans of matrimony. On one occasion an old man rose and said: "I forbid the bans." On being asked to state his objections, he replied: "I had reserved Dinah Curtis for myself." The objection was not deemed "good."

(For the Californian.)

PRESENTED AT COURT.

VERY many of our countrymen who visit Europe are naturally desirous of becoming acquainted with the customs of royalty and nobility. "The boast of heraldry and pomp of power" always has and always will impress the mind with admiration, and even a plain American citizen, who would not live under any other than a republican form of government, cannot fail to be impressed with all the magnificence which seems to hover around those who hold a sceptre.

The writer spent several years in Europe, most of the time residing in that city of cities, Paris; and having been presented to their Imperial Majesties Napoleon III. and Eugenie, now proposes to describe, as well as he can, a presentation at the French Court.

It is requisite that the applicant for presentation should be personally known to the United States Minister, as he is responsible for the respectability of all whom he introduces at court. The Minister sends a list to the Grand Chamberlain of the Emperor, containing the names of those he desires to present. A few days previous to the reception, the invitations are brought to the American legation by one of the Emperor's body guard, and from thence they are sent by our representatives to those for whom they are intended.

Though it is not an easy matter for Americans to obtain from their Minister an invitation to the Imperial receptions, it is still more difficult for the subjects of monarchial governments, for they have to prove their having been presented at their own Courts before they can expect to be presented at a foreign one. The consequence is that at most royal presentations, the United States is more fully represented than any other country. I was really surprised at receiving my invitation so soon, for I had only applied for it about a fortnight previous, and was then told that it might be six weeks before I would be gratified with a satisfactory answer to my application.

The invitation read thus (in French:)

"The Grand Chamberlain, on the part of their Imperial Majesties, has the honor to request the pleasure of Mr. ——'s company at the Palace of the Tuileries on Tuesday evening, Jan. —, for presentation. Monsieur will please hand this card at the entrance to the palace."

This invitation was printed on a card about five inches long and four inches wide, and was enclosed in a large envelope bearing the stamp of the Grand Chamberlain.

Now that I had received my invitation, it was requisite for me to have a court dress, without which I would not have been admitted within the palace.

Had I been either an officer in the army, or even in the militia, I would have been entitled to appear in uniform; but being merely a private citizen of the United States, it was now necessary for me to furnish myself with "gorgeous array."

I therefore called on my tailor; and, stating my necessities, requested him to provide me with everything necessary. He promised satisfaction in every particular, and stated that I should have the dress on the evening of the presentation. This last promise caused me some little uneasiness, knowing from experience that tailors sometimes disappoint their customers, fearing also that the dress might not fit, and I should be in rather a disagreeable position for one who had been anticipating so much. But he promised on his honor that all would be right, and with that at stake I departed from his establishment, with a trifle more of confidence but still prepared for disappointment.

The evening at last arrived, and as I sat in my dressing-room awaiting the receipt of my court dress, which I now really commenced to despair of ever seeing, I had the inexpressible pleasure of listening to the agreeable remarks of several of my friends who had dropped in to see their companion's en grande tenue. One suggested that I should go as I was, i. e., in under-clothes, as I would then attract the attention of all, and, to the prejudice of royalty, be the "observed of all observers." Many such suggestions I listened to, each one exciting the laughter of the whole party, in which I was compelled to join, although I fear that mine was but a ghastly grin, as I was more occupied in wishing all sorts of happiness to my tailor, than in participating in jokes at my own expense.

Just as my patience was giving out, a knock came at my door, and my tailor's little man appeared with a beaming smile, which I am sure was not kindly reciprocated.

Apologies for delay had to be accepted, and having no time to lose, with the tailor's assistance, I was soon prepared to enter into the royal presence. When I stood before the pier-glass and viewed myself, I could almost imagine myself to be a field-marshal, or even a member of the royal family, so much was my appearance metamorphosed.

Imagine a young man who had never worn other than the plain dress of a civilian, suddenly arraying himself in a blue dress-coat with high collar and faced with white moiré antique silk, the coat embroidered in gold on collar, back, sleeves and front; white cravat, white cassimere vest and pantaloons with gilt stripe down the sides, a cocked hat and sword. Just imagine, I say, an unprotected young man in such condition, and is he not perfectly excusable in allowing his imagination full scope for a few moments, that he may in that way, at least, realize how he would feel were his power commensurate with his personal appearance.

The carriage, which had been awaiting me for more than an hour, I now jumped into, and in a short time we were at the end of a long line of carriages, each taking its turn, at the entrance to the palace, in disembarking its inmates. At the expiration of about half an hour my turn came, and I was struck with admiration in ascending the grand stair-case of the Tuileries at the scene before me. On each side of the marble stair-case and on each stair stood a cuirassier with a drawn sword, neither looking to the right nor left, but straight ahead. The cuirassiers and the guides together form the body guard of the Emperor, and in appearance are the first corps in France. I will not attempt further to speak of the magnificent frescoes, noble halls, etc., which seemed to increase at every step; as were I to do so, it would be long before I arrived at the subject which I am attempting to describe.

On presenting my ticket I was conducted to an apartment separate from the grand saloons to which the rest directed their steps. Entering, I found myself in a large room, (but quite small in comparison with the rest,) in the midst of about sixty people from all nations. Around this room were ranged in order the foreign ambassadors, each one having near him a small number of his countrymen, who, like myself, were awaiting the presentation.

It was but a very short time before a door was opened and their majesties entered together.

The Empress was beautifully dressed; but not being very familiar with the terms used in describing a lady's toilette, I can only say that she could not have appeared to greater advantage. Though richly attired, there was to me a certain plainness about it, if I can so call it, which to my eye was extremely attractive. Napoleon wore the uniform of a field-marshal, and but a single star shone on his breast; it was that of the Legion of Honor.

On entering the room, a general salutation was given, each one bowing to their majesties, which was returned by them in like manner.

The Pope's Nuncio, who stood nearest the door, was then addressed by the Emperor, both himself and the Empress cordially shaking hands with him. After a few words of conversation, the Nuncio presented those who were with him, and their majesties then passed on to the next, which was Lord Cowley, the British Ambassador. The same salutation took place; and thus it was with all.

The Emperor and Empress shook hands with each ambassador, and on presenting their countrymen, unless it was some one of special distinction, they would merely bow with a smile and pass on to the next.

These formalities did not occupy more than a quarter of an hour, when, after having made the circuit of the room, the door by which their majesties entered was again thrown open, and the Imperial suite entered. Then another door was opened, and, leading the way, Napoleon and Eugenie passed into the grand saloons, where the guests of the evening had already assembled. Those who had been presented to their majesties were considered as composing for the evening a portion of their suite.

The suite comprises the Emperor's aids and many of the noblemen and generals attached to the palace, as well as the ladies of honor.

The bands immediately commenced playing, and soon a quadrille was formed, in which the Emperor and Empress joined.

This was their only dance, after which, leaving her Majesty in charge of some favored ones, the Emperor, preceded by the Grand Chamberlain, walked through the rooms. Although the crowd was very great, a pathway was quickly made, and as he passed every one would make a low bow, and the Emperor, inclining his head slightly, would thus return these salutations. Every now and then he would pause, and, shaking hands with some acquaintance, would converse for a few seconds and then pass on, always preceded by his chamberlain, who, tapping the floor with his staff of office, would repeat, "Sa Majesté, l'Empereur." It was amusing to observe the effect produced on the different individuals to whom Napoleon would speak. Some would return his salutation with the ease which always marks the gentleman accustomed to society, and others would evince more or less embarassment. One gentleman whom I noticed, had the appearance of about bursting a blood-vessel when the Emperor spoke to him. He bowed low, colored up to the roots of his hair, and could hardly make an audible reply to the remarks addressed to him. He was evidently much relieved when the Emperor bade him good evening.

At midnight the supper rooms were thrown open, and their majesties entering first, were immediately followed by the crowd of guests. The tables were soon surrounded, and ceremony for the time appeared to be forgotten. The supper was very good, but there was nothing remarkable about it. Soon after, their majesties quietly retired, and left the rest to amuse themselves by dancing, conversation, etc.

It being the custom to extend invitations for all the court balls to all who have previously been presented at court, I had the pleasure of meeting there many Americans with whom I was acquainted. When a gentleman invites a lady to dance, he places his sword on her chair, if she is so fortunate as to have one, and however crowded the rooms may be, the chair remains unoccupied until her return.

I cannot help devoting a few lines to the Duke of Brunswick, whom I noticed conversing with an English lady. This man, of whom most of your readers must have heard, is now far advanced in life; but, with the aid of cosmetics, etc., he succeeds in preserving a much more youthful appearance. It is said that he stole and ran away with all the royal jewels of his Duchy, and if he is guilty of one-half the crimes which are told of him, he is, indeed, a very bad man. His wealth, however, is enormous. He wore a tunic made of cloth of gold, and was literally resplendent with the jewels which sparkled whichever way he turned. Jet-black hair clustered in very small curls around his head, and I was informed that this hair was composed entirely of black silk. His cheeks were painted; and curiosity prompting me to remain near him, I noticed his conversation was in imitation of that of a young man of society. After spending some time in admiring the splendid diamonds, emeralds, rubies and other precious stones with which he was bedizened, I walked off, feeling a sincere pity for the man, who with one step in the grave, should thus be exhibiting himself and the littleness of his mind, to an admiring, and at the same time ridiculing, crowd.

The toilettes of the ladies and the various dresses of the gentlemen were, as might be expected, of the most elegant description. I observed some Americans in uniform, who, though belonging to some of our militia regiments, I am sure had overstepped the regulations on this occasion, for their uniforms were so extremely elaborate that had I not known them to be fellow-countrymen, I should have imagined them at least to have belonged to the staff of some military prince.

At about two o'clock the number of guests had diminished considerably, and, pleased with what I had witnessed, I was soon on the way to my own rooms, feeling perfectly satisfied at being merely a private individual. Z.

THEATRICAL TALK.

MR. DAN SETCHELL'S powers of draft exceed anything known in this city prior to his advent. No one can escape his draft. Night after night, do his eccentric delineations of comic characters draw as many as the Opera House will hold into that building. During this week he presented the Burtonian character of "Toodles," and, during the whole of the time he was on the stage roars of laughter attested to the satisfaction of the audience at the manner in which he rendered the character. Mr. Dan Setchell's "Toodles" is one of the broadest low-comedy characters ever presented on the stage; a little fineing down of the drunken scene would not make it any the less funny. Mrs. Saunders made a first-rate "Mrs. Toodles." Mr. Dan Setchell is fortunate in finding so admirable an impersonator of comic women as Mrs. Saunders, to support him. Mr. Setchell's "Van Dunden" in the comedy of the Dutch Governor, is the most finished piece of acting with which he has delighted the public. The announcement that Mr. Dan Setchell would take his first benefit on Friday, did not, one might be sure, have the effect of keeping any one away from the theatre. How many people tried to get in and could not, I am afraid to estimate, but the number of those who put off engaging their seats until just too late, was legion. Mr. Dan Setchell's impersonation of the character of "Tony Lumpkin" in She Stoops to Conquer, was received with storms of applause, and his "Poor Pillicoddy" in the afterpiece of that name, nearly finished an audience already almost dead with laughing. This evening, the admirable comedy of the Dutch Governor and the irresistibly comic Toodles will be presented. The performance this afternoon will consist of the comedy of She Stoops to Conquer.

On Monday evening, the stage manager of Maguire's Opera House, Mr. C. L. Graves, will be the recipient of a benefit tendered him by Mr. Maguire, Mr. Setchell and the members of the stock company. The public, if they will reflect how much of the pleasure they receive from the effective representation of a play is due to the patient and unwearying labors of the stage manager, will, I am sure, be glad to express their appreciation of the efforts of Mr. C. L. Graves in the responsible and difficult position which he has so long filled, giving such general satisfaction. The members of the company are one and all happy to avail themselves of this opportunity to show the high esteem they have for Mr. Graves, who has been the most conciliatory, gentlemanly and least tyrannical of stage managers during the time he has held the reins of management. A capital bill, sufficient to fill the house by its own attraction, is offered on this occasion, and the benefit is bound to be a bumper. Two new pieces, Leap Year and Buried Alive, the latter being appropriately brought out to benefit Graves. TOUCHSTONE.

ROBERT HELLER, the celebrated magician and pianist, thus commends Bradbury's New Scale Pianos:

Dear Sir: The musical treat at your Pianoforte Rooms the other day, when I chanced to meet Sanderson, Morgan and others, I enjoyed immensely, not only on account of the excellent music made on the occasion; but also because it is always pleasant to have a good, first-class instrument to play upon; and when Harry Sanderson asked me to visit your establishment, I was not prepared to find such Pianos. What more can be desired than the excellence of these instruments, I do not know, for in every particular, as to tone, touch and power, they are perfect. The duets played by Sanderson and myself proved the equality of the Pianos, for no matter which instruments we played upon—and I believe we tried eight or ten of them—the effect was always the same. Truly yours, ROBERT HELLER.

585 Broadway, New York, 1864.

COBB & SINTON'S great credit sale of Real Estate, takes place next Saturday. This property is known as the Haley ranch, and fronts on the bay, is thoroughly sheltered from the winds, and possesses noted fertility of soil. The description of the property can be found in our advertising columns, and its location fully delineated on the Lithographical Maps to be had of Cobb & Sinton. The terms of sale are very liberal—one quarter cash, and the remaining quarters in one, two and three yearly payments.

☞ THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co. THOMAS MOONEY, Secretary.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning.
A. KOHLER, 424 Sansome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

BOOK-KEEPING.

All branches necessary to a complete BUSINESS EDUCATION, taught PRACTICALLY and THOROUGHLY, by J. S. LUTY, Professor of Book-keeping and Penmanship, 305 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Rooms open day and evening. fe4 3m

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6,500,000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
'y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
Nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

COMMERCIAL STEAM PRINTING HOUSE.
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.,
517 CLAY and 514 COMMERCIAL STREETS.

Every description of BOOK, JOB and POSTER PRINTING done in the best style and at the lowest rates.
BOOK-BINDING and RULING done to order.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

PRINTING! PRINTING!!

H. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
NO. 522 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery, - - San Francisco.

All Descriptions of JOB PRINTING done cheaper and as good as anywhere else in the city.
fe4-tf

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25-tf

VANDALL, CARR & CO.,
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 410 CLAY STREET,
(North side, between Sansome and Battery.

☞ Particular attention paid to the printing of Briefs and Records. fe11-tf

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched in the month of APRIL, 1865:

JUNE 3d - - - - - - - CONSTITUTION

From Folsom-street Wharf, at nine o'clock, A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
mh25 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!!

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.

ARE NOW OFFERING

AT

No. 7 Montgomery street,

At Reduced Prices,

300 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 50 each.
250 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 75 each.
500 Calico Dress Patterns, at $2 each.
450 Delaine Dress Patterns, at $2 50 each.
5,000 yards Dress Goods, at 37 1-2c per yard.
4,000 yards Dress Goods, at 50 cents per yard.

Just received, a full line of new and desirable Dress Goods for the Season, comprising French Printed Percales, Cambrics, Lawns, Organdies, Linen Chambrays, Scotch Ginghams, etc., etc.

3,000 yards Black Paramatta, at 20 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Black Alpacas, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.

And a large assortment of new and desirable MOURNING GOODS, comprising 4-4 and 6-4 very fine Black Alpacas, English and French Bombazines, Black Byzantines, Tamise and Empress Cloths, Love and Crape Veils, Mourning Shawls, Crape Collars and sets, at reduced prices.

1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 per yard.
1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 25 per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 50 per yard.
3,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at 75 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at $1 per yard.
8,000 yds from $1 25 per yard to $8.

And a large assortment of new Chene Silks, Rop and Moiros, which they offer at very low prices.

4,000 pairs Ladies' White Cotton Hose, at 25c per pair.
500 dozen from $5 to $7 per dozen.

Also, a full assortment of English, German and Balbriggan Hose and half Hose, Ladies', Misses and Boys' Merino Vests, etc., at greatly reduced prices.

100 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $1 37 1-2 per dozen.
125 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $2 50 per doz.
250 Linen Sets, Embroidered, at 37 1-2 cents.

Also, a full line of Embroiderod Bands, Edgings and Insertings, at reduced prices.

DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT.

5 cases 4-4 fine Water Twist Muslin, at 20 cents per yd.
5 cases 4-4 best New York Mills, at 30 cents per yd.
35 cases of all the other standard brands, such as Hope, Lonsdale, White Rock, Androscoggin, Wauhegan, and Wamsutta, which we will offer at prices to suit the times.
8-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 45 cents per yard.
9-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 50 cents per yard.
10-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 55 cents per yard.
3,000 yds 4-4 Irish Linens, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 4-4 Irish Linens, (very heavy,) at 50 cents per yard.
1,000 yards 8-4 Bleached Table Linen, at $1 per yard.

And a very superior lot of real Barnsley Table Linen, at reduced prices.

2,000 yards Domet's Flannel, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 yards Shaker Flannel, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.
3,000 yards All Wool Shaker Flannel, at 45 cents per yard.

Also, a large and varied assortment of Towels, Towelling, Table Napkins, Piano Covers, Lace Curtains, Quilts and Blankets, all of which are offered at reduced prices.

ALEXANDRE'S BEST QUALITY OF KID GLOVES.

100 dozen Misses', at $1 25 per pair.
500 dozen Ladies', at $1 50 per pair.
200 doz. Gents', (double stitched,) at $1 50 per pair.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
my13-1m No. 7 Montgomery street.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
JUNE 13th!

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK!
VIA NICARAGUA!

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

SHORTEST AND QUICKEST ROUTE!!!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the commodious and favorite steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
J. H. BLETHEN, - - - - - Commander.

FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, NICARAGUA,
ON TUESDAY, - - - JUNE 13TH.
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely,
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the new and splendid Steamship
GOLDEN RULE,
3,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

The transit of the Isthmus is a pleasant trip. Meals furnished free by the Company while crossing. A baggage-master will be sent through by each steamer. Insurance on Treasure at the lowest rates.

The steamer AMERICA will succeed the MOSES TAYLOR in July.

For information or passage, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, AGENT, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
my20 Up stairs, San Francisco.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
de17-5m NEW YORK.

FLOWERS! FLOWERS!!

The attention of the Public is invited to
The Floral Repository,
Of C. B. MILLER, Bush street, opposite Cosmopolitan Hotel.

Mr. MILLER keeps constantly on hand the rarest and choicest flowers that the season or the market affords, and will furnish parties or private houses with floral decorations at the shortest notice. Bouquets made to order, and sent to their destination with promptness. Mr. Miller would invite attention to some curious specimens of the Orchis family which his collection affords, and he would be pleased to have a call from all lovers of Flowers, whether they wish to purchase or not.

"HOME, SWEET HOME!"

No home of taste is complete without Aquaria, Gold Fish, Birds, Fern Cases, new and rare Plants, Bulbs and Seeds, Cut Flowers and Bouquets for Weddings, Hanging Baskets, Rustic Stands, Shells, Minerals, etc.

A long experience at the East justifies Mr. Miller in promising to please the patrons who may favor him with a trial. He will also be happy at all times to furnish those who take an interest in flowers with any information relative to their care and culture that may be desired.

MILLER'S 206 Bush street,
Opposite the Cosmopolitan, San Francisco.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
de31 3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:

Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.
9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40
FROM THE CITY
10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.

Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.
my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

DR. H. A. BENTON,
Electro-Magnetic Physician,
OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Appliances and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:
Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Vinton, American Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.
Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.
ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE!

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Has fully established the superiority of
Redding's Russia Salve
Over all other preparations
FOR THE CURE OF
Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,
AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE
is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY,
A CURE FOR EVERY FORM OF
Pulmonary Complaint!
COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH, SPITTING OF BLOOD, LIVER COMPLAINT, etc., etc.

Consumption,
Which carries off more victims than any other disease, and which baffles the skill of the Physician to a greater extent than any other malady, often
YIELDS TO THIS REMEDY,
when all others prove ineffectual.

AS A MEDICINE,
Rapid in relief, soothing in effect, safe in its operation, it is
UNSURPASSED!
while as a preparation, free from noxious ingredients, poisons or minerals; uniting skill, science and medical knowledge, combining all that is valuable in the vegetable kingdom for this class of disease, it is
INCOMPARABLE!
and is entitled, merits and receives the enviable appellation of the
INVALID'S FRIEND.

Sold by all druggists and by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco.

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL THE

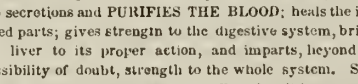
DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known in curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of doubt, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'



CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lachrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Augustine Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root, Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Pleurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtue of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG, M. D.,
Sole Proprietor, New York.

Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE
COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be ready for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th March, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM
OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - $660,000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29 3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY;
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25 3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10,000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28-tf 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

W. H. BROOKS,

STATIONER AND NEWS-DEALER,
No. 51 THIRD STREET,
Near the corner of Mission, - - - San Francisco.

DEALER IN

PLAIN & FANCY STATIONERY,

SCHOOL BOOKS, POCKET CUTLERY, SONGS and SONG BOOKS,

Local and Eastern Newspapers and Periodicals,

And Standard and current light Literature.

A large and well-assorted CIRCULATING LIBRARY on the most liberal terms.

Country orders promptly and accurately attended to.
mh25 3m

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office:

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S
no26 San Francisco.

REMOVAL! REMOVAL!!

WONDERFUL TRIUMPH

IN AMERICAN DENTISTRY.

DR. BEERS & CO.,

Having removed from 617 Clay street
To 129 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

ARE NOW MANUFACTURING THE NEW style of ARTIFICIAL TEETH so highly approved at the East, and which to be appreciated only requires to be seen. The Teeth, Gums and Plate are made of one entire piece of Porcelain without seam or joint, combining great strength and beauty with absolute purity and freedom from any metallic taste, while the coloring of the gums and the interior of the mouth are so perfect as to almost defy detection. All interested in the progress of the Arts are invited to examine samples of this work.

Superior Gold and Vulcanite Work also manufactured as usual, but at greatly reduced price. jul8

DR. LIBBEY,

WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

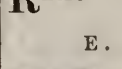
He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracted with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no charge.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. de10-3m

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,



SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order.

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

CARPET CLEANING.

You can get your Carpets cleaned at the STEAM-POWER CARPET Beating Machine for Five Cents per Yard.

Orders left in our boxes, at the following places, will be promptly attended to:

Southeast corner Clay and Dupont streets.
Southeast corner Broadway and Dupont streets.
Northeast corner of Stockton and Jackson streets.
Southeast corner of Powell and Union streets.
Northwest corner of Taylor and Pacific streets.
Southwest corner of Bush and Stockton streets.
Northeast corner of Geary and Taylor streets.
Northwest corner of Kearny and Market streets.
Southeast corner of Howard and Third streets.
Northeast corner of Second and Folsom streets.

Or at the Postoffice, or at Carnes' City Letter Express, 621 Montgomery street, directed to

J. SPAULDING & CO., 113 Fremont st.
mh11-3m.

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.
ap22-tf

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff; vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

AMALIE J. R. SCHAEBEN, Plaintiff; vs. AUGUSTE A. SCHAEBEN, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to AUGUSTE A SCHAEBEN, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap8-tjy8-lne

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the;

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons we can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfaction. my27-3m

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

SAN JOSE.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY.....Proprietor.

As a desirable place of resort for health or recreation, the above Hotel is not surpassed in the State.

Excellent accommodations for families, by the day, week, or month, on reasonable terms.

ju25

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street, Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

REGENERATING Extract of Millefleurs!

THIS UNRIVALLED PREPARATION

CLEANSES

—AND—

BEAUTIFIES

THE HAIR!

Immediately rendering the coarsest Hair soft and pliable, prevents Disease of the Scalp, premature decay of the Hair, and BALDNESS!

It may be used upon CHILDREN and YOUNG PERSONS with the greatest satisfaction and cheerful assurance of permanent benefit—producing Luxuriance of Growth, removing all Impurities from the surface of the Head—stimulating and preserving the HAIR to the latest period of life.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
Corner of Clay San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

DIABETES, INDIGESTION, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, STRANGUARY CALCULUS, GRAVEL, CATARRH AND OTHER AFFECTIONS OF THE BLADDER.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

A BAD BREATH!

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers

—IN—

Fine Clothing

—AND—

GENTLEMEN'S

FURNISHING GOODS,

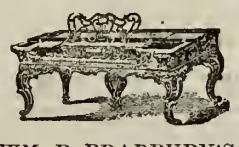
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,

200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,

ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME!



WM. B. BRADBURY'S

New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimonials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.

A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

M. HARKINS,

MANUFACTURER OF

LADIES', MISSES', AND CHILDRENS

Boots and Shoes.

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BOOTS, SHOES and SLIPPERS MADE TO ORDER.

No. 151 FOURTH STREET,

Second door above Howard, east side,

SAN FRANCISCO

☞ Repairing of all kinds neatly and promptly done.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS

—TO—

Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO

FOR RED BLUFF,

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

no5-tf J. WHITNEY, Jr., President.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

FURNITURE

Closing Out at any Price!

On account of the Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNDERSELL anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDSTEADS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS, BEDDING, ETC.,

At Your Own Prices!

ap22-3m

OVERSTOCKED! AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

NEW WHOLESALE STORE!

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the best selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES!

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.

ap22-3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, ETC.

WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS, mh4 3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioner,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

ap22-tf

COBB & SINTON,

AUCTIONEERS,

Salesrooms—No. 406 Montgomery Street.

SATURDAY,.....JUNE 10th 1865,

AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON,

AT SALESROOM,

406 MONTGOMERY STREET,

THIRD GRAND CREDIT SALE

OF

Real Estate.

SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY

OF THE

FINEST LOTS

EVER OFFERED

IN SAN FRANCISCO,

ON

Credit of One, Two and Three Years.

TITLE-UNITED STATES PATENT.

☞ This magnificent property fronts on and overlooks the Bay of San Francisco, and is located at and about the junction of the Shell Road to Bay View Park with the Fourth street Bridge and Road across the Potrero; thus furnishing access by the finest avenues of the city.

The fertility of the soil is not surpassed in the State, while the climate (though the property is but three miles from the City Hall,) is entirely free from the prevailing harsh winds of San Francisco.

The Fourth street bridge and Potrero Road, running through this property, is under contract and in course of rapid completion, to Bay View Trotting Park. When completed, the Company have determined to forthwith lay a double-track Railroad, from Brannan street the entire distance to said Bay View Park.

The Terms—One-Quarter Cash; One-Quarter in One Year; One-Quarter in Two Years; One-Quarter in Three Years.

Deferred payments bearing one per cent. per month interest, and secured by mortgages on the premises.

These fine Lots will be sold subject to the well known NUISANCE CLAUSE of the city of New York, which has conduced so much to the elegance of the Fifth, and other Avenues of that city. Persons purchasing can therefore rest assured of being forever free from prevailing nuisances—an advantage possessed by no other section of our city.

☞ The Lots and Blocks are surveyed and staked out, and Lithographed Maps of the same can be had at our office gratis. COBB & SINTON, je3-1t Auctioneers.

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,

NO. 32 SECOND STREET, SAN FRANCISCO,

(OVER MRS. WHEELER'S,)

INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest

EXPANDERS,

For Expanding the Chest, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

—

This Supporter possesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who have used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishing to possess

GRACE OF FORM

AND

SYMETRY OF PERSON.

It is comfortable to the frame, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of

GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of

BUST,

Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. READ also has a Supporter which she can confidently recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation; gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M. my27-tf

---

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

Engagement of the Celebrated Comedian,

MR. DAN SETCHELL,

SUPPORTED BY

THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Saturday Evening, June 3d, 1865,

Dan Setchell!

IN THE

DUTCH GOVERNOR,

AND

TOODLES!

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,

SATURDAY, June 31,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

The Comedy of

She Stoops to Conquer!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - 50 cents
Gallery - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR

OF THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

TO BE HELD IN THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,

IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.

The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Executive Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.

No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.

A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.

Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 2d of August.

Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 21 of August.

The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.

The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.

The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.

The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.

No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.

All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.

All communications to be addressed to C. S. HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hanscom, Edward Nuoan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.

THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Brandreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.] de17-3m

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,
Pine street, near Montgomery.

T. MAGUIRE.....Proprietor and Manager.
J. H. WARWICK.....Stage Manager

ON SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 3d,

MAGUIRE'S

Italian Opera Troupe

Will give Verdi's great creation, entitled

RIGOLETTO!

Gilda.....Signorina Olivia Sconcia.
Madelene.....Miss Adelaide Phillips.
The Duke of Mantua.....Signor Giovanni Sbriglia.
Rigoletto.....Signor D. Orlandini.
Sparafucile.....Mr. John De Haga.
Count Monterone.....Mr. John Gregg.
Page.....Miss Lizzie Allen

ANTHONY REIFF, JR.....Conductor of Orchestra.

Seats can be secured two days in advance.

Books of the Operas can be purchased at the Box Office.

Dress and Family Circle.....$1 00
Orchestra Seats.....$1 00
Gallery.....50 cents
Private Boxes.....$10 and $5
Reserved Seats.....$1 50

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.

517

CLAY STREET, BET. SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY

my27

REDUCED PRICES!

TAAFFE & CO.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET.

HAVING PURCHASED AN IMMENSE STOCK

OF

Fancy and Staple Dry Goods,

CONSISTING IN PART OF

Rich Black, Colored and Plain DRESS SILKS. Poplins, Wiuseys, Linseys, Mohairs, Alpaccas, Merinos DeBages, DeLaines, Travelling Dress Goods, etc.

Cotton Sheetings and Shirtings; Linen Sheetings and Shirtings; Table, Damasks, Napkins, Towels and Toweling.

Jackonets, Swiss, Mull and Nainsook Muslins, in Plain Plaid and Striped, Lace and Muslin Curtains, Table and Piano Covers.

Blankets, Flannels, Quilts, Cloth Cloakings, etc.

Mourning Goods, in Bombazines, Alpaccas, Empress and Ottoman Cloth, Merinos, Silks, Challys, Prints, Ginghams, etc.

Also, French, English and American Prints, Ginghams, etc.

Purchasers will please to examine their stock before buying elsewhere, as they are offering great inducements.

Terms Cash, and only One Price Asked.

je3-1t

HOSIERY! HOSIERY!

TAAFFE & CO.

ARE OFFERING, AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,

GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO PURCHASERS IN

Gentlemen's Ladies', and Children's Undergarments, in

MERINO, SILK AND COTTON,

Consisting in part of

100 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $1 per pair.
200 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $1 25 per pr.
80 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $1 50 per pr.
75 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, $2 per pair.
200 doz Gent's Merino Shirts and Drawers, from $2 50 to $8.
1000 doz Gent's Cotton Half Hose, $3 per doz.
500 doz Gent's Cotton Hose, $3 50 to $7

ALSO,

Ladies' Cotton, Merino, Lisle Thread and Balbinggan Hose—all at package prices.
Children's do do at package prices.
Gent's Linen and Cotton Shirts.
Pocket Handkerchiefs, in Linen and Silk.
Cravats, Neck Ties, Gloves, etc.

Upon examination these goods will all be found FROM 20 TO 50 PER CENT. LESS than such goods are usually sold.

Terms Cash, and only ONE PRICE ASKED.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET.

je3-1tc LICK HOUSE.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY BALL

OF THE

"Sherman Guard."

TO BE GIVEN

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 16, 1865.

HONORARY COMMITTEE.

Gov. F. F. Low,	Maj. Gen. Irwin McDowell,
Hon. C. Cole,	Brig. Gen. George Wright,
Hon. D. C. McRuer,	Col. Joseph Wood,
Brig. Gen. J. Hewston, Jr.,	Col. J. W. McKenzie,
Major Andrews,	Col. M. C. Smith,
Col. F. G. E. Tittel,	Col. A. J. Jackson,
Col. C. L. Taylor,	William Sherman,
R. G. Sneath,	William Shew,
H. M. Newhall,	J. M. Johnson,
Samuel Brannan,	William G. Badger,
D. Scannell,	Col. Charles James.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

Captain S. Barker,	Lieut. S. A. Rounds,
Lieut. J. D. Bartlett,	Serg't F. Kenuedy,
Serg't F. Ahell,	W. A. Stuart.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Capt. S. Barker,	Lieut. A. T. Ruthrnuff,
Serg't F. Kennedy,	Serg't F. A. Hoogs,
W. J. Newton,	C. P. LeBreton.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

Lieut. J. D. Bartlett,	Serg't F. Kennedy,
Serg't F. Ahell,	John J. Mountain,

John Pennycook.

Tickets, $2. To be had of members, or at the door. Music by Sander's Full Band, fifteen pieces. my27

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent. including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7-30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent. per day on a $50 note.
Two cents	"	$100 "
Ten "	"	$500 "
20 "	"	$1,000 "
$1 "	"	$5,000 "

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

March 25, 1865. ap29-3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency. JAY COOKE,

my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No. 3.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 10, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES:
- Reply to "Antediluvian." — By Julia B. Hoitt.
- Review of Parburt's "Anselmo." By "Antediluvian."
- The Holly.—By "Iris."
- Answers to Correspondents. — By "Mark Twain."
- Crinoline, Pro and Con.
- Chinese Amusements.
- Politeness, Insular and Continental.
- The Game of Yadaco.

POETRY:
- Richard Cobden.
- Franco in Mexico and Elsewhere.
- The Ice Flower.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:
- Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

EDITORIALS:
- The Church and State.
- Amateur Correspondents.
- Musical Matters.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

THEATRICAL TALK:
- The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.
- Theatricals Abroad.

THE WEEK'S DESPATCHES:
- A Condensation of the Telegraphic News of the Week.

NEW BOOKS:
- A Review of Recent Publications.

MISCELLANY:
- Interesting Selected Articles.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"We that have free souls, it touches us not."

HAMLET—Act III., Scene 2.

MR. PIXLEY in his speech in defense of the Salvador pirates, was evidently determined to go the entire animal, otherwise the whole hog, even to the extent of wrapping himself up in the Confederate flag. Mr. Delos Lake, in his answer to Mr. Pixley, slightly uses the latter up, and, assisted by grandmamma Alta, who has brought out her knitting needles, and made some furious stabs at the prisoners while they are still under trial, will probably influence the minds of the Commission most unfavorably against them. Mr. Delos Lake made a capital speech; he corrected Mr. Pixley in his geography; he made a very good pun, for a lawyer, about a cannon and a canon of law. Mr. Delos Lake took as much pains to prove that the prisoners had not reached the high sea as musical critics have, in attempting to prove that Shriglia has never reached the high C. He introduces a Story to prove that he is right in the matter. It seems that the tide has something to do with it. The tide in the affairs of these prisoners is very probably not one that will lead to fortune. Mr. Lake pitches into Mr. Pixley severely for saying:

"Perhaps although we are prisoners, we may congratulate Henry Kellock Davenport, Esq., of Georgia, Commander of the United States ship of war Lancaster, carrying forty-four guns, that he met that flag in the trunk of a betrayed prisoner, rather than flying at the masthead of a Confederate man-of-war."

He tells him that Captain Davenport has met with more than "trunks of betrayed prisoners," he had fought live rebels at fort Hatteras and other places. Mr. Lake thought it was better to "capture a rebel flag in a betrayed prisoner's trunk" than to let it fly over betrayed Union men's corpses. We do not wish to pre-judge the case of these men, as the daily papers, with the honorable exception of the Bulletin have done, but we must say that Hogg will be lucky if he saves his bacon and if he remains unhung we trust he will be cured of treason; Black's case looks dark; a live donkey will be better off than Lyon if he is found guilty; the warlike Swain will wish he had not forsaken bucolic pursuits to plow the main, and the others, no doubt, are now shedding many a private tear over the fate which their attempt to start a privateer is likely to bring them to.

A GOOD many people sneer at the idea that it is of any consequence that a man should express himself in grammatical language. Persons of this description will of course think it quite sufficient that a Mayor should write "good horse sense," as they would express it, without being particular as to whether he used good English; however, we hope Mayor Coon did not write the notice concerning the celebration of the Fourth of July now approaching; a Mayor ought to write more correct English in public documents than the following: "We had instead of the great day of patriotic rejoicing, a funeral day, accompanied and succeeded with all the insignia of a Nation's mourning." "Succeeded with." That is terrible.

General Halleck has issued an order in Richmond forbidding marriage until the parties contracting matrimony, and clergymen or magistrates officiating, shall have taken the oath of allegiance.

That is just as it should be. People who are not true to the Union of States would not prove true to their union in the married state. The fathers and mothers having taken the oath, all the babies will of course be loyal. General Halleck is not going to let people down South breed a lot of little rebels.

A RICHMOND newspaper writer says that Jeff. Davis was a tyrant in his household. We do not believe it. We think Jeff, while he had a fancy for petticoats for his own wear, allowed Mrs. Davis to wear the unwhisperables.

How poor Mr. Banting must regret ever having published that famous pamphlet. His hook and his system have been harped upon by a thousand punsters. To make the number of puns one thousand and one, will not be, we trust, like adding the last straw, which is proverbially said to fracture the Dromedary's spinal column. It seems as if, when every other topic is exhausted, a man can always make a joke on Banting. We forget the exact weight of flesh under which he staggered, but we know he must be crushed at present under a thousand puns' weight. Why should Banting be thus hantered, while Brillat-Savarin escapes? By-the-by, the latter teaches how young ladies can be fed as plump as quails. This is more adapted for use in California, we imagine, than Banting's system. Young ladies here do not lean towards stoutness, but rather towards leanness. Scragginess is so severe a feminine misfortune that we think his mode of diet ought to be generally adopted. Byron described young ladies fresh from the nursery as "smelling of bread and butter;" and if this system became popular, novelists might depict their heroines by mentioning their food. For example: "The beautiful Maud had been admirably brought up, mentally and physically. Her dancing was the poetry of the ball-room; her music was equal to that of the spheres; her exquisite form had been judiciously rounded by pâtés de foi gras for breakfast, broiled quails and Amontillado for lunch, the choicest meat, game, and pastry for dinner, with a light supper of oysters and a glass of Grand Chartreuse. Mush and milk lent its delicious whiteness to her skin; cherry and strawberry ices had reddened her lips; almonds gave shape to her eyes, and filberts to her finger-nails. There was the effervescence of the very best Clicquot in her merry, musical laugh." Now, wouldn't that be a rather pleasant novelty in these monotonous days? Just as soon as Miss Braddon receives her copy of THE CALIFORNIAN, to which she has been a constant subscriber ever since it paid her the compliment of sending for advance sheets of "Only a Clod," she will no doubt pirate the idea; we will make an exception in her favor, but other novelists are requested to observe that it is copyright. We think Wilkie Collins might, if he ever introduces another "Count Fosco" into a novel, add to the interest of the character by reducing him on the Banting system; that gentleman will please accept our assurances of distinguished consideration, for having, for the twenty-first time since the publication of his pamphlet, furnished the subject for a paragraph.

THE Pall-Mall Gazette mourns over the fact that people are now-a-days afraid to hiss bad plays and bad acting. It says: "Houses are packed to applaud pieces and actors, recalls are organized, gushes of enthusiasm and showers of bouquets are calmly preconcerted. Rant and bad taste are saluted with acclamations, for which the actor gives the cue by making his points and pauses in a manner well understood by his friends of the free list. Why is all this endured? If there is to be freedom to applaud, there should be equal freedom to condemn. We all see and suffer by these tricks. Why do we not manfully enter our protest by hissing wherever anything is presented which we strongly disapprove? Why do we let hireling plaudits encourage what is bad, and help to foster a system which is eating into the very vitals of our stage? This forbearance is indeed 'cowardly and un-English.' Where an affront is put on our understanding by rant and vulgarity, we have no right to indulge in merely passive disgust, in the face of the applause either of injudicious fools or of mere claqueurs." We quite agree with the Pall-Mall Gazette, but, goodness gracious! If a hiss were to be heard in a San Francisco theatre it would be gone goose with the man who uttered it, and the ladies would all go into hysterics. We should have liked to have witnessed the effect a hiss would have had on the "world-renowned Heron." She richly deserved to be hissed when she gratuitously insulted an audience because some boys in the gallery called her out with a "hi-yi." Things have been allowed to go so far that we imagine it will scarcely pay to hiss histrionic humbugs.

AN Eastern paper tells a story of "an astonished Englishman," who had been some weeks in Washington, remarking, on the night of the assassination, "I shall pack my trunk and be off in the morning; for your streets will run blood to-morrow." The train did not leave on Saturday morning, and he was obliged to stay. The editor continues: "We saw him on Saturday evening, and his words were: 'It is marvellous. In Paris or London, rivers of blood would been shed under like circumstances.'" It was, indeed, marvellous that no disturbance took place, but the Englishman who put London on the same footing with Paris, with regard to such disturbance, was an idiot It is a considerable length of time since "rivers of blood" have been shed in London.

THE Ladies' Christian Commission has disbanded. The lady members must find some other good work to occupy them. We think it would be an eminently Christian commission for ladies to undertake to get young men to escort them to church; they would be doing a great missionary work if they took a new escort every Sunday. What gallant young man could refuse to go to church with a pretty girl, and he might eventually get into the habit of going regularly. There is an idea!

THE "Associated Alumni of the Pacific Coast" had a jollification on Tuesday last at Oakland. Judging from the description given by the Bulletin, it must have been a deadly lively affair. First, the alumni went to church, and the Reverend Horatio Stebbins delivered an oration, in which he made use of a most remarkable expression; he said "had men were made to throw the loaded dice of God." We think this is a slightly irreverent idea. It is a wonder that the reverend gentleman did not follow out his sport-ive idea, and talk about the cards in the game of life being "stocked," etc., etc. After the exercises at the church were concluded, the alumni banqueted on "strawberries and milk and lobsters," so we are informed by the Bulletin, a paper which is too honest to call milk "cream," or to omit to mention that there was no salt to eat with the lobsters. The Bulletin speaks in glowing terms of "the unadorned Hebes of Oakland, whose nimble feet conveyed the nectarine coffee to and fro among the guests." "Nectarine coffee" must taste very fine when it is conveyed by the "nimble feet" of Hebes. We suppose they had their hands full of lobsters and milk. After a number of toasts had been drunk in "nectarine coffee," we are told an excellent ode was sung. It was cruel of the Bulletin, after calling it excellent, to give a verse as a sample. If "the following verse is a sample," as we are told it is, the alumnus who wrote it ought to go back to his Alma Mater and be alumniated more:

> "The seasons that we tarried within those Attic bowers
> Were dear but evanescent, and are no longer ours;
> So in the present let us be as blissful as we can—
> The memory of the banquets past would starve a hungry man;
> And to increase our pleasures the moments as they go,
> We'll gild with reminiscences of days of long ago."

THE London Index on the news of the fall of Richmond being received, discourses learnedly in its issue of April 20th, on the war. It describes the different stages of the rebellion yet to come, thus:

"When the curtain again rises it will be upon that second stage of the war which we have of late constantly foreshadowed in these columns—a stage upon which we look hopefully because it gives the Confederates for the first time the full benefit of their vast territory, scattered population and fertile soil, all of which have heretofore served the enemy more than themselves; and it inaugurates tactics of all others best adapted to their genius, and least to that of their adversary."

The Index is certainly wonderfully in "foreshadowing" stages, but it has omitted to describe one—the last, which comes after even the columns of the Index cannot prop up the Southern Confederacy. It says: "There may be a stage even beyond these." Of course there is—a stage on which Jeff Davis will figure as a prominent performer, and the drop will not be the drop of the curtain.

The experiment of Italian Opera at the Metropolitan Theatre has proved a failure. A company which had to be puffed into public appreciation by notices of its performances which were "arranged for," and which refused the privileges of the press, as stated in a daily paper, to critics who would not go to the box office to be muzzled before entering, could scarcely expect to succeed. We anticipate hearing shortly, without any regret, that a certain portly tenor is on the high sea, having learned to his cost—or somebody elses—that a baritone and a soprano singer do not constitute an opera company.

WE wonder if people in the interior of the State do not imagine from reading the San Francisco papers, that an equestrian opera is being given at the Metropolitan theatre. They are told almost every day that the tenor is a little ho(a)rse, and if they look in the Call they will read that the stage manager is the filly Nero (Fillenero.)

SIGNORINA ELVIRA BRAMBILLA is a most sensible lady; the impressario of the Metropolitan Theatre opera troupe having neglected to cash the splendid notes uttered by the silvery voiced singer, which all must confess to be a fair equivalent for gold, she suspends their issue until her demands are satisfied. We are willing to believe that the impressario has not the wherewithal to pay; it cannot surely be Yankee sharpness which makes him endeavor to get ahead of a lady.

IT is a remarkable fact that when an officer is shot on a field of battle, he generally exclaims: "Bury me on the spot where I fell"—that is if newspaper correspondents are to be believed.

THE London Fun has this line: "THE SONG OF THE SHIRT—'The Sewing Machine.'" We can't see it. A sewing machine can't be a song, anyhow, although it may be a Singer.

THE steamer came in on Thursday, and it was dreadful to see the way in which the ladies rushed after the mails. Thursday was a re(u)d letter day in San Francisco.

WE notice in the London Sporting Life an announcement that "Lightning is struck out of all engagements." Lightning is just as bad to bet on here as in England. Lightning made a false start this week, and was finally struck out of all engagements.

TREM.

YADACÉ.

YDACE is a game. There are required to play it neither cards nor dice, cues, balls, checker-board, counters, fish, pawns, castles nor rooks. It can be played in winter or in summer, at home or abroad, in perfect silence, amidst the greatest hubbub. The race is to the swift in yadace"; and it is a game that a child of nine may begin, and may not have finished when he finds himself a man ninety years of age.

To give you a proper notion of yadacé I must take you to Algiers.

Are you acquainted with that strange town? the aspect of which—half Oriental, half Parisian—puts me in mind fantastically of a fierce Barbary lion that has had his claws pared and his teeth drawn, and has been clipped, shaven, and curled into a semi-similitude of a French poodle. I never was in Algiers, myself. I mean to go there, of couse, (when I have visited Persia, Iceland, Tibet, Venice, the ruined cities of Central America, Heligoland, and a few other places I have down in my note-book,) but my spirit has been there, and with its aid, that of my friend Doctor Cieco, who was formerly a surgeon in the Foreign Legion out there, and a file of the Akbar newspaper I can form a tolerably correct mind-picture of the capital of Algeria. A wonderful journal is the Akbar, and a magic mirror of Algiers itself. Commandants d'etat major, chiefs d'escadron, and chirugiens major are mixed up with sheikhs, mollahs, dervishes and softas; spahis and zouaves indigénes. There are reports of trials for murder where Moorish women have been slain in deserted gardens, by choked-up wells, under the shadows of date-trees—slain by brothers and cousins El This, Ben That, and Sidi Somebody—for the unpardonable eastern offence of appearing in the presence of Christians without their veils; the witnesses are sworn on the Koran; the prisoner appears at the bar in a snowy burnous; the galleries are full of Moorish ladies in white yashmaks or veils, and Jewish women in jewelled turbans; and the prosecution is conducted by a Procurcur Imperial in such a square toque or cap, and black gown, as you may see any day in the Salle des Pas Perdus of the Paris Palais de Justice for a twenty-eight shilling return-ticket. There is a Monsieur le President, glib clerks, to read the code Napoleon; gendarmes to keep order, and outside the court a guillotine, spick and span new from Paris, to which the bearded prisoner is, in due course of time, led for execution in a costume the very counterpart of that which Jacob wore when he went a-courting Laban's daughters. In the Akbar you may read advertisements of mosques to be sold, milliners just arrived from Paris with the latest fashions; of balls at the ancient palace of the Dey; of a coffee-house to be let on lease close to the shambles in the Jews' quarter; of an adjudication in the bankruptcy of Skeikh El Haschen El Gouti Mogrebbin, and the last importation of Doctor Tintamarre's Infallible Pectoral Paste. In one column there is an announcement of the approaching sale by auction of the entire household furniture, wearing apparel and jewelry of Sultana Karadja, deceased—I suppose an equivalent to the honorable Mrs. Smithers, here. Sofas, divans, clocks, jewelled pipes, dresses of cloth of gold, turbans and gauze bonnets are to be sold. The whole reads like an execrable French translation of a tale in the Arabian Nights. Altogether, reading the Akbar, I fancy that I know Algiers. I seem to see the deep blue skies, the low white houses with projecting balconies and porticoes painted a vivid green, and roofs fantastically tilted. The purple shadows that the houses cast. The narrow dark lanes where the eaves meet, and where you walk between dead-falls, through chinks of which, for aught you know, bright eyes may be looking. The new streets with tall French houses and pert French names; where cafés brilliant with plate-glass, gilding and arabesque paintings, quite outstare the humble little shieling of the Moorish cafejee with his stores of pipes and tiny fillagree cups of bitter coffee full of dregs. The sandy up-hill ground. The crowded port, where black war-steamers are moored by strange barks with sails of fantastic shapes and colors. The bouncing shop of the French epicier, who sells groceries, wines, and quack medicines, and whose smart young shopman, with an apron and a spade-cut beard, stands at the door; and the dusky unwindowed stall of the native merchant who sits cross-legged, smoking on a bale of goods in an odor of drugs, perfumed leather, and fragrant tobacco. The motley throng of officers with cigars and clanging spurs, and kepis knowingly set on one side of the head; of zouaves, dandies from the Boulevard des Italiens; grisettes in lace caps; commandants' wives in pink bounets; orderly dragoons, Bedouins mounted on fleet Arabs, date and sherbet sellers, Jews, fezzes, cabs, turbans, yashmaks, burnouses, lancers' caps and felt hats, and the many mingled smells of pitch, tar, garlic, pot-au-feu, ottar of roses, caporal tobacco, haschish, salt water, melons and musk.

Is this Algiers, I wonder. I fancy, erroneously, perhaps, that I can divine a city from a newspaper—a flask—a shoe—the most inconsiderable object. I have a clear and counterfeit presentment in my mind of Leipsic, from a book—which I am unable to read—a dimly-printed, coarse-papered pamphlet stitched in rough blue paper. I can see in it high houses, grave, fat-faced children, a predominance of blue in the color for stockings—dinners at one o'clock—much beer—much tobacco—a great deal of fresh boiled beef, soup and cabbage—early beds—straw-colored beards—green spectacles—large umbrellas—and a great many town clocks. I should like to know whether Leipsic really possesses any of these characteristics. A worthy, weather-beaten old sea-captain once gave me a perfectly definite notion of Sierra Leone, in one little anecdote. "Sierra Leone, sir," he said: "I'll tell you what Sierra Leone is like. A black fellow, sir, goes into the market. It's as hot as —— well—anything. He buys a melon for three farthings—and what does he do with it? The black fellow, sir, hasn't a rag on. He's as bare as a robin. He buys his melon, cuts it in halves, and scoops out the middle. He sits in one half, covers his head with the other, and eats the middle. That's what he does, sir." I saw Sierra Leone in all its tropical glory, cheapness of produce, darkness of population, gigantic vegetation and primitive state of manners immediately.

All this, although you may not think so, bears upon, concerns, is yadacé. But, to give you yadace at once, we will quit Sierra Leone, and come back to Algiers.

Few would imagine, while watching in a Moorish coffee-house the indigenes, as the native inhabitants are called playing with a grave and apparently immovable tranquillity, at draughts, chess, or backgammon—not speaking, scarcely moving—that men, seemingly so impassable to the chances of loss or gain, were capable of feeling the most violent effects of the passion for gaming. Yet these passions and these effects they feel in all their intensity. They lack, it is true, the varied emotions that winners or losers express at the green baize table of the trente-et-quarante, the parti-colored wheel of roulette, the good-intention paved court of the Stock Exchange, or the velvety sward of the area before the Grand Stand at Epsom. But no bull or bear, no caster or punter, no holder of a betting-book who has just lost thousands and his last half-penny, could ever show a visage so horribly aghast, so despairingly down-falleu, so ferociously miscrable, as that unlucky Algerine player to whom his adversary has just pronounced the fatal and triumphant word—Yadace.

The game is of the utmost simplicity, and consists solely in abstaining from receiving anything whatsoever from the person with whom you play. In order to ratify the convention which is established between the parties at the commencement of a game, each player takes by the end a morsel of straw, a slip of paper, or even a blade of grass, which is broken or torn in two between them, the sacramental formula "Yadacé" being pronounced at the same time. After this, the law of the game is in full force. In some cases, when one of the players imagines that he has to deal with an inexperienced or inattentive player, he immediately attempts to catch him by presenting him with the piece of straw or paper which has remained on his side, under pretence of having it measured against the other. Should the novice be foolish enough to accept the fragment, the terrible yadacé is forthwith thundered forth, and the game is lost in the very outset. But it rarely happens, save, perhaps, when one of the players is a European, totally a stranger to the traditions of the game, that any one is found thoughtless enough to be caught in this gross, palpable trap. Much more frequently a struggle of mutual astuteness, caution and circumspection begins, which is prolonged for days, weeks, months, and, in many cases, years.

As it is almost impossible that persons who live habitually together should not sometimes find it unavoidable to take something from one another, it is agreed upon, in the yadacéen hypothesis, that mutual acceptation may be made of articles, on condition that before an object is touched the person who accepts should say to the person who offers the article, "Fi bali," or "Ala bali;" literally, "with (or by) my knowledge;" that is to say, I receive, with knowledge of reception. It is also agreed that all things appertaining to the body may be received without prejudice to a state of yadacé. The Moorish authorities mention specially a kiss or a grasp of the hand, but they say nothing of a blow. Perhaps they think that with a Moslem such a gift could never, under any circumstances, be received, but must naturally be returned as soon as given.

Yadacé may more properly be looked upon as a game of forfeits than as one adapted to gambling purposes; but the Algerines make—or rather used to make—it subservient to the good service of mammon to a tremendous extent. Before the French conquest, in the old times of the Dey and his jewelled fan, with which he was wont to rap the fingers of European consuls when they were impertinent—when the Mussulman population of Algiers was both numerous and wealthy, yadacé was in the highest fashion: husbands played at yadacé with their wives; brothers with their sisters; friends among themselves—and enormous sums were frequently won and lost. Houses, gardens, farms, nay, whole estates were often staked; and many a wealthy Moslem saw his fortune depart from him for having had the imprudence to accept a pipe of tobacco, a cup of coffee, a morsel of pilaff, without having pronounced the talismanic words, "Fi bali." One devoted amateur of yadacé, a venerable Turk, carried his caution and determination not to be taken in to such an extent, that he never helped himself to a pinch of snuff, of which he was immoderately fond, without repeating to himself the formula, "Ala bali!"

If, during the nights of the Ramadhan, you happen to stroll into any of the Moorish coffee-houses in Algiers, you will find yadacé to be a favorite theme with the kawis, or story-tellers, and groups of attentive indigiues listening to their animated narrations of feats of intellectual dexterity in yadacé players and hairbreadth escapes by flood and field in that adventurous game. The majority of these stories are quite untranslatable into western language. I think, however, I can find two anecdotes that will give you some idea of the subtleties of yadacé.

Karamani-oglou, the son of Tehoka-oglou, was a rich cloth-merchant of Algiers. Five long years had Karamani-oglou been playing at yadacé with his wife, but without success. The wife of Karamani was young and beautiful; but as yet Allah had not blessed their union with children. Suddenly it occurred to the cloth-merchant to make a pilgrimage to the holy city of Mecca. He was absent just two years and nine months; but you must know that the pilgrimage was undertaken purely with a view towards yadacé. For the cunning Karamani reasoned within himself thus: "When I return home after so long an absence, my wife will be glad to see me. She will have forgotten all about yadacé, or at least will be thrown off her guard. She will accept, I will wager my beard, a present from her long-absent husband, particularly if that present happens to be a diamond ring of great value. Bismillah, we will see." Karamani-oglou bought the ring—a most gorgeous one—and returning safe and sound to Algiers, entered the court-yard of his own house just in the cool of the evening. Fathma, his wife, was standing in the inner porch. She looked younger and more beautiful than ever; but she was dandling a sturdy, curly-headed little boy, some two years old; and all at once a golden arrow shot through the heart of the cloth-merchant, and a silvery voice cried: "Karamani-oglou, you have a son!" The delighted Mussulman rushed forward: his face was bathed with tears of joy. "I have a son!" he gasped. "You have, O Oglou!" replied his blushing spouse. He held out his arms for the precious burden; he covered the child with kisses; he called him whole vocabularies of endearing names; when all at once he heard a peal of laughter that sounded like the mirth of ten thousand djinns, afrits and ghoules; and looking up, he saw Fathma, his wife, dancing about the courtyard in her baggy trowsers. From her had emanated the djinn-like laughter, and she was crying: "Yadacé! Karamani-oglou! Yadacé! O my lord! Yadacé! O my caliph! Yadacé! O my effendi! Yadacé! yadace! yadacé! Thou saidst not, "Fi bali!" when thou tookest the child from my arms! Yadacé!"

"Go to Eblis!" roared the enraged Karamani-oglou, letting the little boy fall flop upon the pavement of the court, where he lay howling, with nobody to pick him up.

From the foregoing, and especially from the following anecdote, it would appear that it is in the highest degree dangerous to play at yadacé with your wife.

Hassan-el-Djeninah was, thirty years since, vizier and chief favorite to the Pasha of the Oudjak of Constantine. He was the fattest man in the pachalic, and, more than that, was reckoned to be the most jealous husband in the whole of Barbary. It is something to be the most jealous in a land where all husbands are jealous. Gay young Mussulman sparks trembled as they saw Hassan-el-Djeninah waddle across the great square of Constantine, or issue from the barber's, or enter the coffee-house. He walked slowly, and with his legs very wide apart. His breath was short, but his yataghan was long, and he could use it. Once, and once only, he detected a young Beyjzade, Ibrahim-el-Majki, sacrilegiously attempting to accost his wife as she came from the bath, and having even the hardihood to lift a corner of her veil. "Allah Akbar! God is great!" Hassan the vizier was wont to say, pulling from a small green silk purse in his girdle a silver skewer, upon which appeared to be three dried-up shrivelled oysters. "This is the nose, and these are the ears of Ibrahim-el-Majki." Whereupon the beholders would shudder, and Hassan-el-Djeniuah would replace his trophies in his girdle and waddle away.

Hassan had four wives—Zouluki Khanoum, Suleima Khanoum, Gaza Khanoum, and Leila Khanoum. Khanoum, be it understood, means Lady, Madame, Donna, Signora. Now, if Hassan-el-Djeninah was jealous of his wives, they, you may be sure, were jealous of each other—save poor little Leila, the youngest wife (the poor child was only sixteen years old,) who was not of a jealous disposition at all; but who, between the envy of her sister-wives, who hated her, and the unceasing watchfulness of her husband, who loved her with inconvenient fondness, led a terrible life of it. Leila Khanoum was Hassan's favorite wife. He would suffer her, but no one else, to fill his pipe, to adjust the jewelled mouth-piece to his lips, and to tickle the soles of his august feet when he wished to be lulled to sleep. He would loll for hours upon the cushions of his divan, listening while she sang monotonous love-songs, rocking herself to and fro the while, and accompanying herself upon the little guitar called a quoithrah, as it is the manner of Moorish ladies to do. He gave her rich suits of brocade and cloth of gold; he gave her a white donkey from Spain, to ride on when she went to the ba h; he gave her jewels and Spanish doubloons to twine in her tresses; scented tobacco to smoke, and hennah for her eyelids and finger-nails; finally, he condescended to play with her for a princely stake—nothing less than the repudiation of the other three wives, and the settlement of all his treasures upon her first-born—at yadacé.

At the same time, as I have observed, he was terribly jealous of her, and watched her, night and day, with the patience of a beaver, the perspicuity of a lynx, the cunning of a fox, and the ferocity of a wolf. He kept spies about her. He bribed the tradesmen with whom she dealt, and the attendants at the baths she frequented. He caused the menfonce, or little round aperture in the wall of the queublou or alcove of her apartment (which menfonce looked into the street) to be bricked up. He studied the language of flowers (which, in the East, is rather more nervous and forcible a tongue than with us,) in order that he might be able to examine Leila's bouquets, and discover whether any floral billet-doux had been sent her from outside. To complete his system of espionage, he cultivated a warm and intimate friendship with Ali ben Assa, the opium merchant, whose house directly faced his own, in order that he might have the pleasure of sitting secretly at the window thereof, at periods when he was supposed to be miles away, and watching who entered or left the mansion opposite.

One day, as he was occupied in this manner, he saw his wife's female negro slave emerge from his house, look round cautiously, as if to ascertain if she were observed, and beckon with her hand. Then, from a dark passage, he saw issue a young man habited as a Frank. The accursed giaour looked cautiously, as the negro had done, crossed the road, whispered to her, slipped some money into her hand: and then the treacherous and guilty pair entered the mansion together.

Hassan-el-Djeninah broke out in a cold perspiration. Then he began to burn like live coals. Then he foamed at the mouth. Then he got his moustachios between his teeth, and knawed them. Then he tore his beard. Then he dug his nails into the palms of his hands. Then he clapped his hand upon the hilt of the scimetar, and said:

"As to the black slave, child of Jehanum and Ahriman as she is, she shall walk on the palms of her hands all the days of her life; for if there be any virtue in the bastinado, I will leave her no feet to walk upon. As to the giaour, by the beard of the Prophet, I will have his head!"

Long before this speech was finished, he had crossed the road, traversed his courtyard, entered his house, ascended the staircase, and gained the portal of his wife's apartment. He tore aside the silken curtains, and rushed into the room, livid with rage, just as Leila Khanoum was in the act of bending over a large chest of richly-carved wood, in which she kept her suits of brocade and cloth of gold, her jewels and her sequins. Hassan-el-Djeninah saw the state of affairs at a glance: the giaour must be in that chest!

He knocked over the wretched black slave as one might a ninepin, rushed to the chest, and tried to raise the lid. It was locked.

"The key, woman!—the key!" he roared.

"My lord, I have it not," stammered Leila Khanoum. "I have lost it—I have sent it to be repaired."

"The key!" screamed Hassan-el-Djeninah, looking ten thousand Bluebeards at once.

With tears and trembling Leila at length handed him the key, and then flung herself on her knees, as if to entreat mercy. The infuriated Hassan opened the chest. There was somebody inside, certainly, and the somebody was inhabited as a giaour; but beneath the Frank habit there were the face and form of Lulu, Leila Khanoum's Georgian slave.

"What is this?" asked the bewildered Hassan, looking round. "Who is laughing at my beard?" What is this?"

"Yadacé!" screamed Leila Khanoum, throwing herself down on the divan, and rolling about in ecstasy. "Yadacé, Oh, my lord, for you took the key!"

"Yadacé," repeated the Georgian slave, making a low, obeisance.

"Yadacé!" echoed the negress, with a horrible grin, and showing her white teeth.

"Allah Akbar!" said Hassan-el-Djeninah, looking very foolish.

And such is the game of Yadacé.

Dr. Robertson observed that Johnson's jokes were the rebukes of the righteous, described in Scripture as being like excellent oil. "Yes," exclaimed Burke, "oil of vitriol!"

To a gentleman who had a very red face, Foote said: "Come and look over my garden wall; my cucumbers are very backward."

FRANCE IN MEXICO AND ELSEWHERE.

La Formica Viaggiatrice. — Translated from Burchiello.

An ant, when wandering here and there,
Came, in her course erratic where
A horse's skull lay dry and bare.
As she gazed in ecstacy,
The bony structure seemed to be
A place fit for loyalty.
On every side she wondering clomb,
Then said, I will no longer roam.
For creature ne'er had such a home.
But when at length with weary feet
She had sought throughout her whole retreat,
But something sought in vain to eat;
'Tis better far, she said, that I
Return to the formicary,
Than here remain of want to die—
So off I go. Her thoughts are mine;
I never call a mansion fine,
Grand though it be, unless I dine.
From this the moral aimed at France is,
First meet your wants and then your fancies.

[Examiner.

CRINOLINE—PRO AND CON.

The arguments with which a defender of crinoline is most frequently confronted are, of course, its danger and its inconvenience. As to the former, we rather wonder that in these days of statistics, no one has ever taken the trouble to compare the number of women burnt to death during the last ten years with the number who shared the same fate in any previous ten years, making, of course, proper allowance for the increase of the population. If this were done, and then a further examination instituted into the number of recent accidents of which crinoline has been really the determining cause, we believe that the danger would turn out to have been very greatly exaggerated. There is another fashion, for example, introduced nearly at the same time, which has probably been almost equally fatal in its results, although it has entirely escaped censure. A few years back, young ladies always wore low dresses and short sleeves in the evening. Since then it has become the custom, on less ceremonious occasions, to wear high muslins or tarlatanes, with long sweeping sleeves. If a long skirt is a dangerous companion in the neighborhood of a fire, a long sleeve is equally so in the neighborhood of a lamp or a candle, and on this score, therefore, the fashion of demi-toilettes is quite as much open to objection as the fashion of expanded skirts. But, in truth, there is nothing more idle than vague declamation on the subject. The progress of civilization is one long record of the instances in which such dangers have been overcome or averted; and if one half the time and strength which have been spent in lecturing women on the chances of being burnt to a cinder had been devoted to guarding them from the risk of it, we should probably by this time have had some method discovered for making dress-stuffs incombustible in the manufacture, or at least some contrivance invented for keeping a skirt out of the grate. Or rather—for a very sufficient and well-known contrivance for this last purpose has been invented long ago—we should have seen the universal adoption of the simple expedient of wire fire-guards. Nor is this the only instance in which crinoline gets credited with evils which are not, or at any rate not solely, of its own causing. We hear often enough of the melancholy contrast between a young lady's appearance when she enters a ball-room—the finished product of the combined effects of dress-maker and maid—and her appearance as she retires after the last dance, striving vainly to give a momentary coherence to the disjointed fragments of what six hours earlier was a ball-dress. The answer to these lamentations is that in the destruction in question crinoline plays a very small part. It is the extreme length of ladies' dresses which is mainly responsible for it, and we question whether, if in this particular they remain unaltered, the disuse of crinoline will not be found rather to enhance the mischief. The hoops do contribute something, however small, towards keeping the superabundant drapery off the ground, and it is difficult to see how their removal can have any other effect than to make the latter a more inert and helpless mass than it is at present.

When we turn to the lesser inconveniences of crinoline, the adversary's position is certainly less assailable. It has its disadvantages in a carriage; the furniture of a small room will occasionally show traces of its too hasty passage; and at a dinner-table it tends inevitably to the submersion of the alternate gentlemen. We have heard, indeed, enthusiasts profess, and in some instances we believe with truth, that they have no objection to being thus buried beneath the overflow of a lady's hoops; but we suspect that in these cases large allowance must be made for personal and exceptional feelings. Where the victim is either a lover or a friend he may learn to find pleasure in his sufferings; but the fairer test would be to inquire how he views his fate when his sentiments towards the author of it are those of indifference or dislike. Still, whatever may be said against crinoline indoors, its advocate may point with just exultation to the reform which it has effected out of doors. No lady need now discharge the functions of an amateur crossing-sweeper unless she has a real liking for the work; but any one who remembers what female dress was ten or fifteen years ago, when there was no means of keeping the gown out of the dirt except by the physical labor of holding it up, and when even this process was rendered practically useless by the length of the petticoats underneath, will bear witness that at that time there was hardly any choice left her. It is to the introduction of hoops that we owe the concurrent introduction of looped-up skirts and shortened petticoats, and consequently it is only since the introduction of hoops that a woman has been able, at least for many years past, to walk on a muddy day without either soiling her drapery or wetting her ankles. We cannot but wish, however, that young ladies would more invariably bear in mind that the consequent display should be rigidly confined to the stocking, and that the grace of their appearance is not promoted by giving needless publicity to any other portion of their wardrobe. With this proviso, the principle of setting many small benefits against a few great evils may be fairly appealed to, and the deliverance from the certain discomforts of mud and water may counterbalance the exposure to the possible (and avoidable) danger of fire.

We are aware, however, that the very feature we have selected as constituting the principal merit of crinoline appears to some people the head and front of its offending. The supposed impropriety of the prevailing costume is a text on which they have any number of sermons always ready for production. Like the mediæval saint of whom we read that he could detect a Pagan by the smell, they can spy out indecorum where a less spiritual eyesight wholly fails to recognize it. Their purity is of that super-refined description—unaccountably left unmentioned by St. Paul—to which all things are impure. A momentary glimpse of a young lady's stocking affects them with a feeling of acute pain; a prolonged vision of her ankle transmutes that pain to torture. To people whose nerves are less finely strung it seems rather difficult to recognize any ground for this intense emotion. Why it should be more improper to display the covered ankle than the bare arm, or the bare neck, we have not sufficient moral discernment to determine. It is really terrible to think of the pain which must have been inflicted on these tender spirits by the seemingly innocent pencil of Mr. Leech. To any one who thinks crinoline indelicate, the appearance of Punch's Almanack must have been a yearly cross, and each fresh seaside sketch a new instance of the demoralization of the times. Still we would counsel these over-scrupulous critics not to be too confident that the battle is won and the rock of offence removed. Even when the impending revolution has worked its will, there may yet be suffering in store for them. It is true that crinoline seems to be on the eve of extinction, but what warrant is there for assuming that the fashion which shall succeed it will be more correct? During the last hundred and fifty years short dresses have been in the ascendant far more often than long ones, and it would be very unsafe to prophesy that the feminine ankle will again, after so short an interval, be condemned to the twenty years' concealment which was its portion before 1856. If the brevity which shocks the moralist in the petticoat is only transferred to the gown, we do not see that he will be much the gainer; and if, as is more than probable, dresses should speedily become as scanty as they have heretofore been voluminous, the eye which is so grievously offended by the sight of a closely-fitting stocking will hardly be gratified by the far more extensive revelations of that statuesque and clinging drapery which was once the delight of the First Empire, and bids fair to be the delight of the Second.—Saturday Review.

The following rich story is related by a Sonora paper, at the expense of a queer genius who vibrates between that town and Oregon, as "advance" agent of a concert troop, and who, though pretty clever in "selling" the curiously-inclined, does not always come off first-best:

Frank Ball, travelling in a vehicle bearing a strong resemblance to a peddler's cart. Old lady rushes out from a house by the road-side. The following colloquy ensues.

Old Lady—Say, what have you got to sell?

Ball—I am a travelling agent, madam, for the greatest menagerie of ancient or modern times, which is shortly to be exhibited in this section, affording to the inhabitants thereof an opportunity of viewing the most stupendous collection of animals ever before exhibited.

Old Lady—You don't say! Have you any elephant?

Ball—We have, madam, six elephants; but these constitute a comparatively unimportant part of the show. We have living specimens of bipeds and quadrupeds who roamed over the earth not only in the antediluvian, but also in the pliocene and postmiocene period, embracing the megatherium with six legs and two tails; the ichthyosaurus, with four eyes, and three tails; the gyascutus, with no eyes, two noses and four tails; the plesiosaurus, resembling Satan in shape, which spits fire and breathes sulphur; the wangdoodle, with one eye and five tails, and many other species too numerous for enumeration. We also have a pious lawyer.

Old Lady—Well, I declare!

Ball—But, madam, the greatest curiosity by far of our exhibition is a learned and classically educated monkey, who was brought up a Mahommedan priest in the mysterious regions of the Great Desert of Sahara. This monkey speaks with fluency all the modern languages, besides Latin, Greek and Hebrew. He can repeat the Ten Commandments, the Emancipation Proclamation, President Lincoln's last message, and performs the most intricate examples in mathematics with rapidity, ease and accuracy. While being exhibited in Washington he actually repeated a long speech of the President. This monkey corresponds ——

Beautiful young lady suddenly sticks her head from the window, and calls out—

"Mother, mother! ask him why they let the monkey travel so far ahead of the other critters?"

REPLY TO "ANTEDILUVIAN."

EDITOR of THE CALIFORNIAN :—Since two and a half columns of your paper were last week devoted to ruthlessly dragging my name before the public, I think it no more than just that you should allow me this week to say a few words, in return, to my kind and most courteous friend, "Antediluvian," as he terms himself. I prefer the masculine pronoun, though I am free to confess blissful ignorance concerning the sex of the person who instigated such a wholly unmerited attack upon me. Nor do I wish to become known to him, for I see plainly there could be no affinity between us, since both myself and the few acquintances I have formed in this city are of too humble a caste to be familiar with or to quote the sayings of such a high and renowned authority as "Mr. Wm. Birch," and we are, therefore, too far removed from him to admit of companionship. But I wish to state to the honorable Antediluvian, first, that my essay was written in the performance of my legitimate duty as a public school teacher of San Francisco, especially for the Teacher's Institute and not for the public. In which case he had no right to publicly remark upon its "pearls" or its dross. Second, that it was published without my knowledge or consent, of which, perhaps, he was ignorant; yet I am a private individual—outside of the schoolroom—and I am not nor ever have been an aspirant for literary favor, in which case he had no right, as a gentleman or as an author, to criticize my essay before the public. Had I been a débutante authoress, challenging public opinion, I should have expected and been entitled to a fair and honorable criticism, instead of the contemptible carping which I did receive, and then my friend would not have been so much in error as he was when he placed me in a "class of writers." Again I ask him what right he had to complain that I wrote nothing "new under the sun," since I never gave any one reason to expect that I should do so. My ambition extends not so far. Moreover, I believe I had a perfect right to select whatsoever subject I pleased, and if I pleased to select one pertaining to my own business, more credit is due me, in my way of thinking, than if I had written upon his affairs or those of any one else. If I chose, too, to speak well of the Board of Education, some of whose members have been my only friends in this city, I am sure no gentleman would sneer at me for so doing. Now, Antediluvian, it seems, greatly fears being forced to see the like of this obnoxious essay again. Let me suggest a simple remedy: If he ever sees the word Progress attached to any article in book, magazine or newspaper, let him drop it instanter, and beat a hasty retreat for his native and well-loved home beyond the flood, where we will insure him entire exemption from the sight of the despised "pack-mule." Let my antiquated friend remember, however, that most of us humble teachers have not mastered (like himself) so much antediluvian lore as forbids our consideration of the past and future progress of education amongst the common people, and that it grieved not our pleasure over-seriously, to hear it stated from time to time, nor to hear repeated the names of "those old stock-actors, Dr. Franklin, Prof. Morse, Newton and others," who, we are weak and ignorant enough to believe, will never play out, though they should be "made to play for the (ten) thousandth time their well-known parts." And I not only do not fear but sincerely hope that, as long as the public school system shall endure, essays will "be written, read and published" again and again on "their threadbare topic." It will certainly show their common sense in using the implements of their own profession in preference to those of another, and I maintain that we are fitter judges of whatever duties each hour may bring to us, than they can possibly be. And now in reference to the complete and glaring misconception of the main point of my essay—viz., the consideration of the especially prominent causes which have urged our progress (pardon for the offending word) to its present condition. I am truly sorry that my knowledge is not of that unlimited extent belonging to a mind which has existed since 2500 B. C., but I unhappily, belong to a postdiluvian age and trust to be hereafter treated with the clemency due such a misfortune. Notwithstanding this, I did happen to know that in the earliest ages the Chinese were acquainted with gunpowder, the compass, and the art of printing, but what direct or indirect influence that or any other knowledge of Confucius' followers has had towards advancing our culture and civilization, I have yet to learn. I do not think Faust had any private telegrams from China to assist his discovery. I know also that the Indians possess many voluminous works, in Sanscrit, (3000 years old) on theology, morality, poetry etc.; that the four books of the Vedas are held by them to be the sources of the Brahminical religion—but what that had to do with the increase of knowledge among the great mass of the people, I couldn't see and therefore contented myself with the Reformation. I had, moreover, read somewhat of that most accomplished Saracen people before his high Ancientness referred me to them. I know that about A. D. 700 they threatened France and Christianity with destruction. Also that during the time they inhabited Northern Africa and Spain, that arts and sciences flourished in those countries; that the sciences were taught at Cordova, Cairo, Bagdad, Salerno and other cities—particularly grammar, philosophy, algebra, astronomy, astrology etc., that the development of the Christian middle age was much influenced by their literature and civilization. But their industry brought to them not only wealth but a love of splendor and effeminacy, and I did not choose to consider these facts as one of the especially prominent points in the advance of general cultivation and beneficial attainments among the masses in that world to which we owe and from which has progressed the main elements of popular education. Again I assert that I express no "contempt for the past," when I maintain that the thinker of to-day exerts an incomparably higher influence on the character of the common people than the philosophers of old. I have yet to learn the practical benefit resulting from the discussions of those eristic syllogisms to which the ancient schools of philosophy devoted almost their whole time. For instance, here is one of the most famous, called "The Lying:" "If, when you speak the truth, you say you say you lie, you lie; but you say you lie when you speak the truth; therefore, in speaking the truth, you lie." Six huge volumes were written upon this momentous quibble. What a benefactor of mankind was its author! How the horizon of intelligence was enlarged! Another one: "If anybody be moved, it is either moved in the place where it is, or in a place where it is not; but it is not moved in the place where it is, for where it is, it is; nor is it moved in a place where it is not, for nothing can either act or be acted upon where it is not; therefore there is no such thing as motion." What a noble object to absorb men's minds! Plato especially desired the young in his ideal Republic to pursue arithmetic and geometry, but he is very careful to say that it must not be studied with a view to practical operations—that it must not degrade them to vulgar utility by forming powerful machines—but to "compel the soul to use pure intelligence in the search after pure truth!" And while he walked the groves of the academy, immersed in profound speculations like this, feeble infants, giving no promise of "brawny strength in future martial conflicts," were often cast out to the mountain wolves or left to starve by the wayside, while "the great Hippocrates" discoursed on the principles of life and the nature of diseases. "There was not throughout all Attica, nor in fact in the known world, a single hospital for the sick, not one retreat for the deaf and dumb, not an asylum for the insane." While the sons of the rich were trained in the "sharp subtilities of logic and the refinements of a splendid rhetoric, not a drachma was ever raised by individuals or by the State for the purpose of educating the children of the poor." Bacon says the older philosophy "was neither a vineyard nor an olive ground, but an intricate wood of briers and thistles, from which those who lost themselves in it brought back many scratches and no food, and all the sects agreed on despising anything which was vulgar enough to be useful, however they might have been opposed in other things." The Reformation was the first great electric cause which dispersed these murky fogs of general ignorance, and brought to the common people the clear atmosphere of positive knowledge. Bacon next brought his two watchwords, "Discover" and "Improve," for the enlargement of the new sphere, and so we have advanced to the present age. With regard to the female teachers and girls' high schools of antiquity, if Monsieur Antediluvian will make out a list of all that were in existence, say before the age of chivalry, we shall all, I doubt not, feel greatly indebted to him. There is a large class in society who Sydney Smith calls the "sheep walkers," men who never deviate from the beaten track, who think as their fathers have thought since the flood, who recoil from a new idea as they would from guilt. Among this class we do not expect the idea of the supreme practical benefit of a system of popular education, to be accepted for at least a thousand or two years to come, and so I am not surprised at the caviling remarks in regard to it from my friend Antediluvian. He need not speak, however, with "fead and trembling," for the depths of society and the establisher laws of progression are never disturbed by this class of people.

And now, I have to thank my unknown friend for the closing paragraph of his "retort courteous," in which he unconsciously enforces one of my points. His pet country, "which believes in Leonardo di Vinci instead of Lord Bacon," and which, "notwithstanding its abject condition, has done more for the 'discovery of the established laws of our earth' and for 'scientific progress' generally, than any nation, small or great in Christendom," has not done so through Leonardo di Vinci, nor Correggio, nor Titan, nor Raphael, nor Michael Anglo, nor Machiavelli, nor Ariosto nor Torquato Tasso, but through patient and laborious mathematical investigation and severe mental discipline. Veritas vincit.

"Misery loves company," and so I would like to state that, on commencement day at Oakland, the accomplished Professor of Greek, and orator of the day, was hardly enough to force Dr. Franklin and Watt to play again their "well-known parts." I very much dislike a newspaper controversy, and should not have replied to this article, had I considered it a fair and open criticism, but the sneering, captious tone throughout, finally induced me to say thus much in my vindication. I would have made no objection to the refutation of every one of the facts, had it been done in a gentlemanly manner. No farther libel will again induce me, therefore, to appear in print, and to this I say, "vade in pace."

JULIA B. HOITT.

(For the Californian.)

ANSELMO.*

LEGAL study has never been supposed to be an efficient aid in the development of poetic thought, and while we knew that the San Francisco bar laid claim to very much knowledge it does not possess we were not aware that the Ars Poetica was included within its grasp. In this we have been mistaken. George R. Parburt, Esq., attorney and counsellor at law, has, in our material age, hurled into the literary world a fearful missile in shape of an epic in five cantos. Possibly it is time this was done. We have equalled the English in so many things that American lawyers ought to surpass English barristers. But English law had produced Talfourd, and perhaps it was fit that American jurisprudence should produce Parburt. Talfourd has written Ion; and with patriotic pride we may hereafter say, Parburt has written ANSELMO. As with all great works of genius, Anselmo has not attracted at once that attention which it deserves. And to introduce it to the favorable notice of the public is the aim of this examination of its beauties and its merits.

Anselmo is a metrical romance in five cantos. By way of preface, Mr. Parburt in truly orthodox manner dedicates his offering to some mysterious "Lelia" who seems to have been one of his early loves, and when "near a favorite trysting spot," in an evil hour, he rashly promised her that he would write Anselmo. Since that time, we learn that, heroically striving to make good his vow, he has been engaged upon this his life-work, and that Anselmo is nothing more nor less than the bantling of Mr. Parburt's and Lelia's "days of young romance," now grown to "gracefulness and size." The first canto opens with a blasting anathema upon the age in which our author so unfortunately for himself has been obliged to live, and we at once discover that Mr. Parburt has as much contempt for the present as have many for the past. Putting the unworthy age behind him, Mr. Parburt announces that "Love" is the theme about which he is going to chirp through one hundred and forty-eight pages, and immediately introduces "Anselmo," the hero, and "Isabel," the heroine, who, of course, are desperately enamored with each other. Unfortunately, Isabel has a cruel father who puts an end to the tender state of things described in glowing verse, by sailing with his daughter to some foreign land. Thus far all is very common, for we do not recollect, in romance, of any Isabel who did not have a cruel father, and who did not, just when matters were becoming interesting, sail with her father to some foreign land.

Anselmo, distressed, goes to Flatbush or Kinderhook, on the Hudson river, where, in the "genial quiet," there said to reign, he is rapidly forgetting Isabel, and would, we think, have forgotten her entirely had not Mr. Parburt perched him upon "the summit of a pine-crowned hill," and adroitly, "in a vision of the night," caused to pass before his eyes "a form divinely fair," which so works upon his mind, that he immediately starts in pursuit of his lost and loved one. Anselmo's parting with his highland home, affords the author a capital opportunity for a display of his powers in Bucolic verse, and he does not neglect to improve it. We recollect one brilliant line: "Dreamy kine breathed balmy hours." This is all we hear of Anselmo or Isabel throughout this canto, for Mr. Parburt devotes the remainder of it to wildly apostrophizing "Woman," "The Atlantic Ocean," "Cuba," and in the most frenzied manner talks of the "chin of time growing dark with rolling ages" and of thoughts "that crowd his burning brain." We feel greatly relieved when Mr. Parburt, with his burning brain, comes safely out of canto first. Mr. Parburt may be a man of iron nerve and treat the matter lightly, but we shall always believe that during this portion of his poem he came near setting fire to himself and disappearing from view in one grand and lurid conflagration.

At the opening of the second canto we find ourselves in Panama, which city the author proceeds to describe, and we for the first time discover that Anselmo is greatly made up from pages of Mr. Parburt's diary, kept when he travelled the "Isthmus route" in early days. Arrived here, "Anselmo" is looking for "Isabel," who is in a convent. Having learned thus much of these characters, the writer, who seems to have no regard for them whatever, thrusts them out of sight and introduces a minstrel, who sings, through the rest of the hundred stanzas of the canto, one of the most wonderful songs we have ever listened to. It is easy to recognize in this minstrel our author himself, "an ancient man" with "brow of light," and no love-sick girl ever raved about "ruby lips" and "virgin kisses," of "love's galvanic battery" and "rifting fragrance," as does this amatory attorney. But Mr. Parburt reserves all his powers of description for "Dona Julia." We cannot of course stop to quote the lofty strain in which he hymns her praise, but we may state that over and over again we are sought to be impressed with the fact that "she loved the beautiful." As a crushing proof of this we are at last told:

* Anselmo. A Poem, by George R. Parburt. San Francisco; H. H. Bancroft & Co. 1865.

> "She loved the beautiful, the grace of motion,
> The tuneful lightning trilling on the air."

We confess that though we have not the slightest idea of what "tuneful lightning" is, yet we are prepared to admit without question, that any one who loves it, especially when "trilling on the air," must be as great a lover of the beautiful as Mr. Parburt himself. At stanza one hundred, "The minstrel paused," for the reason that "it was a fitting time for rest." We admit the validity of the reason, and hoped we should see him no more, but we are bid not to intrude upon the slumber of the harpist,

> "Nor judge too harshly of the minstrel's song, > Lest he should not his chosen theme prolong."

In putting in this plea for the minstrel, Mr. Parburt, as a poet, forgets what, as a lawyer, he was bound to recollect, that mercy must not usurp the seat of justice; that mercy to the criminal is not always mercy to the State. He should have written stanza one hundred and one, embodying the harshest judgment possible, by which the song of this culprit minstrel might have been hushed forever. But the tender-hearted barrister is averse to such proceedings, and consequently canto third opens with the appalling sentence, "Not long the minstrel slept." At a glance it is perceived we are to hear nothing of the fortunes of Anselmo and Isabel until Mr. Parburt has strummed through eighty seven verses upon everything connected with the universe, whether in the heavens above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth. We have an indistinct idea that he is endeavoring to relate something of the parentage and antecedents of Isabel. But what with "Don Carlos," and the "Black Bishop," and "Bolus," together with Mr. Parburt's moralizing on life and sleep and war, we get so confused that we fail to comprehend the matter clearly. Yet we think that we might have done so had not Mr. Parburt completely stunned us in the twenty-seventh stanza, by the bewildering statement that he had seen "trout that could dine on oysters, garlic and turkeys." This remarkable discovery in ichthyology, being for the first time made known to us, had such a benumbing effect, that with difficulty could we read further. We have in our day been told many piscatorial narratives—and perhaps related a few ourselves—but this exceeds anything we have ever dreamed of. We must here be stern with Mr. Parburt. We can afford to laugh at his "tuneful lightning trilling on the air," but it is a duty we owe a stupefied world to be unyielding as to these trout. In the phraseology of his craft, we have a right to demand of Mr. Parburt a "bill of particulars," wherein he should set forth how trout eat oysters, whether fried or roast; whether on the half-shell or whether they are devoured shells and all. And so of turkeys, not only whether they are partaken of boiled or roast, but whether they are swallowed dead or alive. And Mr. Parburt owes it to society to inform it where such fish are to be found. We use inventions by which furnaces are made to consume their own smoke, and we should all be happy to catch or purchase trout that could be broiled in their own sauce. Through the rest of this canto Mr. Parburt revels in war. We do not consider ourselves naturally timid, but as we follow him, madly charging here and assaulting there, we grow frightened. He makes nothing of leading us over "heaps of gory slain," of leaving us beside "reeking shrines," mid "the crash of living bones," where, through "the groan-rent air," "rifle-balls are riddling the human breast." But the minstrel, exhausted at length, rests—this time for aye—and Anselmo, in the last line of the canto, is left fast asleep. Doubtless it is to be attributed to the havoc he has just made, that our author, who hitherto has bounded into each canto with an airy grace truly charming, enters the fourth in a gloomy and despondent state of mind. Were we permitted to use the language of the "ring," we should say Mr. Parburt comes up to the fourth round drooping. He tells us that hope is nothing, but even if it were anything it has altogether fled. He babbles of "death mists" and "blear desolation," and asserts that there is a dark ending for "all our natural woes," and a like termination "of all our earthly joys." In short, insisting on being "awful," Mr. Parburt gives us to understand that > "Faith, love, hate, deserts him as he goes

> To learn his own mysterious fate."

Before going, however, he thinks of Anselmo, who, "with strange shadows on his brow," is still in Panama. Gazing on the ocean, he sees a vessel sink in the waters of the bay, from no apparent cause whatever, save to grant Mr. Parburt the privilege of indulging in some watery lines about an "emotional ship." Instantly appears a canoe, in which natives are bearing "beachward" a captive lady, who turns out to be Isabel. As to how she got out of the convent and nto the canoe, we are not informed. But the pen of Mr. Parburt is immediately engaged in portraying her charms. He is quite dazed with her "raven ringlets," and we are let in to the following secret:

> "When Cupid fain would conquer by delaying
> His labyrinthic castle is the hair,
> Whence he lets fly full many a wounding dart,
> Till he doth capture the rebellous heart."

It is evident that Mr. Parburt has been completely upset by the prevailing fashion of "waterfalls" and "cataracts," while the golden daggers and arrows worn by young girls in their "back-hair" have pierced Mr. Parburt in a most vital part. It becomes Anselmo's business to set "this lovely captive free," and, accordingly, single-handed and alone, he attacks the natives when they reach the shore. The description of the contest which here ensues surpasses anything we have ever read. In other portions of his work, Mr. Parburt touches upon the sublime, but here he passes into the absolutely terrific. Could Mr. Parburt's poem be dramatized, (we throw out the suggestion,) and Ada Isaacs Menken perform the part of Anselmo, we venture to affirm, without fear of contradiction, that the world would witness the greatest triumph ever achieved by the melo-dramatic stage. Anselmo contrives to slay four of his assailants, and just as he himself is far spent, a convenient "cavalier comes sweeping o'er the plain." The savages flee with Isabel, and Anselmo, "calmly as a saint," sinks "weary and bleeding" on what Mr. Parburt exquisitely terms the "sanguine sand." From thence he is borne to the home of Don Pedro, who has a daughter who falls in love with Anselmo, which he does not return, in consequence whereof she dies of a broken heart and goes to heaven at the end of the canto, which, under all the circumstances, we are inclined to think was for the best. The fifth and last canto opens with Anselmo in a dream, from which he is not awakened until Mr. Parburt, in the very last verse in his book, abruptly tells us that Anselmo and Isabel are married. So far as we can see, there is no reason why this happy state of things might not have been attained at the end of the first as well as at the end of the last canto, for the story has no connection, and it may almost be said to have neither beginning, middle nor end.

In giving an account of his poem, we have endeavored to use, as far as possible, the language of Mr. Parburt; but it would be unjust not to let him speak to some extent wholly for himself. We find room for a few extracts.

As a specimen of his measure:

> "This city occupies a rock plaza,
> An old resort of Buccaneers for playing
> Brag; for whose invention Nebuchadnezzar,
> Was doomed to play the ox and practice praying."

As an example of his delicacy:

> "And there is one, who doeth constant duty
> For Church and State, more gentle than the dove,
> Sad, silent, solemn, smelling for his gizzard,
> Dark angel of the city, Turkey Buzzard."

Of his solemnity:

> "Gray as yon graveyard walls with cells so narrow,
> Each can admit one shrouded tenant only,
> There the ancestor's bones scarce yield their marrow
> Before the heir usurps the place so lonely,
> Dark, putrid, reeking, vile enough to harrow
> The soul of any being save man only;
> Out goes the father's carcass, scarce half rotten,
> To make room for the son long since forgotten."

Of his rhyme:

> "In heart, coyote; in spirit, a hyena, > Down rushed Katznoe to his own place—Gehenna."
>
> "A broken thought whirled through the Don's head, Oh!
> It was mere nothing, still it was unpleasant,
> As when a cloudlet flitteth thwart the meadow."
>
> "Moved o'er the ocean's eddy-dimpling bosom, > Graceful as Nautilus—light as blossom."

Of his metaphor and idea of language:

> "Nature's melodeon—a mother's heart."
>
> "Love's blushing borealis he doth trace."
>
> "How pensive Winter's heart dissolved in showers."
>
> "To hurl one shaft of love with soft velocity."

For Mr. Parburt's sake we should like to quote further, but he has already engaged too much of our attention. We think it tolerably clear that his poem, in every particular, can be regarded as nothing but the merest bathos—ridiculous, extravagant, preposterous, monstrous; while running through the whole of it there is a prurieney of taste and expression to which we have made no allusion, but which it is not altogether pleasant to meet with. It seems to be a sorry imitation of Don Juan, and in Anselmo may be found all of the faults and none of the virtues which characterize that celebrated composition. The surprising thing is that Mr. Parburt should have written it; that H. H. Bancroft & Co. should have published it. ANTEDILUVIAN.

We acknowledge the courtesy of an invitation to the First Anniversary Ball of the Sherman Guard, to be held at Platt's Music Hall, on Friday evening next. The list of members forming the various committees are a sufficient guarantee that the festival will be an auspicious inauguration of future social balls.

NEW BOOKS.

We have received from A. Roman & Co. the following new books, notices of which were crowded from our columns last week:

History of Julius Cæsar. Vol. I. 8vo., pp. 463. New York: Harper Brothers.

The Emperor's book is very handsomely produced by the Harpers, who are the sole publishers of this work in America. It is finely printed in large type, on thick firm paper, with liberal margin, and is very elegantly bound in library form of cloth and gold. The Life of Cæsar is well known to be an exposition of the Napoleonic idea, and a powerful though not convincing claim on the part of Napoleon III. for the pre-eminence of his uncle's policy and the permanence of his own dynasty. He urges the people, in his book, to accept the "mission of such men as Napoleon I." He labors to prove that Providence raises up such leaders as Cæsar, Charlemagne and Napoleon, to guide the policies of nations, rather than that such men are the natural product of the civilization they represent. He intimates, rather Frenchily, that people who are skeptical on such points, and resist their destiny in the shape of a Napoleon, are like the Jews who crucified the Messiah. This is rather strong. We have previously given several extracts from this volume that give a fair idea of the Emperor's style. It closes with the termination of Cæsar's Consulate.

Christian's Mistake. By the author of John Halifax, Gentleman. pp. 260. New York: Harper Brothers.

Christian's Mistake is a fair specimen of Miss Muloch's style, though not as interesting to the general readers as John Halifax. The present volume has been issued in excellent library style by the Messrs. Harpers, and the print and paper make the reading quite pleasant to the eye.

Religious Duty. By Frances Power Cobbe. Boston: Wm. V. Spenser. 1865. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

Frances P. Cobb is the author of the Theory of Intuitive Morals, which has been widely read in both England and America. The present volume, in typography and binding, is in the style of Christian's Mistake. Mrs. Cobbe believes not only in free thought, but that "the time has arrived when free feeling also may begin to trace out the fresh channels into which a wider and purer faith will henceforth cause it to flow."

The Lothels of Arran. By Charles Lever. New York: Harper Brothers.

One of Mr. Lever's characteristic fictions, abounding in interest and entertaining in incident.

Husbands and Homes. By Marian Harland, author of Alone and Hidden Path. New York: Sheldon & Co. Boston: Gould & Lincoln.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.—Tallahassee and St. Marks, Fla., have surrendered...Mr. Seward was attending to business...Jeff. Davis and C. C. Clay are in close confinement at Fortress Monroe...The ram Stonewall has been surrendered to the Spanish Government at Havana...The Shenandoah is reported lost in the Indian Ocean...Jeff. Davis and Breckinridge have been indicted by the Grand Jury of the District of Columbia for high treason...Lee would probably be indicted in Richmond...An order has been issued preventing the disposal of abandoned plantations until the growing crops have been secured for the benefit of the freedmen cultivators...Gen. Canby reports that terms have been concluded for the surrender of the Confederate forces in Texas. Large bodies of Federal troops will however be sent there, to maintain order and protect the border...New developments are in possession of Government implicating Sanders and Thompson in the assassination and in the attempts to send infected clothing to the Northern cities and the White House...The magazine at Mobile, containing a portion of the munitions of war surrendered by Dick Taylor, exploded on the 24th of May, while in course of removal, causing the loss of over two hundred lives, and the destruction of some eight squares of buildings, two steamers with all on board, and about eight thousand bales of cotton. The loss is estimated at $8,000,000. A great portion of the business part of the city was badly damaged. The cause of the explosion is not known.

THEATRICALS ABROAD.—In New York the Keans were concluding their brief engagement with universal praise from the press. The New York Weekly Review says: "We doubt if any performers now on the American stage have ever appealed so modestly to the public, or borne from it so unquestionable and enviable a degree of esteem." They were next to play an engagement at Baltimore...Harry Placide was playing a round of his characters at the Winter Garden...Lester Wallack was playing in How She Loves Him at Wallack's...Miss Maggie Mitchell was at Niblo's, and the Sleeping Beauty was drawing full houses at the Olympic...Eph Horn and Dan. Bryant had sailed for London...Lotta had played three weeks at the Front street Theatre, Baltimore...Mrs. Bowers was playing in Boston...Lucille Western was at the Walnut, Philadelphia...Grover's German Opera Troupe were singing Faust at the Brooklyn Academy...James Stark opened in Richelieu, May 8th, at the Howard, Boston...The Birch and Backus San Francisco Minstrel Troupe had opened in New York with success...Cotton and Murphy's California Minstrels were at Andrews's Hall, Boston...In Nashville, Avonia Jones was at the New Theatre, and Laura Keen at the Old...The Lyster Opera Troupe were playing a farewell engagement at Dunnedin Otago, New Zealand, in the early part of February last...Lady Don was playing in Sydney...The Christy Minstrel troupe arrived at Sydney in February, after a successful tour through India, China and Java, and were to appear at St. James Hall.

RICHARD COBDEN.

DIED APRIL 2, 1865.

SOLEMN and sad his task who, from the shore,
Watches Time's slow but surely-rising wave,
As landmark after landmark it sweeps o'er,
And whelms great things and men in one wide grave

So the pale sentinel on Neva's pier
Records the wasting waters' sullen swell,
Till all the pile-based city shakes for fear
Of some huge fall—church, palace, citadel.

I am not old who watch, but from my post
What kingly strengths have I seen veil their crown
What statelinesses bowed, what pride and boast
By those dark waters toppled, sudden, down!

One more high tower has fallen, that stood four-square,
Simple, and scant of ornament, but strong,
As fits a fortalice, whose walls must bear,
Sheltering Right, the rude assaults of Wrong.

He had done work to fill a longer life,
And lived to see his life's work rounded clean:
Seldom has sun that lit a morn of strife,
Set in the hush of evening so serene.

The man whose young strength struck the shackles off
From England's toiling arm and trading hand,
Lived to knit close—in spite of sneer and scoff—
England and France in Traffic's triple strand.

Poor in world's wealth, but rich in stainless fame,
Untitled, yet a magnate in the land,
That honor blazons Richard Cobden's name,
Which life well-lived and work well done command.

Circumstance shaped his lot, as it shapes all:
The path it opened seemed narrow, hard, and bare:
No grace of letters made a flowery wall
To mask its bounds, nor arts, nor arms passed there

The path of trade, that leads—who shall say where?—
To humble competence, and low content,
To wealth and wisdom, or to wealth and care,
To means hard-saved, to be as loosely spent;

But rarely to a higher goal than self;
And few on that road ope a wider eye
Than grasps the vision of the trader's self,
Or second self—kith, kin, and progeny.

But on that path this man advancing, felt
The impulse of a great good far away;
Looked up, saw angels, and where others knelt
To grope for gold, he knelt to dream and pray.

Yes—knelt to dream: though bred to trade and toil,
His was the dreamer's rapt and prescient eye:
Thence came the wings that lifted him from soil
Of sordid paths, and raised low aims to high.

He saw Heaven's will by man's contrivance barred:
Nature's kind pathways betwixt need and need
Gated and fenced; the Almighty purpose marred,
That gave us diverse brains, thews, soils, and seeds.

Others, ere him, had seen and proved the wrong,
But he the wrong determined to set right:
Weak in all else, in single purpose strong,
With Power, Wealth, Prejudice, he braved the fight.

And won it, and was famous, powerful, great:
But with the triumph laid the truncheon by,
And in the ranks was proud to serve the State,
Poor save in that which riches cannot buy.

[Punch.

CHINESE AMUSEMENTS.

THERE is a whiz, a buzz, a whirring music in the air, all sorts of grotesque objects are floating about, rising and falling and dancing to and fro; there are broad-winged birds, and many-colored dragons, lizards, bees, and butterflies, and painted circles and squares, and radiated suns and moons and stars. Most of them have pendent tails, and strings in their centres, the linking line which connects these aerial monsters with the earth. Follow down the thread to the ground, and you will find at its end a grave-looking man, who, though he devoted his principal attention to the evolutions and the harmonies to contemplate those of his neighbor. These are Chinese kite flyers. Kite-flying is the amusement of the young and the old—but more especially of the old—and these kites exhibit in a wonderful way the odd inventive fancies, the strange traditions, and the immemorial habits of this singular race. The English kite took its name, no doubt, from the bird, of which the primitive aspirant was probably a rude imitation, but the Chinese designations are multitudinous: fung-stang, the wind guitar: chi-yan, paper-hawk; kwin-chi, neither more nor less than the English kite, bird and toy; and all sorts of fanciful and poetical titles. The form of the ancient French kite was probably that of a beast, and not of a bird, as they call it a cerf-volant, a flying stag.

In China, people say, and there is some truth in it, that the swaddled babe appears almost as solemn and staid as a mandarin, and that there, more than anywhere, the child is the father of the man. The mandarin looks like a giant child, and the child a dwarf mandarin. Especially among the opulent the child is smothered with costly garments. If a girl, the aristocratic torturing of the feet begins, and in the morning the cries of the poor victims undergoing the cruciate process may often be heard in the streets—but both sexes are subjected to the painting art. Pearl powder upon the forehead, vermilion upon the lips, jet upon the eyebrows, rouge upon the cheeks, fantastic, costly, and elaborated caps upon the head, cumbrous garments upon the body, so that the lad, almost before he is able to walk, is encumbered with more clothes than he can carry, ornaments more than enough to interfere with his locomotive powers, and he seems already a little old man. Stiff as a bonze, and ready, as it were, to be stuck into a niche of a Buddhist temple—he is as if petrified into an image of everlasting contemplation. The sobriety of age is incarnated with the plastic nature of youth, and the sports and amusements of the sian-hai-tze, the little son child, are shared by the yu-tsin, the tsu-yu, and the tsung-tsu, the father, the grandfather, and the great-grandfather, of whom he is the miniature model—all are kite-flyers.

It is not an uncommon subject for a picture in China to exhibit a languishing small-footed young lady sitting in a grove, with a pipe in her hand, a female slave at her side pouring out the tea into an ornamented cup upon a lacquered table, looking fascinatingly upon a handsome youth, to whom she has "never told her love," for the simple reason that she has never had the opportunity of telling it. The young man is standing on a bridge built upon a neighboring hill near a temple—a temple decorated with scarlet roof and golden horns, half shaded with flowery forest trees, with a fountain of water flying by—and the said young man is looking, not on the temple, not on the wood, not on the water, no, not even on the fair and languishing young lady with the golden-lily feet, but his gaze is devoutly fixed upon the kite that is borne by the wind, that is dancing towards the clouds, and making sweet music as it ascends. Will not the echoes bring the sighs of the pretty maiden to the ears of the kongai, the beloved one, so absorbed in the contemplation of that distracting seduction? Alas! no; he hears no sound but the whistle of the instrument which is running up the string of the kite, and whose triumphant progress to its gaol is celebrated by the harmonies which are gradually lost in the distance. Another picture is now before us, in which a whole group of boys are gathered together to see the wonders worked by their elders in the kite-flying art. There are kites with their adorned tails, and tails, by the way—men's tails—are objects of such reverence in China, that a man would much prefer the penalty of losing his ears, or his nose, or both, to that of losing his pien-tze, (cue) which loss, indeed, is the most opprobrious infliction upon a felon. Other kites look like nosegays of many-colored flowers suspended on high; and if smiles of wondering approval can be fancied as expressed on any Chinese visage, those smiles are there.

But let us stop for a moment to say that the history of men's tails in China is instructive and entertaining. They were forced upon the Chinese by the conquering Manchoos more than two hundred years ago, and, from being the mark and evidence of subjugation, have become the most cherished of personal possessions. The care and culture of the cue is the daily concern and the constant amusement of the whole nation. The man is the object of envy whose tail touches the ground, and it is intertwined with gay ribbons, while the black tressed hair is as glossy as the back of a raven. A laborer guards his tail with as much pride as a lord, and when engaged in any occupation which may tend to its disarrangement, he twists it round his head. But no servant dares to present himself before his master unless his tail hangs down perpendicularly outside his long robes. A handsome gentleman's cue is as much an object of attraction to a Chinese lady, as is the smallness of the foot of a lady to a Chinese lover. One of the sports of the Chinese is to tie their companions together by the tails, the untying being sometimes difficult enough for the exercise of the science of a Davenport. But the tail is a grand instrument in the hands of the police, and often leads to the capture and safe keeping of a misdoer. We possess a splendid tail upon which hangs a tale worth telling. There was a burglar of Hong-Kong, greatly distinguished in his profession, the planner of most of the housebreakings that took place in the colony. He was discovered, sent to prison, and, as some security for the future, and a fit punishment for the past, he was deprived of his cue. He had so much influence, and so much money, that he was (probably with the cognizance of his bribed keepers) carried away in a sedan-chair by his confederates while passing with the chain-gang through a street in Hong-Kong. Burglaries on a large scale soon disturbed the public peace, and the convict was again captured and sentenced to imprisonment; but he escaped a second time with the man to whom he was chained, having no doubt arranged the matter with those who had him in custody. Burglaries were again rife, and we well knew by whom they were planned and, and by whose agents they were executed. But he was so well served, and so well concealed, that for some time all researches were vain, and the felonious operations were carried on uninterruptedly. One day a little boy, who had been imprisoned for some small offence, sent a message to the governor, saying that, if pardoned, he, being acquainted with the haunts of the felon, would put the police on his track, and enable them to capture him. He led them to a large house, where a gentleman was sitting, handsomely clad, and with a beautiful unexceptional tail. "That is your man," said the boy. "Impossible," was the reply; "the rogue's tail is in the jail!" Reassured, the policemen sprang upon the hero, seized his cue, upon which the thief jumped out of the window, leaving a false cue in its captor's hand. No dignitary was ever adorned with a less objectionable pien-tze. These tails are often suspended for sale in barbers' shops, not always for the use of the thieving fraternity, for as old age and exposure diminish the thickness of the chevelure, the Chinese hairdresser is sometimes called on to perform restorative functions somewhat resembling those of the former wig-maker in England. The cutting off of hair in China is equivalent to an abandonment of the world. In our Catholic nunneries it is the final act, performed by others, and deemed the most interesting evidence of the devotion of the young novitiate to the conventual life. In China it is a self-infliction; it is not unusual for a bride who has been disappointed in the character, or has suspected the fidelity of a bridegroom, to cut off her hair, and send it as a token that she contemplates suicide, which, indeed, is in China a common refuge for misery. The plebeian mode of destruction is ordinarily opium, the patrician the eating of gold-leaf—a very uneasy and lingering mode of dying. It is, however, considered very improper to interrupt family enjoyments or amusements by an act of self-destruction, and we remember one of our servants reporting an event in his family—his wife had hanged herself, and, what was exceedingly improper, she had done it on a day on which he was particularly busy.

Suicides in China are often characteristically singular. They are not unfrequently committed for the purpose of revenge, and a life is willingly sacrificed in order to bring punishment on those who may be compromised or injured by the death of the self-destroyer. There are many cases in which, by the laws of China, persons are made responsible for the acts of others, and subjected to death punishments, for deeds with which they have had nothing to do. We know of a case in which a very beautiful girl who had been purchased for a large sum of money by a rich merchant, determined to avenge a supposed slight by immolating herself, with the double purpose of inflicting on him the pecuniary loss of her purchased value, and of denouncing him to the authorities as responsible for her death. She dressed herself in her gayest garments, took opium, and summoned her friends and relations to witness her decease. It is not unusual for Chinamen who come from the interior, having failed to realize their expectations of success in commercial or literary speculations, afraid of encountering the reproaches of their friends and relations should they return home, to hang or drown themselves amidst the persons or in the places which have been associated with their disappointments. It is rare that any house in which such an event occurs escapes the visitation of the low officials, who, as well as their superordinates, seldom lose the opportunity of "squeezing" the inhabitants, the popular term for exacting the payment of "hush-money."

* * * * * * * * *

Dramatic representations are popular in China; but players in general occupy a low social position, and are excluded from any of the four grades into which respectable society is divided—the sage, the agriculturist, the soldier, and the mechanic. In the large cities are theatres built for the accommodation of the public, with a pit for the commonalty, who stand; boxes for the quality, who sit; and a stage with its appliances of scenery and mechanism, for the actors. The entrance for the less privileged orders is gratuitous, but something is paid for the more elevated places. Strolling players circulate over the country, and when by public subscription a sufficient sum is raised to defray the expenses of their visit and allow them adequate recompense for their trouble, an extempore theatre is erected—if no permanent edifice exist—with incredible rapidity and marvellous ingenuity. Bamboo pillars, bamboo rafters, bamboo floors, are bound together with singular art, and without the employment of a hammer or a nail, and suddenly a light but not inelegant structure rises, almost as if by magic, from the ground. Huge boxes of garments, weapons, musical instruments, conveyed by boats through the rivers and canals, or borne on the shoulders of coolies, swung on bamboo poles, and the performances once begun, are scarcely interrupted for many days and many nights. The Buddhist and Taouist priests are often the principal movers in the invitations given to the strollers. They collect, by their dependents, moneys to pay for the recreations, and inscribe the names of the contributors on bright vermilion papers, which are posted at the entrances of the temples in their neighborhood, and for whose benefit the performances are to take place.

The number and the reputation of the performers, and the duration of the performances, depend on the amounts collected. The fame of a favorite idol, especially where he is believed to have worked recent miracles, will sometimes bring considerable money-offerings for the theatre to be erected in the vicinity of his shriue. Funds being raised, in four-and-twenty hours a building capable of conveniently accommodating two thousand persons is completed, and while the performances are going on business is neglected, shops are deserted, sedan-bearers abandon their posts, and everything is sacrificed throughout the neighborhood to the theatrical display, which geuerally lasts from three to four days. There are only short periods of rest between the representations, to allow time for repasts and for repose. The theatre is scarcely cleared of the spectators that have witnessed one exhibition, before shoals of candidates present themselves to occupy the vacant places. The clearings out and the fillings in are repeated several times a day. The amusements are not confined to dramatic pieces. Interludes of prestidigitation tricks, tumblings and gymnastic exploits, often vary the diversions. All around the theatre are temporary gambling-stands, fruit-stalls, and frequently houses of reception of the worst character. Worship within the temple is held to be quite compatible with profligacy without, and there is nothing in the example of the bonzes to encourage what is good, or to deter from what is evil. They levy a rental from all who sell these wares to the visitors.

In these dramas national grievances get a shadowy redress, which is some comfort to those who find no real shelter from oppressiou. Punishment is seen to overtake extortion and corruption in a way seldom verified in the reality of life. The stage is made the reprover of offences too often placed in daily experience beyoud or above the reach of official cognizanee. A thousand faces brighten when some rapacious hard-hearted mandarin is brought on the stage, carrying on his iniqnities and cruelties, and is "hoist with his own petard,' tumbled into the pit he has dng for some poor man's destruction, overtaken by the all-penetrating eye of the emperor (oh that the "Son of Heaven" could but know how many such wicked ones we know!) humiliated, deposed, decapitated.

Female characters have often to perform an important part in the Chinese drama; but the old English usage is still preserved—no woman ever appears on the stage, and the fair sex are represented by boys or men with treble voices.

There is nothing more amusing in these exhibitions than the attempts of vulgar, coarse-handed, big-footed boys to exhibit the simpering graces of Chinese ladies of rank, who are hardly able to totter along on the crushed pegs upon which they stand, if indeed they can be said to stand, who are often blown over by a blast of wind, or seen to save themselves from falling by catching hold of a chair or table, or by the use of a stick, or by resting on attendant slave or slaves. But as a lady of refinement has the happy art of exhibiting her golden-lilied feet just peeping out from beneath her silken garments, it may be fancied how grotesque are the imitations of a vulgar youth, and with what delight and self gratulation the real blue blood—the ladies belonging to the buttoned aristocracy—look upon the abortive efforts of the common players; then, again, the ladies, whose delicate fingers show that they do not work—because the nails—which are allowed to grow many inches long—prove that they cannot work—feel no small pride in contemplating the long metalic claws which are stuck on as substitutes for the transparent henna-colored nail, (chi kiah,) the possession of which, next to a small foot, is the glory and ambition of a fashionable woman. All the plays, all the novels, and it may be said all the literature of China, bear the impress of that pecular educational system which permeates the natioual mind. Quotations from the writings of the sages, fragments of poetry, scraps of ancient history, constantly interrupt, as they are supposed to decorate, the development of the story. This influence of the past on the present is everywhere visible, and explains many of the seeming mysteries of Chinese life. A revolt has been often subdued by a felicitous reference to some aphorism of an ancient book, and a well-timed quotation will suddenly terminate the most excited controversy.

The very highest orders seldom frequent the public theatres, but hire and invite to their houses, for the entertainment of themselves and their guests, strolling players, popular conjurors, tumblers, and buffoons, and other such artists and actors. The more distinguished dramatis personæ form themselves into corporations, and adopt some attractive and high-sounding name by which they are commonly known, such as "The Brotherhood of Reason and Courtesy;" "The Company of Splendid Visitations;" "The Society of Fragrant Flowers;" "The Mirror of what Was and Is." When the play opens, the audiences are not left in ignorance of what is to happen, as each actor, on his appearauce, tells the company who he is, and what he is to say and to do. Bottom's instructions are admirably carried out, "the bill of properties such as the play wants" being all laid before the spectators.

The actors are generally clad in the strange costumes worn under the Miug dynasty, of which much aneient Chinese porcelain gives a very accurate representation, and this period of Chinese history furnishes the greater portiou of the tales and traditions which are introduced upon the stage. It is not always easy to disentangle the truth from the fiction of these dramatized stories, except, indeed, where the supernatural is introduced, as is often prodigally done. Few of the authors are known, but many of the pieces are of considerable antiquity, and are faithful records of the usages of the past times. The words of the drama are usually uttered with a sort of sing-song, monotonous recitation, interspersed with poetry, sinking now and then into a scarcely audible utterance, and anon rising into outbreaks of most impassioned rage and violence. Loud crashes of dissonant music, vehement beatings of gongs, the rolling of kettle drums, and the speaking of wind instruments, fill up the insterstices with intolerable discord. Only a small part of the dialogue is heard by the audience. The pantemimic action is, however, so excellent, that the story is tolerably understood. The clang and the clatter which is so discordant to the European ear, is most acceptable to the Chinese. It is especially when battles are fought on the stage that the shouting and the crashing are beyond endurance; but noise is an element in which the Chainaman revels, and of which he can never have enough.

No Oriental women dress with such comely modesty as the Chinese; their garments cover the bosom and reach up to the chin; but the language used on the stage is often gross and unlicensed, and the exhibitions which are most applauded are sometimes far too licentious to be tolerated by European opinion.

The painted scenes are seldom or never changed—unity and continuity of action are generally preserved—but when a change of place is needful to the progress and development of the drama, something is introduced to show that the actors are transported to another locality; riding on a wooden stick, sometimes with a horse's head, and sometimes without, and he whips the supposititious beast as he crosses and recrosses the stage. Sometimes a real horse is introduced, sometimes a sedan conveying the rider, or the occupier, to the appointed place, so that the line of continuity may not be broken. If he have to pass a bridge, he paces first up and then down, the bridges in China being generally not level, but with steps ascending and descending. If he have to cross the water, he shows in his gestures the rolling motion of a boat, and shaking himself as evidence of his weariness, announces that he has reached the end of his journey in safety, and that the scene is transferred to the spot at which he has arrived. And here we may ask had Shakspeare ever heard of the Chinese theatrical devices, as most assuredly no Chinaman ever heard of Shakspeare? Yet Bottom's scheme of making "some man or other to present wall, with some plaster, or some loam, or some rough cast about him to signify wall," is practically and actually carried out in China—as, for example, when a beleagured city is the scene of action, then men are heaped upon one another, and form "the wall" which is to be scaled or overthrown, and it is by mounting and tumbling over these bodies that the attacking and victorious heroes make their way into the stronghold.

The belief in witches, ghosts, good and evil spirits, is almost universal in China. The popular almanacs, which have an immense circulation, have many pages filled with pictorial representations and descriptions of strange creatures, "Gorgons, and hydras and chimeras dire," who frighten children and women; genii who bless or curse, with instructions as to the means of thwarting their mischevious, and conciliating their benevolent purposes. How to win the affections of another; to obtain sleep at night; to succeed in a commercial enterprise; to make a journey in safety; to prognosticate the weather; to win at a lottery; to secure the birth of male children; to reach a happy old age; such, and almost any other objects of desire, and to be obtained by the supernatural agencies which are introduced to the readers.

It is a general superstition in China that multitudes of hungry demons in various hideous forms are constantly wandering over the earth, being the souls of wicked men, who can find neither rest nor domicile; and the superstition affords abundant elements with which to move the popular mind Spectral appearances and monsters of all sorts form, naturally enough, a considerable part of the theatrical machinery. They are, in fact, associated with all the business of life. At the entrance of every public office, of every temple, there are images of fieree dragons, and fanciful beasts and reptiles, intended to inspire the passers-by with awe and terror. On the floor of the stage there is a trap-door, through which ghosts and spirits mount to take their part in the proceedings. but they usually announce their coming by unspiritual vociferations, and ask for help from above to be pulled up by the shoulders, or to be pushed up by aid from below. As there is no delay over the shifting of scenes or the falling of curtains, the story pursues its uninterrupted course.

It is related of the great Dr. Clarke, that when in one of his leisure hours he was unbending himself with a few friends in the most playful and frolicsome manner, he observed Beau Nash approaching: upon which he suddenly stopped: "My boys," said he, "let us be grave; here comes a fool!"

A young lady visiting a family, asked John at dinner for a potato. John made no response. The request was repeated; when John, putting his mouth to her ear, said, very audibly: "There's jist twa in the dish, and they mann be keepit for the strangers."

Rustic Sharpness.—"Disiuterestedness," says a French traveller, "is not a mountain virtue. In a poor country, money is the first necessity. Beggars swarm in the Pyrenees I never met a child that did not ask alms, from four years old to fifteen: this is their trade, and nobody is ashamed of it." The same writer gives an amusing instance of their dexterity "in shearing an egg." A friend of his desired the servant to sew a button on to his trowsers. In the evening she entered the room, pantaloons in hand, and said, with an undecided, anxious manner, as if she feared her demand would be disputed, "C'est un sou." The master, without speaking, took a sou from his waistcoat pocket and laid it on the table. Jeannette went on tiptoe to the door, recollected herself, came back, took the trowsers and showed the button. "Ah! it is a beautiful button! (a pause.) I had not one in my box (another, longer pause.) I bought that one at the grocer's—c'est un sou!" She looked up with anxiety; the owner of the pantaloons, still without speaking, laid on the table a second sou. It was clear there was a mine of sous in that quarter. Jeannette went out, and a moment afterwards reopened the door; she had settled her plans, and with a shrill, piercing voice, and wonderful volubility, she cried, "I had no thread. I was obliged to buy thread. I used a great deal of thread; it was very good thread. The button will not come off again, I sewed it on strongly. C'est un sou." The master pushed towards her a third sou. Two hours after, Jeannette, who has reflected on the subject, reappears. She prepares breakfast with minutious care, wipes up the slightest slops, softens her voice, walks gently, and is most ostentatiously attentive; then she says, in the most obsequious and winning manner possible, "I must not lose—you would not wish me to lose; the stuff was hard, I broke the point of my needle. I did not know it before, I have only just seen it. C'est un sou." The master drew forth the fourth sou, repeating—

> Ce peuple est innocent; son ingénuité
> N'altère pas encore la simple vérité.

"Take courage. Jeannette, you will gain a fortune, my child. Happy the husband who shall conduct you, candid and blushing, under the roof of his ancestors! Go and brush my pantaloons."

Syrian Gothamites.—Helbon is noted not more for its wine than for the stupidity of its inhabitants, whose reputation in this respect is similar to that of the wise men of Gotham, as the waggish Merry Andrew styled his countrymen, the Barons of Pevensey. Among the ridiculous stories fathered on them, I will here repeat a few. Once upon a time the inhabitants of Helbon declared themselves independent, and were going to establish a goverument of their own, but found themselves unable to carry out their intention, because there were not men enough in the place to fill all the public offices. Another time, it is said, the good folks of Helbon wished to drag a little on one side a mountain which kept the mid-day sun from their village. With this object they tied a rope to a large oak growing on the mountain, and pulled at it till the rope broke, and gave many of them so severe a fall that they were content to postpone the removal of the mountain till some more fitting opportunity. On another occasion, when there was a total eclipse of the moon, the inhabitants of Helbon took it into their heads that the people of a neighboring village had stolen that planet. Accordingly they all turned out armed against their neighbors, to force them to give them back their moon; but before they had quite reached the village the eclipse was over, and the moon reappeared in full splendor. On this they returned home in triumph, boasting that their neighbors had given them back their moon for fear of them. A native of Helbon was once driving to Damascus a donkey, laden with wood for sale, when, the load being too heavy for the poor animal, he considerately took it off and put it on his own shoulders, and then mounting the donkey, he rode on it into Damascus. A boy once thrust his hand into a narrow-necked pitcher containing walnuts, and having filled his hand with them, was unable to draw it out again. He cried bitterly; the whole village assembled to deliberate on what was best to be done, and the wise man of the place gave it as his opinion that the boy's hand must be cut off; when fortunately a stranger, who happened to be passing by, freed the boy from the danger he was in, by telling him to let go the walnuts, and so draw his hand out of the pitcher empty, as he had put it in.—Jacob's Flight, by Mrs. Beke.

At one of the minor theatres of Vienna a whistler named Piccolini is whistling his way to public favor. A correspondent writes that "he is a man of middle height and elegant exterior. He whistled, with accompaniment of piano-forte, the serenade of Schubert, and the eavatina "Casta Diva," from Norma. He whistled double notes with great distinctness, and his shake was irreproachable; the sound is of the most agreeable quality, as well in the medium as in the highest part of the register. His intonation was never at fault, and one might be led to suppose that he was listening now to the song of the nightingale, now to the full and sonorous voice of the quail, and anon to the thrill of the lark as it soars into the higher regions of the empyrean. The success of the whistler was emphatic."—N. Y. Post.

NOTICE

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despotch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1865.

AMATEUR CORRESPONDENTS.

"THE English," says Froissart, "go about their pleasures sadly." We Americans pursue our recreations quite as seriously, with an eye to instruction. Our tourists carry tape lines with them to measure trees. A vague sense of our accountability to Boards of Education and School Committees accompanies us to our rural solitudes. We are compelled to make wild attempts at botany, geology, natural history. We fill our carpet-bags with geological specimens. We keep journals. We write to the papers.

It is not surprising, therefore, that at this season amateur correspondents should appear in the Bulletin, with descriptions of their several excursions and travels. We will do these people the justice to believe that the act is rarely premeditated. A letter to an over-admiring friend, carried about and shown to acquaintances, a journal which the party will not "willingly let die," are the first whisperings of folly. We ought not to be astonished, therefore, if these letters are remarkable for the contrast between their exuberant language and prosaic incidents. When Mr. Smith devotes a glowing paragraph to a description of a fall from a horse, we ought not to complain, for we can readily imagine that the event was one of tremendous importance to him personally. When he records the facetiæ of his friend Robinson, if we fail to be convulsed with laughter, we must remember the circumstances under which the witticism was uttered, and that it was probably a fair joke for two lonely travelers in a wild country. If we object to the undue quantity of poetical quotations, we should remember how universal is the disposition to commit verses to memory, and how rare is the opportunity that people have to quote them. The intention of Mr. Smith is evidently to instruct us. If we incidentally hear a great deal more about Smith than we do of the Geysers, it is because the two subjects bear that relation to each other in the mind of the writer, and we must be content, as it were, to look through Nature up to Nature's Smith. In the meantime, the evident respectability, wealth and social condition of the amateur correspondents—and certainly none other could make these expensive excursions—are further reasons for our tolerant criticism. We know that it is no vagrant or ragged Bohemian who is addressing us, but a man of means and circumstances. If his letter is not quite as interesting as the poor professional hack or scribbler, let us be thankful that a respectable person should condescend to write for us at all, or permit us for a moment to peep into his pleasures and become participants in his confidences.

We confess, however, that we are somewhat staggered by the remarkable confessions of one "C.," who has lately favored us, through the Bulletin, with notes of a trip to Clear Lake. At the beginning of his article, he gives us a ravishing glimpse of a certain young lady, and after having asked us if we have ever read Locksley Hall, proceeds to inform us that she "had all the spirit deeply dawning in the dark of hazel eyes." Now we have read Locksley Hall, and have a distinct remembrance of the passage alluded to, but we still are at a loss to comprehend the meaning of the writer, who says that it describes his charming young friend "to a T." If "C." intends to hint that "her eyes on all his motions with a mute observance hung," or that her bosom "was shaken by a sudden storm of sighs," or that she further remarked to him, "I have hid my feelings, fearing they should do me wrong," we must confess we are somewhat shocked at the the frankness of the confession. It is with a feeling of relief that we learn subsequently that she was removed from his dangerous vicinity, and that with "a smile and a wave of the handkerchief, Miss X. and the Cornelia rapidly recede from our view, and we are left standing on terra firma." Before this took place, however, it seems that "C." was impelled to record the following incident, which we can only account for by supposing, to quote from his favorite poem, that ——"My lord is weary, his brain is overwrought."

"When we came up, we were passing through San Pablo Bay. The hills on the right were clothed in luxuriant vegetation, and their smoothly-rounded outlines looked soft as velvet. "Oh, look!" said one, "at the butterflies around those yellow cliffs." "Ah," observes another, "did you see the butter fly at table?" I must confess I did not see it. I saw, however, four knives stretched simultaneously for the butter."

The reader will admire the artfulness of the final sentence: "I saw, however, four knives stretched simultaneously for the butter;" which places any misconstruction of the joke on the word "butterfly" beyond a possibility.

On the road from Napa another incident occurred:

"We stopped to get a draught of pure cold mountain water from a brook that ran gurgling across our path. A pair of mountain quail sat upon a log at a little distance, and eyed us in a very unconcerned manner. We have seen great quantities of these birds all along our route. It is now their pairing season, and every plumed cockerel has his little dusky brown mate. Here we see in Nature the true philosophy, the finest feathers given to the male. Man reverses the order of Nature, and gives them to the female. These birds (quail) are singular in their habits. In every flock there is a preponderance of male birds."

"C." does not seem to be any more felicitous in his philosophy than his poetical similes. We confess that having carefully read the above, we do not clearly see why "the finest feathers given to the male" is "the true philosophy." That the mountain quail should have eyed the party "in a very unconcerned manner," is, however, inexcusable. We do not wonder that some time afterwards, when "a cock quail lit upon a stump and commenced to call in a lively manner"—no doubt intentionally "chaffing" the tourists—the vengeful "C." should have deliberately slaughtered the offending fowl. A fine opportunity for a quotation was offered at this point, but "C." does not seem to have improved it.

But it is as a graphic and bold delineator of scenery that Mr. "C." excels. At Clear Lake, he tells us:

"Gradually the moon rose, veiling her face at first behind a venerable oak, like a maiden behind the protecting garment of a parent. Then she mounted up, higher and higher, until a flood of softened light was thrown over the scene. I made a futile attempt to transfer some of the glories of the sunset to paper, but useless was my endeavor to imitate nature."

If the above be one of "C.'s" attempts to transfer the glories of that sunset scene to paper, he should never think of calling it futile. Certainly the fancy of likening the moon behind a tree to a maiden behind the protecting garment of a parent, is powerful—and would be more so if we knew exactly what the protecting garment of a parent was. We have, however, heard this adjective playfully applied to the tail of a coat; and as the sex of the parent is not clearly stated, we can easily imagine how the spectacle of a young girl coquettishly darting in and out from the protecting folds of the paternal coat-tail would be a most striking figure, of itself, irrespective of any similitude.

The nearest approach to an incident in "C.'s" career seems to have been an occasion where somebody told him that somebody else had killed a panther. "C." saw the skull and skin subsequently, and tells us that the teeth were long and crooked, and the skin was dark brown. At the borax works he is enabled to tell us that borax is a combination of boracid acid and soda; and becomes preternaturally interesting. The opportunity of instruction has come. On the whole, we are sorry that he should have been beguiled from borax and mineralogy by the fatal delusions of moonlight and Locksley Hall. He goes down to the hot springs, luxuriates in baths, becomes impregnated with carbonic acid gas, and in a manner effervesces from the reader's view.

"Diaphragm," who has contributed "Notes of a Trip to the Big Trees," is another amateur correspondent. We vehemently protest against this gentleman's extraordinary nom de plume. If he felt impelled to anatomical expression, Thorax or Sternum, we suggest, would have been less tremendous. The Germans have a proverb that "No man is a philosopher below his waist;" yet if things of this sort are to be permitted to pass unnoticed, we may look for Abdominal essays and Pelvic and Femoral suggestions. But Diaphragm's infelicity is not confined to his name. Visiting the Big Trees, he tells us that they are objects at sight of which "a pious mind's first impulse would be prayer." Evidently, "Diaphragm's" mind was not pious, for his first impulse was a puff of the Bulletin, which he achieved in this remarkable manner:

"In looking through the grove we found a very fine tree, fifty-five feet in girth, (at the height of a man's head,) unnamed, and it occurred to one of our party that no more appropriate name could be given to it than that of the purest and most undaunted patriot whom it has been our fortune to know in California. We therefore asked Mr. Perry's permission to bestow on it the name of founder of the Bulletin, who, through the instrumentality, and at the cost of his own noble life, obtained for San Francisco many years of pure and upright municipal government, and left to California an example which can never become inoperative."

JAMES KING OF WM.,

We do not wish to detract from the well-deserved reputation of James King of William as a fearless and undaunted reformer. But his fame was local, and civic. To place him beside Bright and Cobden, or any of the other national or world-renowned names which people have seen fit to bestow upon the forest giants, is to belittle him by contrast. We cannot but be amused at the evident sincerity with which the indiscreet "Diaphragm" urges his hero's claims. He was "the purest and most undaunted patriot whom it has been our fortune to know in California." We do not know the extent of "Diaphragm's" acquaintance, or how long he has lived in California; but surely the surname of his paragon might have suggested some coincident reflection that would have modified his superlatives. But we do not wish to quarrel with his preferences. We would suggest, however, that some other standard of greatness than mere personal preference be required in the naming of these trees hereafter. It will be admitted that this system has its evils. Members of the Union party and admirers of a certain paper have a perfect right to inscribe the name of an editor upon some large tree "as the purest and most undaunted patriot it has been their fortune to know in California. "Diaphragm" should have had his simple tribute engraved on the plate with his hero's name, so that if hereafter any stranger should be unfamiliar with the fame of James King of William, the mere circumstance that an editor of the Bulletin was thus honored by an humble individual as the "purest patriot he ever knew," would be of itself a statement that should arrest the wandering eye.

Something like a real accident seems to have occurred to "Diaphragm's" party, and, true to his anatomical instincts, he records the abrasion of sombody's tibia. We are doubtful, however, owing to the perplexity which arises from his personifying these terms, whether "tibia" is not an individual, and the accident was far from trifling. We cannot praise too greatly his conscientiousness in refusing to transcribe imaginary adventures to please the ladies. We are afraid that "C.," who seems to have been more susceptible, would have succumbed to the spirit "deeply dawning in the dark of hazel eyes," and have drawn on his invention. But "Diaphragm" is nothing if not honest and sincere. Unfortunately, he is not always clear:

"The wind swaying the tree-tops seemed not to break the silence; like the solemn, ceaseless boom of the ocean, it seemed rather to enter the soul directly through some internal organ of veneration and awe than through the external ear."

We confess we do not see how any external sound could enter through an internal organ without first penetrating some exterior aperture. We believe, however, there is a passage leading from the cavity of the ear to the posterior portion of the mouth called the Eustachian tube, and by this means "Diaphragm" might have inhaled the sound or have smelled it! But we feel somehow that we are on dangerous ground, and shrink from grappling scientific questions with one who can playfully assume a nom de plume so suggestive of anatomical information.

Of such stuff are amateur correspondents made. We have devoted some space to pointing out their peculiarities, with no further intention except that of correcting what we conceive to be a growing evil. We do not blame people for writing such things. They are necessary and excellent safety-valves for the pent-up sentiments or prejudices which permeate mankind, and they yield an excitement to the writer which is certainly the cheapest and most innocuous form of dissipation. If people did not write nonsense and scandal, they would talk nonsense and scandal, and with very few exceptions they are less extravagant with the pen than tongue. It is only the publication of such articles that makes them objectionable, and brings them within the sphere of legitimate criticism. Everything that tends to deteriorate or enervate the literary standard should be excluded from the columns of a respectable journal. The Bulletin's corps of professional correspondents is large enough to preclude the necessity which sometimes breaks down the principles of weaker journals. Literary men and editors have to serve a severe apprenticeship; and we do not see why the rules which govern their ideas of excellence should be suspended for the benefit of these Bucolic amateurs who waste their time and ink in imitation.

GATHERING OF THE ALUMNI.—The Alumni of Eastern colleges had their second annual meeting at the College of California on the 8th instant, and perfected their organization under the title of the "Associated Alumni of the Pacific Coast." The Revered Horatio Stebbins delivered the oration and E. R. Sill, Esq., the poem. We understand that both poem and oration, together with an account of the proceedings, speeches, etc., are to be published in a pamphlet, to be sold for the benefit equally of the College and Association. The meeting was well attended, but the exercises and speech-making were protracted rather too long. At Alumni gatherings in the East, even with the advantages of the forbidden grape and the magnetic contact of such men as Holmes, Agasiz, Longfellow, Emerson and others, it is very difficult to keep up the enthusiasm and exhilaration beyond a certain limit.

OLYMPIC CLUB RECEPTION.—The gentlemen of the San Francisco Olympic Club gave one of their pleasant receptions last evening, which was attended by a large number of invited guests of both sexes. After a series of marvellous gymnastic performances by several distinguished members of the Club, the milder exercise of dancing was engaged in by all present, and kept up until a late hour.

THE CHURCH AND THE DRAMA.

ON the 29th of January last, the Rev. T. W. Freckleton, from his pulpit at Bradford, in the West Riding of York, England, delivered a sermon from the text of St. Paul, "Unto the pure all things are pure," which the London Era characterizes as "one of the most easy, satisfactory and demonstrative essays in support of the drama, and condemnation of clerical hostility, which we have ever had the good fortune to read." By a strange coincidence, about this time the Christian Commission of California was objecting to receiving the proceeds of a theatrical entertainment for charitable and patriotic purposes—an objection in which most of the Evangelical Churches concurred. As the only opposition to this bigoted and illiberal view was confined to a few anonymous correspondents in secular papers, who might reasonably be supposed to be without the pale of salvation, we venture to quote, in their behalf, some of the arguments of this brave Yorkshire clergyman, who has proved their unexpected ally, confident that the strictest evangelical churchman cannot object to the authority of a minister of the Established Church of England on a question of this gravity.

The Rev. Mr. Freckleton does not think it possible to kill the drama or to banish the theatre from among us; but believes that the energies displayed in abuse of the institution might be better employed in reforming and purifying the stage, or, at least—as it is but a reflection of society, setting it a better example in ourselves. Mr. Freckleton believes that the work of a theatre is primarily to amuse:

"It is only incidentally that it affects manners or morals. In fact, the theatre does not determine the morals and manners of its patrons, but receives its complexion and quality from them; for it only exists by giving them that for which they have a taste, and if moral and decent people would go, nothing that could offend them would appear, for the simple reason that it would not pay."

Sensible people will not like Mr. Freckleton any the less for his having thus frankly stated the merits of his case, without dragging in the sentimental and somewhat cheap theory of the elevating tendency of the drama. In a like spirit of liberality he thus answers the timid fears which many estimable persons entertain that theatres may corrupt the morals of those who frequent them:

"If they esteem the thing to be unclean, to them it is unclean; and if they think religion or public morals to be imperilled, they have the right to say what they think, and to act accordingly. But it is a poor question that has only one side, or which will not bear examination all round."

In the course of this examination the reverend gentleman points out certain truths which will apply equally well to some other things as to private theatricals and theatres:

"Only mischief can ensue if breaking the Sabbath for pleasure, and frequenting the theatre for amusement, are classed as sins with defrauding one's neighbor from avarice, or killing him from revenge Surely there are real sins enough in the world—real evils enough to face and conquer—without creating for ourselves, or suffering others to create for us, artificial evils and sins upon which to exhaust our energies and waste our time."

But for his locality, we should imagine that Mr. Freckleton had an eye to some of the religious publications of this coast in the following:

"Some of our so-called 'religious literature' has been, and still is, vile in the last extreme; reeking with bigotry, malice, hate and all uncharitableness, so that no man can touch it without soiling his hands; but for all that, religious literature is a great and vital fact."

Mr. Freckleton's sermon concludes as follows:

"I am a servant, not merely of religion, but of the Church, and hope to live and die in this service; but if there is to be a great gulf between the Church and the world, as between heaven and hell, minister of Christ that I am, I would rather take my place and part with the world than with the Church; with common humanity than with any elect portion of it; with confessed sinners than with self-assumed saints; for I believe that Christ, who is the light of the world, and not of the Church alone, is more permanently a resident with the common heart and fortunes and feelings of mankind at large, than of any fraction of humanity, however select, or self-appropriative of his name and patronage."

We have quoted this much from the Rev. Mr. Freckleton, although we are well aware that he really has said nothing more than was said by Dr. Bellows on this same subject some years ago in New York—a circumstance remembered by the London Era, although the credit is given to an English clergyman by the name of Bellew. But Dr. Bellows unfortunately holds heterodox beliefs, and is President of the Sanitary Commission—two circumstances which would prevent his authority in a subject of this magnitude from being received by the Christian Commission. For this reason, we prefer to quote the Rev. Mr. Freckleton, and congratulate the few poor anonymous Bohemians who dared to take up the cudgels in defense of liberality and tolerance, that at almost the same time, all unknown to them, there rose up, across the Atlantic, a sturdy, honest and uncompromising ally, in the person of this pious Yorkshire clergyman, minister of the Church of England, and eminent Christian gentleman.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[ALL letters for this department should be addressed to Mr. MARK TWAIN, who has been detailed from the editorial staff to conduct it. Courting Etiquette, Distressed Lovers, of either sex, and Struggling Young Authors, as yet "unbeknown" to Fame, will receive especial attention]

AMATEUR SERENADER.—Yes, I will give you some advice, and do it with a good deal of pleasure. I live in a neighborhood which is well stocked with young ladies, and consequently I am excruciatingly sensitive upon the subject of serenading. Sometimes I suffer. In the first place, always tune your instruments before you get within three hundred yards of your destination—this will enable you to take your adored unawares, and create a pleasant surprise by launching out at once upon your music; it astonishes the dogs and cats out of their presence of mind, too, so that if you hurry you can get through before they have a chance to recover and interrupt you; besides, there is nothing captivating in the sounds produced in tuning a lot of melancholy guitars and fiddles, and neither does a group of able-bodied, sentimental young men so engaged look at all dignified. Secondly, clear your throats and do all the coughing you have got to do before you arrive at the seat of war—I have known a young lady to be ruthlessly startled out of her slumbers by such a sudden and direful blowing of noses and "h'm-h'm-ing" and coughing, that she imagined the house was beleaguered by victims of consumption from the neighboring hospital; do you suppose the music was able to make her happy after that? Thirdly, don't stand right under the porch and howl, but get out in the middle of the street, or better still, on the other side of it—distance lends enchantment to the sound; if you have previously transmitted a hint to the lady that she is going to be serenaded, she will understand who the music is for; besides, if you occupy a neutral position in the middle of the street, may be all the neighbors round will take stock in your serenade and invite you in to take wine with them. Fourthly, don't sing a whole opera through—enough of a thing's enough. Fifthly, don't sing "Lily Dale"—the profound satisfaction that most of us derive from the reflection that the girl treated of in that song is dead, is constantly marred by the resurrection of the lugubrious ditty itself by your kind of people. Sixthly, don't let your screaming tenor soar an octave above all the balance of the chorus, and remain there setting everybody's teeth on edge for four blocks around; and, above all, don't let him sing a solo: probably there is nothing in the world so suggestive of serene contentment and perfect bliss as the spectacle of a calf chewing a dish-rag, but the nearest approach to it is your reedy tenor, standing apart, in sickly attitude, with head thrown back and eyes uplifted to the moon, piping his distressing solo: now do not pass lightly over this matter, friend, but ponder it with that seriousness which its importance entitles it to. Seventhly, after you have run all the chickens and dogs and cats in the vicinity distracted, and roused them into a frenzy of crowing, and cackling, and yowling, and caterwauling, put up your dreadful instruments and go home. Eighthly, as soon as you start, gag your tenor—otherwise he will be letting off a screech every now and then to let the people know he is around; your amateur tenor singer is notoriously the most self-conceited of all God's creatures. Tenthly, don't go serenading at all—it is a wicked, unhappy and seditious practice, and a calamity to all souls that are weary and desire to slumber and be at rest. Eleventhly and lastly, the father of the young lady in the next block says that if you come prowling around his neighborhood again with your infamous scraping and tooting and yelling, he will sally forth and deliver you into the hands of the police. As far as I am concerned myself, I would like to have you come, and come often, but as long as the old man is so prejudiced, perhaps you had better serenade mostly in Oakland, or San José, or around there somewhere.

ST. CLAIR HIGGINS, Los Angeles.—"My life is a failure; I have adored, wildly, madly, and she whom I love has turned coldly from me and shed her affections upon another; what would you advise me to do?" You should shed your affections on another, also—or on several, if there are enough to go round. Also, do everything you can to make your former flame unhappy. There is an absurd idea disseminated in novels, that the happier a girl is with another man, the happier it makes the old lover she has blighted. Don't you allow yourself to believe any such nonsense as that. The more cause that girl finds to regret that she did not marry you, the more comfortable you will feel over it. It isn't poetical, but it is mighty sound doctrine.

ARITHMETICUS, Virginia, Nevada.—"If it would take a cannon-ball 3½ seconds to travel four miles, and 3¾ seconds to travel the next four, and 3⅝ seconds to travel the next four, and if its rate of progress continued to diminish in the same ratio, how long would it take it to go fifteen hundred millions of miles?" I don't know.

AMBITIOUS LEARNER, Oakland.—Yes, you are right—America was not discovered by Alexander Selkirk.

JULIA MARIA.—Fashions? It is out of my line, Maria. How am I to know anything about such mysteries—I that languish alone? Sometimes I am startled into a passing interest in such things, but not often. Now, a few nights ago, I was reading the Dramatic Chronicle at the opera, between the acts—reading a poem in it, and reading it after my usual style of ciphering out the merits of poetry, which is to read a line or two near the top, a verse near the bottom and then strike an average, (even professional critics do that)—when—well, it had a curious effect, read as I happened to read it:

"'What shall I wear?' asked Addie St. Clair,
As she stood by her mirror so young and fair"— and then I skipped a line or so, while I returned the bow of a strange young lady, who, I observed too late, had intended that courtesy for a ruffian behind me, instead of for myself, and read:

"The modiste replied, 'It were wicked to hide Such peerless perfection that should be your pride'"— and then I skipped to the climax, to get my average, and read—

"'My beautiful bride!' a low voice replied,
As handsome Will Vernon appeared at her side,
'If you wish from all others my heart to beguile,
Wear a smile to-night, darling—your own sunny smile."

Now there's an airy costume for you! a "sunny smile!" There's a costume, which, for simplicity and picturesqueness, grand-discounts a Georgia major's uniform, which is a shirt-collar and a pair of spurs. But when I came to read the remainder of the poem, it appeared that my new Lady Godiva had other clothes beside her sunny smile, and so—it is not necessary to pursue a subject further which no longer possesses any startling interest. Ask me no questions about fashions, Julia, but use your individual judgment in the matter—"wear your own sunny smile," and such millinery traps and trimmings as may be handy and will be likely to set it off to best advantage.

NOM DE PLUME.—Behold! the Frenchman cometh again, as follows:

"Your courteous attention to my last enquiry induces this acknowledgment of your kindness. I availed myself of your suggestions and made the enquiry of the gentleman, and he told me very frankly that it was—none of my business. So you see we do sometimes have to apply to your correspondence column for correct information, after all. I read in the papers a few days since some remarks upon the grammatical construction of the sentences—"Sic semper traditoris" and "Sic semper traditoribus," and I procured a Latin grammar in order to satisfy myself as to the genative, dative and ablative cases of traitors—and while wending my weary way homewards at a late hour of the night, thinking over the matter, and not knowing what moment some cut-throat would knock me over, and, as he escaped, flourishing my watch and portmonaie, exclaim, "Sic semper tyrans," I stumbled over an individual lying on the sidewalk, with a postage stamp pasted on his hat in lieu of a car ticket, and evidently in the objective case to the phrase "how come you so?" As I felt in his pockets to see if his friends had taken care of his money, lest he might be robbed, he exclaimed, tragically, "Si(hie) semper tarantula-juice!" Not finding the phrase in my grammar, which I examined at once, I thought of your advice and asked him what he meant, said he "I mean jis what I say, and I intend to sti-hic to it." He was *quarter*less, Twain; when I sounded him he hadn't a cent, although he smelled strong of a 5-cent shop."

MELTON MOWBRAY, Dutch Flat.—This correspondent sends a lot of doggerel, and says it has been regarded as very good in Dutch Flat. I give a specimen verse:

"The Assyrian came down, like a wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold;
And the sheen of his spears shone like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee."

There, that will do. That may be very good Dutch Flat poetry, but it won't do in the metropolis. It is too smooth and blubbery; it reads like buttermilk gurgling from a jug. What the people ought to have, is something spirited—something like "Johnny comes marching home." However, keep on practicing, and you may succeed yet. There is genius in you, but too much blubber.

LAURA MATILDA.—No, Mr. Dan Setchell has never been in the House of Correction. That is to say he never went there by compulsion; he remembers going there once to visit a very dear friend—one of his boyhood's friends—but the visit was merely temporary, and he only staid five or six weeks.

PROFESSIONAL BEGGAR.—No, you are not obliged to take greenbacks at par.

NOTE.—Several letters, chiefly from young ladies and young bachelors, remain over, to be answered next week, want of space precluding the possibility of attending to them at present. I always had an idea that most of the letters written to editors were written by the editors themselves. But I find, now, that I was mistaken.

GOOD TIMES OR GOOD CIRCUS.—Wilson & Cook's Circus is to perform at Murphy's on Monday, and will subsequently visit Mokelumne Hill, Jackson and Folsom. Manager Wilson informs us that the trip through the southern mining towns has been very successful, and that the receipts have yielded larger returns than for several years previous. This either implies better times or better circus, and results probably from a combination of both.

THE TRAVELLING ENGLISHMAN.

IN common with others of my countrymen who live much abroad, I have often had to deplore the unfair estimate of England that must be made by commenting on the singular specimens of man and womanhood that fill the railroad trains, crowd the steamboats, and deluge the hotels of the Continent. How often have I had to assure inquiring foreigners that these people were not the elite of our nation! With what pains have I impressed upon them that these men and women represent habits and ways and modes of thought which a stranger might travel England in its length and breadth without encountering, and that to predicate English life from such examples would be a grevous injustice! This evil, however, has now developed itself in a form of exaggeration for which I was in no way prepared. It seems that some enterprising and unscrupulous man has devised the project of conducting some forty or fifty persons, irrespective of age or sex, from London to Naples and back for a fixed sum. He contracts to carry them, feed them, lodge them, and amuse them. They are to be found in diet, theatricals, sculpture, carved wood, frescoes, washing, and roulette. In word, they are to be "done for" in the most complete manner, and nothing called for on their part but a payment of so many pounds sterling; and all the details of the road or the inn, the play-house, the gallery, or the museum, will be carefully attended to by this providential personage, whose name assuredly ought to be Barnum! When I read the scheme first in a newspaper advertisement, I caught at the hope that the speculation would break down. I assured myself that, though two or three unhappy and misguided creatures, destitute of friends and advisers, might be found to embrace such an offer, there would not be any real class from which such recruiting could be drawn. I imagined, besides, that the characteristic independence of Englishmen would revolt against a plan that reduces a traveller to the level of his trunk, and obliterates every trace and trait of the individual. I was all wrong; the thing has "taken"—the project is a success; and, as I write, the cities of Italy are deluged with droves of these creatures, for they never separate, and you see them. forty in number, pouring along a street with their director—now in front, now at the rear—circling around them like a sheep-dog—and really the process is as like herding as may be. I have already met three flocks, and anything so uncouth I never saw before—the men, mostly elderly, dreary, sad-looking, evidently bored and tired; the women, somewhat younger, travel-tossed and crumpled, but intensely lively, wide-awake, and facetious. Indeed, to judge from the continual sparkle of the eye and the uneasy quiver of the mouth, one would say that they thought the Continent was a practical joke, and all foreigners as good fun as anything at Astley's. When foreigners first inquired of me what this strange invasion might mean—for there was a sort of vague suspicion it had some religious propaganda in the distance—I tried to turn off the investigation by some platitude about English eccentricity, and that passion for anything odd that marks our nation. Finding, however, that my explanation was received with distrust, I bethought me of what pretext I could frame as more plausible, and at last hit upon what I flatter myself was ingenious. I took the most gossip-loving of my acquaintances aside, and under a solemn pledge of secrecy, which I well knew he would not keep, I told him that our Australian colonies had made such a rumpus of late about being made convict settlements, that we had adopted the cheap expedient of sending our rogues abroad to the Continent, apparently as tourists; and that, being well dressed and well treated, the project found favor with the knaves, who, after a few weeks, took themselves off in various directions as taste or inclination suggested. In fact, said I, in less than ten days you'll not see three, perhaps, of that considerable party we met a while ago in the cathedral; and then that fussy little bald man that you remarked took such trouble about them will return to England for more.—Cornelius O'Dowd.

SCOTT'S HANDWRITING.—Scott's own penmanship afforded, during his prime, the most striking and irresistible proof how completely he must have submitted himself, for some very considerable period, to the mechanical discipline of his father's office; it spoke to months after months of his humble toil, as distinctly as the illegible scrawl of Lord Byron did to his self-mastership from the hour that he left Harrow. "There are some little technical tricks, such as no gentleman who has not been submitted to a similar regimen ever can fall into, which he practised invariably while composing his poetry, which appear not unfrequently on the MSS. of his best novels, and which now and then dropt instinctively from his pen, even in the private letters and diaries of his closing years." Mr. Lockhart refers particularly to a sort of flourish at the bottom of the page, originally, he presumes, adopted in engrossing as a safeguard against the intrusion of a forged line between the legitimate text and the attesting signature. Sir Walter was quite sensible, it is added, that this ornament might as well be dispensed with; and his family often heard him murmur, while involuntarily performing it, "There goes the old shop again!"

THE ICE FLOWER TO PR-F-SS-R T-ND-LL.

FEBRUARY 14, 1865.

WITHIN the ice,
In strange device,
A sleeping beauty, I
Thy coming wait,
At happy date,
To bring my destiny.

When through my frame
The electric flame
Its radiant pulses sends,
I rise from death;
Thy fervent breath
My glacial fetters rends.

To nature's lock
Which guards the block
Of ice, thy key applied,
My soul sets free,
Which turns to thee
In passion's melting tide.

I pant for you
At thirty-two
By Fahrenheit displayed;
Or, should prevail
Another scale,
At zero, Centigrade.

In pretty strife,
To start to life
My waking atoms stir;
Their motions fine
To thee incline,
My heart's thermometer.

Folded in frost,
In ice-depths lost,
I droop in cheerless night
Under thy glow
My petals blow,
Ecstatic with delight.

No heavenly star
That shines afar
With my six rays can vie;
The hexagon
Which you have won
Transcends geometry.

Imprisoned here,
With frozen tear
I weep my frigid fate;
Dissolved by you,
In raptures new
May I ne'er regelate.

Then come, my love,
Your powers prove,
Let all your radiance shine:
For evermore
On alp and shore,
I'll be your Valentine.

SOME GOOD IN A FOG.—It is a mixture of air with minute globules of water. Far from being the useless inconvenience dwellers in town are apt to consider fogs, they play an important part in the economy of the earth's surface. Indeed, it is calculated that if the aqueous vapor contained in the ordinary atmosphere were removed but for one single summer night, every plant upon the face of the globe not capable of bearing intense cold would perish. The minute quantity of water suspended in the atmosphere acts as a warm mantle to the earth, absorbing and radiating heat that would otherwise be dispersed in space, and so lost to our vegetation. It is estimated that the atmosphere, under ordinary conditions, contains, on an average, but one globule of water to two hundred particles of air, and that this one globule absorbs eighty times as much heat as the collective two hundred particles. Looking at fogs as reservoirs of watery particles from which the atmosphere replenishes itself, we can appreciate their usefulness. Professor Tyndall, who, a few weeks ago, received a medal in acknowledgment of the addition he has made to modern knowledge on this subject, has made a series of extremely delicate experiments relating to the absorption and radiation of heat by vapors and permanent gases. He writes that, but for the aqueous vapors in the air, the warmth of our fields and gardens would pour itself unrequited into space, and the sun would rise upon an island held fast in the grip of frost.—Builder.

A CERTAIN minister, going to visit one of his sick parishioners, asked him how he had rested during the night. "Oh, wondrous ill, sir," replied he, "for mine eyes have not come together these three nights." "What is the reason of that?" said the other. "Alas! sir," said he, "because my nose was betwixt them."

WHEN does an Irishman most resemble a Scotchman? Why of course when he's kilt entirely.

HEIR-LOOMS.—The term heir-looms has occasioned much dispute, but the rule which is recognized appears to be this: no chattles personal are capable of being entailed; but the law recognizes a power of descent in such things as appear to be necessary to support the dignity, uphold the splendor, or continue the importance, of an estate or inheritance. The word loom is a Saxon word, signifying a limb or member; and thus heir looms are limbs or members of the inheritance, and which generally cannot be separated from it without detracting from its value. Thus the ancient jewels of the crown are held to be heir-looms, because the loss of them would materially detract from the grandeur of the inheritance and the dignity of the sovereign for the time being. Deer in a park, fish in a pond, charters, deeds, court-rolls and other documents necessary to verify titles of estates, together with the chests in which they are kept, become heir-looms, and pass with the land. Plate and other valuables, presented to a peer for public services, have been held to be heir-looms, as being necessary to the dignity of the several inheritors of the honors of him by whom they were received. Such, also, is the case with things which cannot be separated from the inheritance to which they belong: as chimney-pieces, pumps, ancient fastened tables and benches, and whatever might be considered as rational appendages to the freehold. Thus tombstones, monuments, and coat armor hung in a church, come under the same designation, together with any ensigns of honor that may hang with them. For though the church be the parson's freehold, and these are annexed to the freehold, yet they were placed there by consent, for the advantage and honor of the ancestor and family of the heir, and exist therefore for his benefit. So that the parson, though he is not liable for any damage that may be done to them, which has not occurred through his special act, or those of his agents, yet he cannot take them away, without being subject to an action from the heir for trespass.—Tyas's Legal Hand-Books; Personal Property.

THE MALE AND FEMALE VOICE.—Nature alone has given the human being two distinct kinds of voice, that are again divided and subdivided. "It says: In order to make the causes of this clear, let us cast a glance at one of the simplest laws of tonal vibration. For example—we take a string of a certain length and strength, and give it a certain tension. If with a bow, or simply with the finger, we set it in motion we shall perceive a tone, which we shall call C. Here is another string of the same strength and tension, but only half the length of the last. If we set it in motion, it also gives out the tone C—but not the same; it is finer, higher, more penetrating. If we now strike both strings, we perceive this difference more distinctly and recognize that peculiar unison which musicians term octaves. In order to give forth the high C, the short string is obliged to give forth twice as many vibrations as the long, but in the same time. Without knowing or willing it, we obey the same laws of vibration. Ask a young girl to sing an air that has just been sung by a man, and in the same key; she will sing it an octave higher. The finer and more delicate voice of a woman makes more vibrations in the same time than that of a man, and is higher from that cause. The woman is the octave, the half of the man. The good citizens who call their wives their "better halves" are right, musically speaking. The octave exists through the might of the right divine.

In the male and female voice there are again two principal subdivisions, man sings tenor or bass, woman contralto or soprano. The contralto is the octave of the bass, the soprano the octave of the tenor. Each of those voices has its own peculiar character that does not depend merely on compass or on fullness, but rather on tone coloring."—Musical Review.

EASTERN PROVERBS.—The wise man does not speak of all he does, but he does nothing that cannot be spoken of.

Attention to small things is the economy of virtue.

Ceremony is the smoke of friendship.

The pleasure of doing good is the only one that never wears out.

To cultivate virtue is the science of men; to renounce science is the virtue of women.

The tongues of women increase by all that they take from their feet.

When men are together, they listen to one another; but women and girls look at one another.

The tree overthrown by the wind had more branches than roots.

The dog in the kennel barks at his fleas, but the dog who is hunting does not feel them.

Receive your thoughts as guests, and treat your desires like children.

The prison is shut night and day, yet it is always full; the temples are always open, and yet generally you find no one in them.

Towers are measured by their shadow, and great men by those who are envious of them.

What a pleasure it is to give! There would be no rich people if they were capable of feeling this.

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL THE

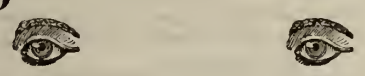
DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of doubt, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'



CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lachrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Augustare Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root, Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Pleurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtue of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG, M. D.,
Sole Proprietor, New York.

Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE
COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be ready for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th March, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - $660.000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29 3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25 3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10.000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co.
WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
no19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28-tf 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

W. H. BROOKS,

STATIONER AND NEWS-DEALER,
No. 51 THIRD STREET,
Near the corner of Mission, - - - San Francisco.

DEALER IN

PLAIN & FANCY STATIONERY,

SCHOOL BOOKS, POCKET CUTLERY, SONGS and SONG BOOKS,

Local and Eastern Newspapers and Periodicals,

And Standard and current light Literature.

A large and well-assorted CIRCULATING LIBRARY on the most liberal terms.

Country orders promptly and accurately attended to.
mh25 3m

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office.

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S
no26 San Francisco.

REMOVAL! REMOVAL!!

WONDERFUL TRIUMPH

IN AMERICAN DENTISTRY.

DR. BEERS & CO.,

Having removed from 617 Clay street

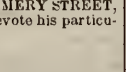
To 129 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

ARE NOW MANUFACTURING THE NEW style of ARTIFICIAL TEETH so highly approved at the East, and which to be appreciated only requires to be seen. The Teeth, Gums and Plate are made of one entire piece of Porcelain without seam or joint, combining great strength and beauty with absolute purity and freedom from any metallic taste, while the coloring of the gums and the interior of the mouth are so perfect as to almost defy detection. All interested in the progress of the Arts are invited to examine samples of this work.

Superior Gold and Vulcanite Work also manufactured as usual, but at greatly reduced price. ja18

DR. LIBBEY,



WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracted with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no charge.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. de10 3m

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3 3m

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order.

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

CARPET CLEANING.

You can get your Carpets cleaned at the STEAM-POWER CARPET Beating Machine for Five Cents per Yard.

Orders left in our boxes, at the following places, will be promptly attended to:

Southeast corner Clay and Dupont streets.
Southeast corner Broadway and Dupont streets.
Northeast corner of Stockton and Jackson streets.
Southeast corner of Powell and Union streets.
Northwest corner of Taylor and Pacific streets.
Southwest corner of Bush and Stockton streets.
Northeast corner of Geary and Taylor streets.
Northwest corner of Kearny and Market streets.
Southeast corner of Howard and Third streets.
Northeast corner of Second and Folsom streets.

Or at the Postoffice, or at Carnes' City Letter Express, 621 Montgomery street, directed to

J. SPAULDING & CO., 113 Fremont st.
mh11-3m.

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.
ap22-tf

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff; vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

AMALIE J. R. SCHAEBEN, Plaintiff; vs. AUGUSTE A. SCHAEBEN, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to AUGUSTE A SCHAEBEN, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney, office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap8-tjy8-inc

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Rigoletto was repeated at the Academy of Music on Monday evening to a large audience. "Gilda" (Sconcia) was very fine, and Miss Adelaide Phillips was most commendable in the soubrette role of "Maddelene." Martha was given on Tuesday evening. The house was full, but the audience were not very demonstrative. Signora Sconcia, as "Martha," sang very sweetly and tenderly, and rendered the "Last Rose of Summer" with refreshing simplicity, quite free from that excessive ornament with which most artists see fit to overload this simple air. Being encored, she repeated the song in English—a trifling incongruity which most of the audience were content to overlook. The spinning quartetto was rendered with great spirit. Miss Phillips' "Naney" was, we think, a trifle overacted, although perfect in vocalization, and if we wished to criticise her costume—usually so unexceptionable and becoming—we would beg her to avoid hereafter any garment of so positive a color as the red dress she wore in the first scene, and which, but for her voice, would have completely disguised her. The Fair scene might have been given more spiritedly; although the choruses were in other respects generally good. Sbriglia's "Lionel" was well sung; Orlandina's "Plunkett" was very acceptable, and the acting of both these gentlemen in the quartette with "Martha" and "Naney" in the Fair scene, was characterized by a good deal of humor and naturalness.

Linda di Chamounix was given on Thursday evening. In the role of "Antonio," Signor Orlandini exhibited considerable energy and power in the duet in the second act where he asks alms of his daughter. Miss Phillips' "Pierotto," it is unnecessary to say, was excellent.

At the Metropolitan, Lucia di Lammermoor was given instead of Don Giovanni, as previously announced. The opera, as an entirety, was well sung. Of individual efforts, Signorina Brambilla deserved the encore she received, and the call before the curtain at the conclusion of the third act. Faust, on Saturday evening drew a crowded house, the proceeds being donated to the Hebrew Benevolent Society. The anxiously-looked-for Don Giovanni was produced on Tuesday evening and repeated on Thursday, when many of the defects of the first performance were corrected. The performance was very creditable for San Francisco—the opera requiring a force of soprani and basses not always found in a single troupe. Signor Barilli's "Leperello" was a very agreeable surprise; he quite distinguished himself as a buffo actor. Morelli's Don Giovanni and Signorina Brambilla's "Zerlina" were very effective. All shortcomings were forgotten in the exquisite music of Mozart. The scenic effects were capital, and we are glad to notice that in the second representation the old brimstone denouement was restored in place of the later innovation. "Owing to unforeseen difficulties," the Manager of the Metropolitan announces an abrupt termination of the season.

THEATRICAL TALK.

Mr. Dan. Setchell still continues to fill Maguire's Opera House nightly. This week having been devoted to benefits, Mr. Setchell has repeated the plays of Dombey and Son, Toodles, etc., in which he has gained so much popularity.

This afternoon a "grand Toodles matinée" will be given. The evening performance will be for the benefit of the First Light Dragoons and San Francisco Hussars. The bill for the occasion will consist of the capital comedy of Married Life, after which Mr. Frank Mayo will deliver an address entitled "E Pluribus Unum, and "Toodles" will wind up the performance tight. On Monday night Mr. Setchell will have to be funny indeed to avoid the lamentable spectacle of an audience of nearly two thousand people dissolved in tears. It is Mrs. Perry's farewell benefit. She has determined to go to New York. We can ill spare her from the San Francisco stage; but if she has determined to go, good luck go with her; may she meet with the success to which her talents justly entitle her—we need wish her no more.

On Thursday night Mr. Charles Wheatleigh opened the Eureka Theatre, producing two new plays for the occasion. Boucicault's comedy How She Loves Him, or Dying for Love, is a capital play, and was very well played throughout. Mr. Wheatleigh is well supported by Mrs. Fanny Morgan Phelps, Mrs. Judah, Mr. Hill, Mr. Franks, Mr. Meyers, Miss Louisa Clarkson, and others, who make up a really strong company for the production of comedy and farce. How She Loves Him ought to draw many a good house; it is one of Boucicault's most brilliant productions, and was excellently cast, the actors seeming to fit into their parts as if they had been written for them. Mr. Wheatleigh being good in everything he does, it is unnecessary to tell how excellent an impersonation his "Tom. Vacile" was. Mrs. Fanny Morgan Phelps, as the dashing "Miss Atlanta Cruiser" was a perfect realization of the character. A more thoroughly natural actress, in parts which require a display of animal spirits and beaming good nature, than Mrs. Phelps, it would be hard to meet with. Mr. Hill, in the Lord Dundreariyish part of "Captain Yawley," gained immense applause by his extremely clever impersonation of a swell. Mr. Franks, as "Dick Heartly," had no very great chance to make people laugh, but showed himself quite at home in a light comedy character. The Irishman, "Diogenes," was played with much humor by Mr. Meyers that he at once established himself firmly as a favorite, and was rewarded with shouts of applause and laughter. If merit can insure success in theatrical affairs in this city, then assuredly will Mr. Wheatleigh prosper in his theatrical housekeeping. The performance on the opening night concluded with the new farce, On the Sly, in which Mr. Wheatleigh and Mrs. Judah kept the audience in constant merriment. Miss Gass, as "Martha," a hoydenish servant girl displayed considerable talent for that line of business. This afternoon and evening the same bill will be repeated.

TOUCHSTONE.

(For the Californian.)

THE HOLLY.

(ILEX AQUIFOLIUM.)

THE Holly is probably a corruption of the word holy; as Turner, in his Herbal, calls it holy tree, probably from its being used to commemorate the holy time of Christmas, not only in houses but in churches. The origin of this practice is uncertain, but the custom of placing evergreens in places of religious worship prevailed before the introduction of Christianity, and several texts of Scripture, particularly in the 40th, 41st, 51st and 55th chapters of Isaiah, and in the 8th chapter of Nehemiah, have reference to it, but the evergreens originally made use of, were branches of the pine, fir and cedar, and sprigs of box. Holly appears to have been first used for this purpose by the early Christians of Rome, and was probably adopted for decorating the churches at Christmas, because holly was used in the great festival of the Saturnalia, which occurred about that period, and it was the policy of the early fathers of the church to assimilate the festivals of the pagans and Christians as closely as possible in their outward forms, to avoid shocking unnecessarily the prejudices of newly-made converts.

It was customary among the ancient Romans to send boughs of holly during the Saturnalia, as emblematical of good wishes, with the gifts they presented to their friends at that season, and the holly became thus to be considered as an emblem of peace and good-will. It was for this reason, independently of any wish to conciliate the pagans, well adapted to be an emblem of the principal festival of a religion which professes, more than any other, to preach peace and good will to man. Whatever may have been the origin of the practice it appears to be of very great antiquity. Dr. Chandler, in his Travels in Greece, supposes this custom to be derived from the Druids, who he says decorated dwelling-places with evergreens during winter, "that the sylvan spirits might repair to them and remain unnipped with frost and cold winds until a milder season had revived the foliage of their darling abodes." In England, perhaps the earliest record of this custom is a carol in praise of the holly, written in the reign of Henry VI., and preserved in the Harbian MS. No. 5396, in illustration of which it must be observed that the ivy, being dedicated to Bacchus, was used as a vintner's sign in winter, and hung outside the door.

"Nay, Ivy, nay, it shall not be I wys;
Let Holy have the maystry, as the manner ys.
Holy stond in the halle, fayre to be behold;
Ivy stond without the dore; she ys full sore a cold."

Stowe, in his Survey of London, published in 1598, says that in his time every man's house, the parish churches, the corner of the streets, markets and crosses, were decorated with holly, ivy and bays at Christmas.

The disciples of Zoroaster believed that the sun never shadows the holly-tree, and the followers of that philosopher who still remain in Persia and India are said to throw water, impregnated with holly bark, in the face of a child newly born. Columella, an ancient writer, recommends it for fences:

"A hedge of holly, thieves that would invade,
Repulses, like a growing palisado;
Whose numerous leaves such orient greens invest,
As in deep winter do the spring arrest."

And Virgil places his four contending shepherds:

"Beneath a holm that murmur'd in the breeze."

Thompson mentions it as as offering shelter to the birds when they begin to build:

——"some to the holly hedge,
Nestling repair, and to the thicket some;
Some to the rude protection of the thorn."

In that delightful work, Jesse's Gleanings in Natural History, the eloquent author, speaking of the holly, says: "The economy of trees, plants and vegetables is a curious subject of inquiry, and in all of them we may trace the hand of a benificent Creator. The same care which He has bestowed on His creatures is extended to plants. This is remarkably the case with respect to the holly; the edges of the leaves are provided with strong sharp spines, as high up as they are within the reach of cattle; above that height the leaves are generally smooth, the projecting spines being no longer necessary."

Southey has noticed this circumstance in the following pretty lines:

"Oh, reader! hast thou ever stood to see
The holly-tree?
The eye that contemplates it well perceives
Its glassy leaves,
Order'd by an intelligence so wise
As might confound the Atheist's sophistries.
Below, a circling fence its leaves are seen
Wrinkled and keen;
No grazing cattle through their prickly round
Can reach to wound;
But as they grow, where nothing is to fear,
Smooth and warm'd the pointless leaves appear.
I love to view these things with envious eyes,
And moralize;
And in this wisdom of the holly-tree
Can emblems see,
Wherewith, perchance, to make a pleasant rhyme,
One which may profit in the after-time."

The holly attains the largest size in a rich sandy loam, but will grow and thrive on almost any soil, provided it is not overcharged with moisture. As a hedge plant, shrub or tree it is unsurpassed, with its deep shining green leaves and coral berries, or in the variagated kinds, with their beautiful markings of gold and silver. There are on record instances where the holly has attained a great age and size. Pliny tells us that near the city of Tibur were three holly-trees, which were upwards of twelve hundred years old, and measured over thirty-five feet in circumference. Bradley, in 1726, mentions hollies that were sixty feet in height.

IRIS.

FRIDAY evening's despatches brought the President's Amnesty Proclamation, which exempts all the prominent civil and military leaders, all who left seats in Congress or Judicial stations, all who tendered their resignations in the Army or Navy to accept position in the Confederate service, all military and naval officers in the rebel service educated by the United States, all Governors of rebel States, and all parties guilty in a prominent or particular manner in aiding the rebellion, from the benefits of its provisos.

NOVEL EXCURSION.—This is the last day to procure tickets for the Homestead Excursion to the new city of Newport, Benicia, Collinsville and Antioch, which takes place to-morrow.

The low-pressure steamer San Antonio will leave Pacific-street wharf for all the above places to-morrow (Sunday) morning at 8 o'clock, sharp. The novelty of the Excursion is that any party buying two tickets at $2 50 each, will be entitled to a homestead 25x100 feet, FREE. The new city of Newport is at the junction of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. A fine Band of Music will accompany the boat. Offices, 511 Sacramento and 334 Montgomery street. The Montgomery street office will remain open until 10 o'clock this evening, to enable mechanics and others to procure tickets and lots. Maps and deeds given without charge at the office.

Newport already boasts a fine wharf two hundred feet in length, store, warehouse, post-office, etc., and its proprietors have wisely taken this method to form the nucleus of a town by disposing of several hundred of their lots for a trifle, and interesting so many more people in their property and in the town's advancement.

IT will be remembered (by some, at least,) that Dr BENTON had commenced a series of lectures on the subject of reformed practice in healing diseases, and the better mode of living to secure health; also, giving some amusing practical illustrations of the effect of Animal Magnetism, or psychological power of one mind over another. The lectures were delivered at Platt's Hall. The news of the assassination of our lamented President prevented further lectures at that time. The Doctor has now secured Dashaway Hall for six or ten evenings, commencing Monday evening, June 12th, and has made the terms of admission reasonable. It is presumed by the friends and investigators of progressive science that there will be good attendance. The admittance is fifty cents for gentlemen; ladies and children, free. Dr. Benton's office for consultation or treatment is 109 Montgomery street, Rooms 5, 6, 7 and 8.

COBB & SINTON'S GREAT SALE TO-DAY.—One of the most eligible and desirable pieces of property in the vicinity of the city proper is to be sold in homestead lots by the above firm at 12 o'clock to-day. The property fronts on and overlooks the Bay, and is located at and near the junction of the Shell Road to Bay View Park and the new road across the Potrero leading from the terminus to the Fourth street bridge, and has been known for years as the "Hinley Ranch."

The Fourth-street Railroad Company contemplate an extension of their charter, and the laying of a double track over Fourth street bridge and the new Potrero road to Bay View Park in a few months, which improvement must greatly enhance the value of this property. The title is perfect, and the terms most liberal, namely: one-fourth cash and the remainder in one, two and three yearly payments. We sincerely think no better chance for investment in real estate has been offered for years.

THEODORE TILTON, editor of the Independent, in a note to Mr. Bradbury, says:

My Dear Bradbury—I have had the beautiful piano so long, that now to ask me how I like it, is like asking me how I like one of my children! In fact, if you were to ask the children, I'm afraid they would say they liked it nearly as well as they like me! It speaks every day, the year round, and never loses its voice. I wish its owner could do half as well. Ever your friend, as of old,

THEODORE TILTON.

MRS. READ'S Skirt Supporters and Chest Expanders are becoming so popular that she has found it necessary to remove her establishment to more commodious and centrally-located rooms. She will now receive her customers at 109 Montgomery street. Ladies will please read her advertisement.

☞ THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co. THOMAS MOONEY, Secretary.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning.
A. KOHLER, 424 Sansome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6,500,000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
'y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
Nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

COMMERCIAL STEAM PRINTING HOUSE.
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.,
517 CLAY and 514 COMMERCIAL STREETS.

Every description of BOOK, JOB and POSTER PRINTING done in the best style and at the lowest rates.
BOOK-BINDING and RULING done to order.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,
PRINTERS,
BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.
517
CLAY STREET, BET, SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY.
my27

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

PRINTING! PRINTING!!

H. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
NO. 522 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery, - - San Francisco.

All Descriptions of JOB PRINTING done cheaper and as good as anywhere else in the city.
fe4-tf

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25-tf

VANDALL, CARR & CO.,
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 410 CLAY STREET,
(North side, between Sansome and Battery.

☞ Particular attention paid to the printing of Briefs and Records. fe11-tf

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.
The following steamships will be despatched in the month of APRIL, 1865:
JUNE 3d - - - - - - CONSTITUTION
From Folsom-street Wharf, at nine o'clock, A. M., punctually,
FOR PANAMA.
Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.
OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
mh25 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!!

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.

ARE NOW OFFERING

AT

No. 7 Montgomery street,

At Reduced Prices,

300 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 50 each.
250 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 75 each.
500 Calico Dress Patterns, at $2 each.
450 Delaine Dress Patterns, at $2 50 each.
5,000 yards Dress Goods, at 37 1-2c per yard.
4,000 yards Dress Goods, at 50 cents per yard.

Just received, a full line of new and desirable Dress Goods for the Season, comprising French Printed Percales, Cambries, Lawns, Organdies, Linen Chambrays, Scotch Ginghams, etc., etc.

3,000 yards Black Paramatta, at 20 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Black Alpacas, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.

And a large assortment of new and desirable MOURNING GOODS, comprising 4-4 and 6-4 very fine Black Alpacas, English and French Bombazines, Black Byzantines, Tamise and Empress Cloths, Love and Crape Veils, Mourning Shawls, Crape Collars and sets, at reduced prices.

1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 per yard.
1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 25 per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 50 per yard.
3,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at 75 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at $1 per yard.
8,000 yds from $1 25 per yard to $8.

And a large assortment of new Chene Silks, Rep and Moires, which they offer at very low prices.

4,000 pairs Ladies' White Cotton Hose, at 25c per pair.
500 dozen from $5 to $7 per dozen.

Also, a full assortment of English, German and Balbriggan Hose and half Hose, Ladies', Misses and Boys' Merino Vests, etc., at greatly reduced prices.

100 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $1 37 1-2 per dozen.
125 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $2 50 per doz.
250 Linen Sets, Embroidered, at 37 1 2 cents.

Also, a full line of Embroidered Bands, Edgings and Insertings, at reduced prices.

DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT.

5 cases 4-4 fine Water Twist Muslin, at 20 cents per yd.
5 cases 4-4 best New York Mills, at 30 cents per yd.
35 cases of all the other standard brands, such as Hope, Longdale, White Rock, Androscoggin, Wauhegan, and Wamsutta, which we will offer at prices to suit the times.
8-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 45 cents per yard.
9-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 50 cents per yard.
10-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 55 cents per yard.
3,000 yds 4-4 Irish Linens, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 4-4 Irish Linens, (very heavy,) at 50 cents per yard.
1,000 ynrds 8-4 Bleached Table Linen, at $1 per yard.

And a very superior lot of real Barnsley Table Linen, at reduced prices.

2,000 yards Domet's Flannel, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 yards Shaker Flannel, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.
3,000 yards All Wool Shaker Flannel, at 45 cents per yard.

Also, a large and varied assortment of Towels, Towelling, Table Napkins, Piano Covers, Lace Curtains, Quilts and Blankets, all of which are offered at reduced prices.

ALEXANDRE'S BEST QUALITY OF KID GLOVES.
100 dozen Misses', at $1 25 per pair.
500 dozen Ladies', at $1 50 per pair.
200 doz. Gents', (double stitched,) at $1 50 per pair.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
my13-1m No. 7 Montgomery street.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
JUNE 13th!
OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK!
VIA NICARAGUA!
CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!
SHORTEST AND QUICKEST ROUTE!!!
THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the commodious and favorite steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
J. H. BLETHEN, - - - - - Commander.
FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, NICARAGUA,
ON TUESDAY, - - - JUNE 13TH.
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely,
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the new and splendid Steamship
GOLDEN RULE,
3,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.
The transit of the Isthmus is a pleasant trip. Meals furnished free by the Company while crossing. A baggage-master will be sent through by each steamer. Insurance on Treasure at the lowest rates.
The steamer AMERICA will succeed the MOSES TAYLOR in July.
For information or passage, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, AGENT, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
my20 Up stairs, San Francisco.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.
We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street.
de17 5m NEW YORK.

FLOWERS! FLOWERS!!

The attention of the Public is invited to
The Floral Repository,
Of C. B. MILLER, Bush street, opposite Cosmopolitan Hotel.

Mr. MILLER keeps constantly on hand the rarest and choicest flowers that the season or the market affords, and will furnish parties or private houses with floral decorations at the shortest notice. Bouquets made to order, and sent to their destination with promptness. Mr. Miller would invite attention to some curious specimens of the Orchis family which his collection affords, and he would be pleased to have a call from all lovers of Flowers, whether they wish to purchase or not.

"HOME, SWEET HOME!"

No home of taste is complete without Aquaria, Gold Fish, Birds, Feru Cases, new and rare Plants, Bulbs and Seeds, Cut Flowers and Bouquets for Weddings, Hanging Baskets, Rustic Stands, Shells, Minerals, etc.
A long experience at the East justifies Mr. Miller in promising to please the patrons who may favor him with a trial. He will also be happy at all times to furnish those who take an interest in flowers with any information relative to their care and culture that may be desired.
MILLER'S 206 Bush street,
Opposite the Cosmopolitan. San Francisco.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.
A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
de31 3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:
Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.
9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40
FROM THE CITY
10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.
Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.
my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

DR. H. A. BENTON,
Electro-Magnetic Physician,
OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Appliances and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:
Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Vinton, American Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.
Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.
ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE!

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE
Has fully established the superiority of
Redding's Russia Salve
Over all other preparations
FOR THE CURE OF
Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,
AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE
is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.
REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY,
A CURE FOR EVERY FORM OF
Pulmonary Complaint!
COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH, SPITTING OF BLOOD, LIVER COMPLAINT, etc., etc.

Consumption,
Which carries off more victims than any other disease, and which baffles the skill of the Physician to a greater extent than any other malady, often
YIELDS TO THIS REMEDY,
when all others prove ineffectual.
AS A MEDICINE,
Rapid in relief, soothing in effect, safe in its operation, it is
UNSURPASSED!
while as a preparation, free from noxious ingredients, poisons or minerals; uniting skill, science and medical knowledge, combining all that is valuable in the vegetable kingdom for this class of disease, it is
INCOMPARABLE!
and is entitled, merits and receives the enviable appellation of the
INVALID'S FRIEND.

Sold by all druggists and by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco

POLITENESS, INSULAR AND CONTINENTAL.

EVENING PARTIES.

EVENING parties present the grand difficulty of how to occupy the time. It requires great tact and talent on the part of the master or mistress of the house to keep up pleasant conversation in a small coterie. Hence the expediency, sometimes the necessity, of introducing cards. Another method of amusing your friends is to get together twice as many people as your house will hold. The crush in your rooms, the crowd on your staircase, the impossibility of getting in, and the equal impossibility of getting out again, afford continual entertainment, which never flags until your visitors take their final flight.

If, however, you hesitate to put in practice this desperate measure, a moderate-sized party will often go off well by allowing impromptu amusements to take their course. A dance is proposed. Some one volunteers to officiate as orchestra at the piano. It is not an affair of any pretension, nor of strict etiquette, nor of very full dress. With unaffected cheerfulness and a general determination to please and be pleased, such evenings are often the most agreeable of all. The games called Christmas may be sometimes resorted to, but their success is hazardous unless conducted with great delicacy and caution. The mistress of the house must preside over all, repressing the boisterous and encouraging the timid. As soon as the interest in any game begins to flag, it is time to change it instantly. On such occasions, it is needless to observe, the object should be to indulge in mirth without once forgetting propriety; and where that is duly observed, any one may take part in those amusements without any detriment to his dignity.

It is not polite for any member of the company to attempt to direct, dictate to, or domineer over the others. A game may be modestly proposed, an opinion offered, a suggestion made; but nothing further. Good-breeding strictly forbids us to insist too strongly on our own ideas, or to carry out our own wishes with too much persistence. Still less is it polite to take advantage of the liberty allowed at such times to make cutting remarks, sarcastic observations, ambiguous compliments, or impose humiliating forfeits. To indulge in strongly-marked flirtation, to pass one's arm round a young lady's waist, to take forcible possession of a ribbon or a flower, or to select incessantly one and the same partner, are marks of defective social training which, if permitted to continue, would soon put an end to social mirth.

Acted charades form a charming drawing-room recreation, provided the actors who accept the parts are gifted with spirit, intelligence, and originality. But something depends on the host, who has to furnish the scenery, costume and properties. For the first, a screen or two will often suffice; imagination must supply the rest. The efficiency of the latter varies with the adaptive talent of the wearer. For charade costume all is fish that comes to the net. Old hats, caps, flowers, ribbons, handkerchiefs, carpets even, serve for decoration. A gilt paper crown distinguishes a king; a wand denotes a fairy; an old-fashioned garment makes an aged personage. A lady becomes a gentleman by wearing a gentleman's hat; whilst a gentleman is converted into a lady by putting on a lady's shawl and carrying a parasol.

To act a charade, a word is first agreed on, each syllable or portion of which is to suggest an act or tableau, the final act representing "The Whole." At the beginning, the spectators are informed how many acts there are before "The Whole." The word may be selected from any language known to the company. A French word, for instance, may be taken for those familiar with that language. It is not necessary to adhere to the strict orthography of the syllables; their similarity of sound when pronounced suffices. Charades may either be written and got by heart beforehand, like any other theatrical piece—by far the safest and most certain way to avoid any possibility of a break-down—or they may be improvised with more or less of preparation and previous arrangement.

Suppose we take the word "Ansterlitz," dividing it into French syllables. First will come Os, a bone, affording a scene between a housekeeper and a butcher, who wants to give her too much bone to her meat. Terre, earth or land, may be represented either by sailors coming ashore after a long voyage, or by gardening, farming and mining operations. Litz may be a caricature of the great German pianist performing one of his eccentric capriccios, or treating the audience to some "Music of the Future." The Whole will be Napoleon's well-known bivouac on the eve of the famous battle, of course given in burlesque style. The entire performance should be mixed up with jokes and humorous dialogue, to throw the audience off the right scent.

Again: let us take the word "Chateau," a castle or country seat. Our first is Chat, a cat. A young gentleman returns from shooting, carrying a heavy game-bag, and tells his mother and sisters he has brought them a hare. On producing it, it proves to be a tortoise-shell, and a dispute arises whether it is really a cat or not. While they are debating the question, an old woman enters, bewailing the loss of her darling puss, and accusing the sportsman of the murder. He refuses to pay the value of the cat, and so she goes out to fetch a policeman. The policeman (who stammers) lays down the law. "A ca-ca-cat is a do-do-domestic animal and you mu-mu-must not sh-sh-shoot do-do domestic animals," etc. The cat is paid for, and the old woman satisfied.

For our second, Eau, water, we may take a scene in the desert, where a caravan athirst discovers a spring. But water can be easily acted and indicated in half a dozen different ways, which the reader's ingenuity will readily imagine.

For our Whole, two benighted travellers are proceeding to a chateau hard by, when a woman warns them not to go, as it is empty, and tenanted only by ghosts. They do go, notwithstanding; and just as they are dropping off to sleep, phantoms appear, rattling chains and making other horrible noises. The travellers threaten to shoot the ghosts, who then confess that they are coiners in the flesh, wanting to keep the chateau to themselves. The travellers promise secrecy. On leaving, they meet the woodman, who expresses surprise at their escaping alive, and inquires what they think of the chateau. "Oh," they say, "it is a terrible chatean. There is not such another chateau in the world. Advise everybody to avoid the chateau."

DANCING.

At Continental balls where the English element does not predominate, there is a smaller proportion of young people in general, and of young ladies in particular. Of course, by "balls" are not understood any such places as the Bal Mabille or the Bal de l'Opera, which are not frequented by respectable women, but balls to which a decent man would care to take his sister or his daughter. Such balls, especially those given by official personages, are more stately, more splendid than in England, more brilliant with jewelry and embroidery, more magisterial in their character, more businesslike and serious. There is less dancing, and that more in the style of a stated solemnity. The refreshments and supper correspond in their degree of munificence and solidity. The belles of these balls are the young married women, not the girls; many a French girl scarcely knows what a ball is, except by hearsay, until she is married.

If, therefore, you are smitten with a French young lady, you may not, at a ball, manifest your inclination; on the contrary, you must completely conceal it. If your views are serious, the proper course is for your parents (or their nearest representatives) to communicate with your charmer's parents. If they approve, events march in their regular train; but balls have very little to do with it until all is settled. At a French ball, you must not flirt with nor court a lady.

Such customs afford an explanation of many rules of French behavior.

A young girl's best qualities are considered to be reserve, and a salutary mistrust of herself. A modest girl will wear a simple dress; her demeanor will be calm, utterly devoid of airs and affectation. She will perhaps manifest timidity on entering the room and saluting her hostess: but blushes are preferable to boldness. She will speak little, and not giggle at all; she will listen attentively to the music, and will dance quietly and modestly; she will not accept, still less will seek, attentions on the part of young men; she will not give them her fan, her carnet, (memorandum card,) or her handkerchief to hold; she will partake of refreshments with great discretion. If she is remarked at all, it will solely be approvingly; for the serenity of her looks and manner will assure every beholder of the innocence of her thoughts.

A young lady, dancing, will not lift her dress too high, nor look her partner full in the face. If he utter a few ball-room commonplaces, she is to reply politely but briefly, without bluntness or embarrassment. When all is over, she is to thank him with a curtsey, avoiding everything which might establish any relation between herself and a stranger. If, by mistake, she has promised the same quadrille to two partners, she is bound to do her utmost to prevent any misunderstanding between them, by refraining from dancing with either of them, and perhaps even by renouncing dancing for the rest of the evening. Ball-room quarrels, in former times, were of frequent occurrence; and they are still so far from rare on the Continent, that young ladies should be very careful not to do anything which may cause serious, perhaps fatal strife, either between two partners, or between the brother and a partner.

A young lady—The Habits tells us—must be very careful how she refuses to dance with a gentleman. Next to refusing an offer of marriage, few things are so likely to draw upon her the indignation of the rejected applicant: for, unless a good reason is given, he is apt to take it as evidence of personal dislike. If she reply very politely, asking to be excused, as she has as a "slight headache," and does not wish to dance—"with you," being probably her mental reservation—a man ought to be satisfied, if not pleased. At all events, he should never press her to dance after one refusal. The young lady who has refused one gentleman has no right to accept another for that dance.

The carnet, although somewhat pretentious, is useful for avoiding the annoyance and danger of a lady's accepting two partners for the same dance. Generally, each guest provides their own carnet; but the excellent hint given by The Habits is sometimes carried out both at home and abroad. "The dances should be arranged beforehand; and for large balls you should have printed a number of double cards, containing on the one side a list of the dances, and on the opposite page blank spaces, to be filled up by the names of partners. A small pencil should be attached to each card, which should be given to each guest in the cloak-room."

THE PIANO NUISANCE.

It is quite an error—especially in town—to entertain your friends with home-made music. What with the musical theatres, and what with the organs, it is a great relief to pass an evening without music, even where the music is tolerably good. But when, for sixpence or a shilling, you can hear better than the best amateur performances, a family concert after dinner is treating you to something for which you did not come. Believe me, the way to be a good musician is to have to earn your bread by music. The few wealthy exceptions, like Meyerbeer, who have existed, devoting themselves entirely to the art, can scarcely be called non-professionals.

Everybody in France plays the piano, and everybody in France complains of the piano. A piano tax has even been talked of in a serio-comic, hysterical way, half-laughing and half-bewailing. Pianophobia breaks out in all sorts of ways.

"What a dear, delightful creature is Mademoiselle Honorine Longbourse!" softly sighed young Monsieur Mabille.

"Delightful, indeed!" echoed Charles Le Beau. "Nineteen; clear complexion; black hair; blue eyes."

"She has two hundred thousand francs down on her wedding-day."

"An only daughter, too, with a rich bachelor uncle in failing health. Delightful!"

"And—most delightful!—she can't play the piano! By-the-way, I am looking out for an apartment."

"With a south aspect, of course?"

"Oh, no, indeed!"

"You prefer the north?"

"Not the least in the world. I want an apartment, north or south, on the first floor or on the fifth, big or little, dear or cheap, if I can only get out of the way of pianos."

"That is all? I only wish you may find it! Do you go to Madame Bellefleur's party to-night?"

"I should think not, indeed. Nobody goes there."

"Why don't they go? Madame Bellefleur is charming, her house is perfect, and everything is done on the most liberal scale."

"I should like to know how people can go, when her daughters do nothing but play duets on the piano."

In the country, nevertheless, domestic music is a great resource—for the people who make it. And if knots of music-makers like to congregate and club their individual noises into one composite whole, there is no harm done. They have a perfect right to play the part of both performers and audience. They have no next door neighbors to complain of the annoyance. If the invitation specifies, as it ought in such cases, that you are to have amateur music, you are forewarned and therefore fore-armed, and can use your own discretion about going or staying away. There may, however, happen to be a balance of interests in the case—a nice equilibrium of attraction and repulsion. The supper may hold out a compensation for the infliction of discord and ill-kept time; one young lady's pleasant talking voice may make up for another's ballad sung touchingly out of tune. A gay little dance after the concert may dispel the gloom engendered by sonatas and symphonies. But, generally speaking, there is a sentiment I would recommend to the purveyors of drawing-room music: "May the evening's amusement bear the morning's criticism!"—London Society.

How to Enter Upon a Scientific Pursuit.—In entering upon any scientific pursuit, one of the student's first endeavors ought to be to prepare his mind for the reception of truth, by dismissing, or at least loosening his hold on all such crude and hastily-adopted notions respecting the objects and relations he is about to examine as may tend to embarrass or mislead him; and to strengthen himself by something of an effort and a resolve, for the unprejudiced admission of any conclusion which shall appear to be supported by careful observation and logical argument, even should it prove of a nature adverse to notions he may have previously formed for himself, or taken up, without examination, on the credit of others. Such an effort is, in fact, a commencement of that intellectual discipline which is one of the most important ends of all science. It is the first movement of approach towards that state of moral purity which alone can fit us for a full and steady perception of moral beauty, as well as physical adaptation. It is the "euphrasy and rue" with which we must "purge our sight" before we can receive and contemplate as they are the lineaments of truth and nature.—Sir John Herschel.

At an evening party, Jerrold was looking at the dancers. Seeing a very tall gentleman waltzing with a remarkably short lady, he said to a friend: "Humph! there's the mile dancing with the mile-stone."

FURNITURE
Closing Out at any Price !

On accouut of tbe Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNDERSELL anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDST EDS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS,
BEDDING, Etc.,

At Your Own Prices !

ap22-3m

OVERSTOCKED !
AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would ndvise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO
UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET
Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.
Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, nud will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES !

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS
—AT—
LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES !

GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

NEW WHOLESALE STORE !

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the best selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES !

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.
ap22-3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, Etc.

WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style.

WILSON & EVANS,
mn4 3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND, & CO.,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
ap22 tf

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons we can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfaction. my27 3m

---

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

SAN JOSE.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY.....Proprietor.

As a desirable place of resort for health or recreation, the above Hotel is not surpassed in the State.

Excellent accommodations for families, by the day, week, or month, on reasonable terms.

ju25

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and compossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 Sacramento street, Corner of Webb,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspopsia, Diarrbœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again,

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and luggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A Timely Warning to the Sick.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

REGENERATING
Extract of Millefleurs !

THIS UNRIVALLED PREPARATION

CLEANSES
—AND—
BEAUTIFIES
THE HAIR!

Immediately rendering the coarsest Hair soft and pliable, prevents Disease of the Scalp, premature decay of the Hair, and BALDNESS !

It may be used upon CHILDREN and YOUNG PERSONS with the greatest satisfaction and cheerful assurance of permanent benefit—producing Luxuriance of Growth, removing all impurities from the surface of the Head—stimulating and preserving the HAIR to the latest period of life.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
Corner of Clay San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

Diabetes, Indigestion, Inflammation of the Kidneys, Stranguary Calculus, Gravel, Catarrh and other Affections of the Bladder.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

---

A BAD BREATH !

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted ! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME!

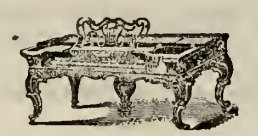
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers
—IN—
Fine Clothing
—AND—
GENTLEMEN'S
FURNISHING GOODS,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,
200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,
ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME !



WM. B. BRADBURY'S
New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimonials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.
A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29-tf

---

GREAT TRIUMPH !!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

M. HARKINS,
MANUFACTURER OF
LADIES', MISSES', AND CHILDRENS
Boots and Shoes.

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BOOTS, SHOES and SLIPPERS MADE TO ORDER.

No. 151 FOURTH STREET,
Second door above Howard, east side,
SAN FRANCISCO

☞ Repairing of all kinds neatly and promptly done.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS
—TO—
Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO
FOR RED BLUFF,
EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

no5-tf J. WHITNEY, Jr., President.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,
IMPORTERS OF
STOVES AND METALS,
Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW GOODS!

NEW GOODS!

NEW GOODS!

AT

TAAFFE & CO.'S.,

9 MONTGOMERY STREET.

EX STEAMER CONSTITUTION.

Will be opened during the coming week, the following new Dress Goods received by the "Constitution":

RICH DRESS SILKS!

TRAVELLING DRESS GOODS!

DRESS AND OPERA CLOAKS!

FRENCH CAMEL'S HAIR SHAWLS!

MOURNING DRESS GOODS!

MERINOS, DE LAINES,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH PRINTS!

Terms Cash, and only ONE PRICE ASKED.

je10-1t

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET.

(OVER FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE DEPOT,)

INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest EXPANDERS,

For Expanding the Chest, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

This Supporter possesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who have used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishing to possess

GRACE OF FORM

AND

SYMMETRY OF PERSON.

It is comfortable to the frame, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of

GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of

BUST,

Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. READ also has a Supporter which she can confidently recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation; gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M. my27-tf

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

PUBLIC NOTICE is hereby given, that MONROE ASHBURY, A. H CUMMINGS, and A. J. SHRADER, a Committee of the Board of Equalization for the correction of erroas in Assessment upon Personal Property for fiscal year 1865-'66, will meet in the Chambers of the Board of Supervisors daily, (Sundays excepted,) from 12 M. to 3 o'clock P. M., until Wednesday, the 14th inst., for the consideration of such applications as may be brought before them. Sworn statements are required by law. The Roll will be open for public examination from 9 o'clock A. M. to 4 o'clock P. M.

By order of the Committee. JAS. W. BINGHAM,
San Francisco, June 7, 1865. Clerk.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,
Pine street, near Montgomery.

T. MAGUIRE.....Proprietor and Manager.
J. H. WARWICK.....Stage Manager

ON SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 10th,

MAGUIRE'S

Italian Opera Troupe

Will give Donizetti's Grand Opera of

LUCREZIA BORGIA!

Lucrezia.....Signorina Olivia Sconcia
Maffo Orsini.....Miss Adelaide Phillips
Genaro.....Signor Giovanni Sbriglia
Don Alfonso D'Este.....Signor D. Orlandini
Ginbetta.....Mr. John De Haga
Rustighello.....Mons. Charles
Ascania Petrucci.....M. Wunderlich
With a Full and Efficient Orchestra.

Monday Evening, June 12th,

BENEFIT OF MISS ADELAIDE PHILLIPS!

La Favorita!

ASTHONY REIFF, JR.....Conductor of Orchestra.

Seats can be secured two days in advance.

Books of the Operas can be purchased at the Box Office.

Dress and Family Circle.....$1 00
Orchestra Seats.....$1 00
Gallery.....50 cents
Private Boxes.....$10 and $5
Reserved Seats.....$1 50

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR

OF THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

TO BE HELD IN THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,

IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.

The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Executive Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.

No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.

A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receeive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.

Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 2d of August.

Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 2 l of August.

The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.

The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.

The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.

The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.

No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.

All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.

All communications to be addressed to C. S. HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hinscom, Edward Noonan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS RELIEVING AND STRENGTHENING PAIN

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.

THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Brandreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.] dc17-3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

Engagement of the Celebrated Comedian,

MR. DAN SETCHELL,

SUPPORTED BY

THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Saturday Evening, June 10th, 1865,

BENEFIT OF THE FIRST LIGHT DRAGOONS AND SAN FRANCISCO HUSSARS!

DAN SETCHELL

In the Comedy of

MARRIED LIFE!

After which an Address entitled

E PLURIBUS UNUM!

BY FRANK MAYO.

To conclude with

TOODLES!

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,

SATURDAY, June 10th,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

Grand Toodles Matinee!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - 50 cents
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

EUREKA THEATRE.

Montgomery street between Pine and California.

C. WHEATLEIGH respectfully informs the public that he has leased the above Theatre, (which has been thoroughly renovated,) for the production of a succession of Novelties of a first class character, and which he pledges himself to produce in a manner worthy of the patronage of the community.

Saturday Afternoon and Evening, June 10th,

Dion Boucicault's new and successful Comedy, entitled

HOW SHE LOVES HIM!

OR, DYING FOR LOVE.

Tom Vacille.....Mr. C. Wheatleigh
Miss Atlanta Cruiser....Mrs. Fanny Morgan Phelps
Captain Yawley.....W. H. Hill
Dick Heartly.....F. Franks
Diogenes.....Myers
Lady Selena Raffleticket.....Mrs. Judah
Mrs. Vacille.....Miss Louisa Clarkson
Other characters by Messrs. Mitchell, Reeves, N. Thayer, J. Torrence and Sinclair.

To conclude with Morton's new Farce of

ON THE SLY.

Mr. Dibbets.....Mr. C. Wheatleigh
Mr. Wagstaff.....Myers
Major Growler.....F. Franks
Mrs. Dibbetts.....Mrs. Judah
Martha.....Miss Gans

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,

FOR FAMILIES?

ADMISSION, 50 cents. Children half-price.

Dress Circle, $1 00; Parquette, 50 and 25 cents; Private Boxes, $5 02.

LEECHES! LEECHES! LEECHES!

We are in receipt, per every steamer, of FRESH SWEDISH LEECHES, which we offer for sale at lower rates than ever before on this coast. R. H. McDONALD & CO., jc10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, je10 3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

GUARDIAN'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 24th day of April, 1865, in the matter of the estate of Louis Conrad Meyer, a minor, the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said minor, will sell to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on the 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. & A. Barstow, No. 24 Montgomery Block, corner of Montgomery and Washington streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said Louis Conrad Meyer in and to that certain lot or parcel of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz.:

Commencing at the northwesterly corner of Octavia and Fulton streets, thence running south along the west line of Octavia street, 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, easterly 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, northerly 275 feet; and thence westerly along the north line of Fulton street 27½ feet to the place of beginning; comprising a portion of Western Addition, Block No. 150, and surrounding streets.

And the said guardian will receive offers or bids therefor from this date to said 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock noon at the place aforesaid.

JOHANNA MEYER, Guardian of the Estate
June 10, 1865.-5t of Louisa Conrad Meyer, a minor.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY BALL

OF THE

"Sherman Guard."

TO BE GIVEN

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 16, 1865.

HONORARY COMMITTEE.

Gov. F. F. Low,
Hon. C. Cole,
Hon. D. C. McRuer,
Brig. Gen. J. Hewston, Jr.,
Major Andrews,
Col. F. G. E. Tittel,
Col. C. L. Taylor,
R. G. Sneath,
H. M. Newhall,
Samuel Brannan,
D. Scannell,
Maj. Gen. Irwin McDowell,
Brig. Gen. George Wright,
Col. Joseph Wood,
Col. J. W. McKouzie,
Col. M. C. Smith,
Col. A. J. Jackson,
William Sherman,
William Shew,
J. M. Johnson,
William G. Badger,
Col. Charles James.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

Captain S. Barker,
Lieut. J. D. Bartlett,
Serg't F. Abell,
Lieut. S. A. Rounds,
Serg't F. Kennedy,
W. A. Stuart.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Capt. S. Barker,
Serg't F. Kennedy,
W. J. Newton,
Lieut. A. T. Ruthranff,
Serg't F. A. Hoogs,
C. P. LeBreton.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

Lieut. J. D. Bartlett,
Serg't F. Abell,
Serg't F. Kennedy,
John J. Mountain,
John Pennycook.

Tickets, $2. To be had of members, or at the door. Music by Sander's Full Band, fifteen pieces. my27

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent. including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7-30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent. per day on a $50 note.
Two cents " $100 "
Ten " $500 "
20 " $1,000 "
$1 " $5,000 "

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,

Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.
March 25, 1865. ap29 3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency. JAY COOKE,
my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use
For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN is published by A. A. Stickney, John Collier, and J. P. Bogardus.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No. 4
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 17, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES:

Ecce Iterum Crispina.—By "Ante-diluvian."
A Homo of Taste.—By "Iris."
Answers to Correspondents.—By "Mark Twain."
On the Decay of Professional Begging.—By "Bret."
Squibs from the Interior Press.
Letter from Nevada.—By "Robin Hood."
A Courier Outwitted.

POETRY:

At Anchor.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.
The Broken Pitcher—A Spanish Ballad.
The Lighhouse.
Baby is King.

EDITORIALS:

Our Military Weaknesses.
"Anselmo" and his Reviewers.
Musical Matters.
Editorial Paragraphs.

THEATRICAL TALK:

The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:

Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Chapter XXXI.

NEW BOOKS:

A Review of Recent Publications.

MISCELLANY:

Interesting Selected Articles.

AT ANCHOR.

A SAILOR by the green home-shore,
While seas are ebbing from his view,
Doth all his early joys renew:
He sings the songs he sang of yore;

He spies his little cot, he smiles
With a full joy ne'er felt before;
He holds that one bare prospect more
Than all the Summer of the isles.

The quiet home is his; the trees
Sprang from the seeds his grandsires laid
Among the mold; within the glade
The myrtles rustle in the breeze,

Above a treasured little grave,
His early loss, his first deep woe;
Not any land that he may know
Beyond the purple of the wave

Hath such a jewel in its breast,
He loves each rock and stream and dell;
'Tis here he only cares to dwell,
'Tis here he ever longs to rest.

This is his home of joy and ease;
And better is the myrtle tomb
Than all the heavy dusks that gloom
The groves of spice beyond the seas.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"WE that have free souls, it touches us not."

HAMLET—Act III., Scene 2.

THERE are many people who would do almost anything to get their names in print. We read in history of a young man who burnt down a heathen meeting-house on purpose to get his name in the newspapers. A lesser deed than that, now-a-days will accomplish that desirable end. The following paragraph has, we suppose, appeared in every newspaper in the United States, and will probably be translated into all the languages spoken in the civilized portions of the globe:

"George Dunning, aged seventy-five years, died in London on Good Friday, from the effects of eating fourteen hot cross-buns for breakfast."

Fortunate George Dunning! Why didn't that Ephesian youth eat fourteen hot cross-buns for breakfast instead of burning down a temple? We hope that the notoriety which George Dunning has acquired by his remarkable death, will not lead other old men of seventy-five years of age, to commit suicide with hot cross-buns. His death having been so extensively published, would it not be worth the while of some enterprising individual to publish "the life of George Dunning, who died from the effects of eating fourteen hot-cross buns for breakfast?" Such is fame!

SOME one talks of its being likely to put a man out of temper to open his wife's jewel-box, and find a lock of a strange gentleman's hair done up as a keepsake. We think it serves him right, for not respecting the lock of the box; the wife would be sure to lock it if it contained such a locket as the one described.

THE following telegram was received during the week:

WASHINGTON, May 31st.

"The Government has under advisement the question of colonizing all the Indian tribes between Minnesota and the Rocky Mountains in a reservation somewhere on the northern border of Montana and Dacotah, with the British possessions adjacent as an unlimited hunting ground."

Now, we call that a pretty sharp trick of Uncle Sam's. What will John Bull have to say to it? Won't it be an infringement of his game laws? He will make every one of those Indians take out a shooting license. This is almost as bad as John Bull's colonizing the wild men of the South in Canada, with the United States possessions adjacent as an unlimited hunting ground; the raids made upon the game of the British possessions will not, however, be quite as destructive as the raid upon the banks of St. Albans,

---

THE editor of the Dramatic Chronicle is shocked at an "awkward blunder" in last week's CALIFORNIAN. This "blunder" is the use of the expression, "We should have liked to have witnessed." We cannot confess that we made any blunder, as we used the words which most fitly expressed the meaning we wished to convey. To have said "We should like to have witnessed" would imply that the fact of having witnessed the event referred to would cause us present pleasure, whereas our meaning was, that had we witnessed such an event we should have experienced pleasure at that time; in fact, we should have liked, that is, should have been pleased to have witnessed the occurrence specified. It is useless for our dramatic friend to smell round our "mouse-trap" for an ungrammatical mouse. If he cannot parse that sentence, the fault lies in him.

THE daily press have, in the most unkind manner, made fun of the barber and the tailor who went out to fight a duel one day this week. The barber in the most unpolite manner alluded to a "goose." Has not the profession of tailor been exalted? Yea, doth not the goose hang high, even in the White House at Washington! A tailor now wields shears which are as fatal as those of Atropos. These bloodthirsty reporters seem actually disappointed that the tailor's thread of life was not snipped short by a bullet, and regret that the barber, by a close shave, escaped unhurt. We think that a tailor has no right to engage in breaches of the peace; rather should he mend such breaches—or any other breeches. The barber showed that he had no fear of dying—why should he have? he dyes daily. We are glad that no lives were lost, and hope that these two bloodthirsty individuals are satisfied with having made fools of themselves for the benefit of a lot of newspaper reporters in want of an "item."

THE Call says "the United States Consul at Aspinwall, has been in the habit of charging all passengers from this city to New York, one dollar each for vising their passports." What is vising a passport? We never heard of such an operation being performed before we saw it referred to in the Call; that paper goes on to say "his vise is unnecessary." We rather suspect the Call means viséing passports, and that his visé is unnecessary. When there is a Webster's dictionary in a newspaper office, an "editor" should not be too proud to use it, and thus avoid making such absurd blunders.

MR. GREEN, at a "Mexican Sympathy Meeting" held in Sacramento, called Maximilian "this imp of the house of Hapsburg." How very improper! We hope Mr. Green only used the term as an abbreviation of "imperator."

THE N. Y. Commercial says it has been decided that "soldiers retain their arms used in battle." Alas! This does not refer to all. Many who used their arms nobly in battle do not retain them.

THE Sacramento Union is horrified at the fact that the London Owl discontinued publication for a fortnight, in the month of April, the editors going out of town during the dull season. It says: "They are in the habit of doing this sort of thing regularly, and people admire the presumption of it and buy the paper—price sixpence." The fact of the matter is, that the Owl is in the habit of appearing irregularly; when parliament is prorouged, the Owl goes into its ivy bush. It is a very independent publication; the proprietors are young swells who do not care much whether people buy it or not, and those who want it have to pay for it, it being just double the price of Punch. The reason people buy it is that it publishes information respecting foreign affairs ahead of any other paper, its proprietors being on the inside. We do not know whether Lord Russell is one of the proprietors or not, but he certainly must favor it more than the rest of the London press, or it could not enjoy its present facilities for picking up the whispers of Downing street. If it were asked to what it owed its success, it would cry "to wit, to wit," but this is not the case, for its attempts at wit are generally weak; therefore as it is not "to wit," "to who" is it owing. We rather imagine that the head of the Foreign Office is the person to whom it owes its existence.

A MOST remarkable cure has been made by Dr. Grant in the case of an old gentleman of the name of Uncle Samuel, who was troubled with a monstrous tapeworm which many distinguished French and English physicians prophesied would assuredly be the death of him. The following gratifying testimonial explains itself: "This is to certify that Dr. Ulysses S. Grant expelled a tapeworm from me measuring over five hundred feet, and containing forty-two thousand joints, with only one dose of medicine. I must also remark that I had been doctoring with the most eminent physicians of the United States, George B. McClellan, Burnside and others, without benefit for the last four years. UNCLE SAM."

"The Medical Profession, and the public in general, are respectfully invited to call at my office in Washington, at office hours, to see said tapeworm and his head for themselves, free of charges. Uncle Samuel's constitution has suffered but little, and he is now, under the treatment of Dr. Andrew Johnson to whom I have turned him over rapidly recovering from the effects of the operation. I may very possibly undertake a case almost as severe as the above, in a short time, namely, that of a most interesting young lady, Miss Mexico, who is reduced to a most distressing state of weakness by the presence of a monstrous parasite from which she has begged to be relieved by Uncle Samuel. If that gentleman can spare me I have no doubt that I shall effect as perfect a cure in the case of Miss Mexico, as in his own.

ULYSSES S. GRANT."

IT appears from the following advertisement, which appeared in the Bulletin one day this week, that such is the wonderful character of the soil of California that there can be made here a wine which we hitherto had to import:

WANTED—A situation for a man to make Madeira Wine.

Of course this beautiful wine will not be made dearer in San Francisco than before, but will be cheaper. It is evident that the genius who wishes a situation does not care about its being Madeira, but intends to manufacture Maderia wine in this city. There is no end to the resources of California; if oil is discovered in large quantities, as no doubt it will be, we shall be able to make our own French brandy. We believe the coal found at Mount Diablo has never yet been thoroughly tested with a view to making French brandy out of it. We understand that large tracts of land across the bay have this year been planted with gooseberry bushes for the purpose of supplying this market with a superior article of Veave Clicquot at a remarkable price. A very fine Bourbon whisky can be manufactured out of Bodega potatoes. We confidently look forward to the time when we can produce all the luxuries as well as the necessaries of life "right here," instead of paying out our gold to a pack of foreigners who hate us because we are smarter than they are. Soon may the time arrive when we shall get our French brandy from Mount Diablo, our Veave Clicquot and Heidsick from Oakland, our Havana cigars from Dutch Flat, our Madeira from San José, and our Amontillado from Los Angeles.

WE notice an announcement that "Ole Bull and Leo Lion the pianist, have recently created a furore in Dresden." The poets tell us that music can tame savage beasts. We suppose, therefore, that this musical Bull and harmonious Lion are peaceable animals, and are never tempted to rush upon their audience and devour a few, raw. Bars of music have sufficient strength to restrain them. This Bull is a violinist, and never, as might be supposed, performs a horn solo. There is nothing remarkable in the fact that Leo, the lion, should create few roars; no doubt he is well treated, or his roars would be terrific, and the sounds he would produce rather fortissimo than piano. We hope the Lion and the Bull will continue to play together amicably, and that this musical lion may always find a den as much to his liking as Dres-den.

THE editor of the Bulletin has had a visit from John Gilroy after whom the town of Gilroy, Santa Clara county, is named, and gives some interesting particulars concerning him. His real name it appears, is John Cameron, and he is a Scotchman. The Bulletin informs us that: "He had aants who spoke only Gaelic. He would hardly recognize the old Highland haants and communities if he were to visit them now." We wonder whether Scotchmen put their h's where they are not wanted, and whether the "old highland h'aants," which the Bulletin says he would not recognize, are the "h'aunts who spoke only Gaelic."

IT is a remarkable fact that few of the lower animals are in the habit of taking medicine. Shakspeare talked of throwing physic to the dogs, because he knew that dogs were in the habit of taking medicine in the shape of grass. It is not probable that many birds are in the habit of physicing themselves, but it is well known that a goose feels quite uncomfortable if it is deprived of its (s)quills.

IF the Call is to be believed, the guests invited to participate in the target excursion of the Police Guard with a few exceptions, took advantage of the fact that the policemen were all engaged at playing soldiers, and consequently were relieved for the time from their civil duties, to get horribly drunk. No arrests were made.

TREM.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

By the author of "Aurora Floyd," "Three Times Dead," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Doctor's Wife," "The Outcasts," etc.

SUMMARY OF "ONLY A CLOD."—The subscription list of THE CALIFORNIAN having greatly increased since the period when we commenced publishing Miss Braddon's new novel, "Only a Clod," we give in the present number a summary of the story as far as published, for the benefit of the more recent subscribers to our paper.

ENSIGN HARCOURT LOWTHER, a gentleman of culture, and Francis Tredethlyn, the hero, (the son of a Cornish farmer,) a soldier in the same regiment, who is detailed as a confidential servant to Ensign Lowther, have been stationed in Van Diemen's Land for five years. In boyhood Tredethlyn had fallen in love with his rich uncle's only child, "cousin Susy," and a secret engagement had taken place between them, which was afterwards broken off, and he enlisted. Although he had written frequently to his cousin he had received no response or any intelligence from home, until the story opens with the reception of information of the death of his miserly uncle and his inheritance of thirty thousand pounds a year. He departs for England to take possession of his inheritance.

Upon his arrival in England, his first action is a vain attempt to find his cousin Susan, who had been forbidden her father's house in a moment of stormy passion, to divide his fortune with her. His monied influence gains him an introduction into the family and social circle of Lionel Hillary, an apparently wealthy merchant, whose family consists of his only daughter, Maude, and her friend and companion, Miss Julia Desmond, both cultivated and prepossessing young ladies. Tredethlyn soon becomes enamored with Maude, though the consciousness of his social inferiority causes him to hide his passion and endeavor to subdue it. Dazzled and flattered by his new position, he is made an easy victim to the designs of Miss Desmond, who sees in his fortune an incentive to the exertion of all her arts with a view to a matrimonial alliance that will at once free her from her situation of dependency, and give her wealth and position. An avowal and declaration is forced from Tredethlyn at a designed interview, by the artful Miss Desmond, and they are engaged.

A panic now occurs in the mercantile affairs of Lionel Hillary, and ruin stares him in the face. His daughter, noticing his changed manners and sleepless nights, watches him, and prevents him from committing suicide; winning from him the avowal that twenty thousand pounds are immediately required to save him from failure, disgrace and poverty. She seeks the frank, good-hearted Tredethlyn, and, in an impassioned manner, appeals to him to rescue her father from his situation. This interview brings forth an equally impassioned declaration from Tredethlyn of his love for her, of his conscious unworthiness, and his willingness to bestow the whole of his fortune for her benefit, if necessary.

Miss Hillary is surprised, shocked and offended by this avowal, and is about retiring in anger, when Miss Desmond, who has overheard enough to obtain a clew to the purport of the interview, enters; charges Maude with mercenary motives in supplanting her, and Tredethlyn with infidelity, and declares all is cancelled between him and herself. Miss Desmond leaves the house early next morning without an explanation. Tredethlyn attempts an apology to Maude, who refuses to listen to him. He, disgusted by the troubles his fortune and new position have environed him with, determines to estrange himself from them and fly to London. The next day twenty thousand pounds are placed to the credit of Lionel Hillary at his banker's, from an anonymous source. The merchant is all gratitude; points to Tredethlyn as his benefactor, and speaks of him in the warmest terms to his daughter.

Tredethlyn seeks again in vain for his cousin Susan, though he learns she has been entrapped into a mock marriage by a villain, who deserted her, and that she then fled to London. Subsequently new meshes are thrown around our hero by the designing Lionel Hillary; ten thousand pounds more are obtained from him, and he is admitted a silent partner in the house of Hillary & Co. Maude, who was betrothed to Ensign Harcourt Lowther—Tredethlyn's old master—before he left England, is commanded by her father to break off all correspondence with him and to look with favor upon an alliance with Tredethlyn. A chance encounter occurs, and Maude's amiability paves the way for a new hope and a new declaration. Acceptance and marriage speedily follow.

Just previous to the marriage, Ensign Harcourt Lowther returns from Van Diemen's Land, and seeks an interview with Maude, only to learn from her own lips the story of her forced engagement. Learning the name of the affianced, he tells her of the old relation of master and man, and makes Maude pledge him not to reveal to Tredethlyn the secret of their earlier love and engagement. Nettled and stung by his jealousy and pride, he plans a cultured and villainous revenge. After the marriage occurs and Tredethlyn and wife have become engrafted into the fashionable circles of London, he seeks him out and installs himself into the graces of the young Cornishman, and becomes his inseperable companion and mentor, leading him gradually into (for Tredethlyn) the dangerous confines of vice and dissipation and widening more and more the gulf between him and Maude, who had become the "sensation," the leading fashionable wife of London, whose parties, receptions and dinners were notable for their extravagance.

Maude one day encountered Miss Julia Desmond, who is occupying the position of governess, seeks her forgiveness and tenders her a home. Julia, still rankling with jealous passion, refuses the offer, except as a hired companion. Maude humors her foible, but insists on her promising to come as a "friend." Envy and jealousy urging Julia to seek a proper opportunity to become avenged, she dissembles and accepts.

Tredethlyn, sickened by the constant round of gay and dissipated life, is withdrawn from the dangerous highways by the discovery of his cousin, whom he encounters one night as a supernumerary of one of the London theatres. He seeks an interview, with the determination of bestowing on her a portion of that fortune, which his innate convictions have always told him should have been hers.

Harcourt Lowther continues his daily visits to the house of Tredethlyn, and is constantly poisoning the wife's mind by noting the husband's absence and inventing excuses for him with the mock morality of a "Joseph Surface. Tredethlyn has a secret which calls him frequently from town during the day, which excites Lowther's curiosity, but his efforts to discover it are fruitless. The greater portion of Tredethlyn's time, however, is spent in the old way, with cards, at the race-track, and in dissipation, under Lowther's guidance.

Roderick Lowther, the elder brother of Harcourt Lowther, and much like him in appearance and character, prepossessing, cool, calculating and unscrupulous—a member of the corps diplomatique at Belgium—returns to England on a three months' leave of absence, and becomes domiciled with Harcourt. He announces his intention of seeking a good pecuniary match and marrying to secure the approval of an old maiden aunt, whose fortune he expects to inherit. He soon fathoms his brother's schemes, promises his assistance in their furtherance, and asks Harcourt to aid his own. He is introduced into the house of Mrs. Tredethlyn, and there meets Miss Grunderson, a young lady of ordinary appearance and intellect, but an heiress.

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE DIPLOMATIST'S POLICY.

THAT ponderous Mr. Grunderson, who plunged heavily down upon Maude's central ottoman, a miraculous combination of upholstery and floriculture—that shining bald-headed Mr. Grunderson, who sat placidly grinning at the company, and addressed his hostess as "Mum," had begun life as a market gardener; and, had Mrs. Tredethlyn been born some twenty years earlier, would have been proud to supply her with azaleas and camellias for the decoration of the ottoman upon which he was now sitting. The march of progress, and the accompanying march of bricks and mortar, had driven before them the cabbages and strawberry beds, the cucumber frames and young plantations of evergreens, by the cultivation of which Mr. Grunderson and his forefathers had lived comfortably upon one o'clock dinners of fat bacon and indigestible dumplings, with occasional varieties of butchers' meat, thinking themselves passing rich when their ledgers showed a profit of two or three hundred pounds at the end of the year.

The march of civilization, or rather the march of the myrmidons of that unreasoning despot, that impalpable ruler whom women call fashion, always pushing westward, had contrived to push Mr. Grunderson's gardens off the face of the earth, and in so doing had set a Pactolus flowing steadily into Mr. Grunderson's pocket. The wealth poured in upon him with a rapidity which was like nothing but a fairy tale. That heroic Jack of the nursery story—who seems to have had no surname—never looked in more amazement on the bean-stalk that shot into the very skies in a single night, than the honest market gardener looked at the stuccoed district which had arisen, seven or eight stories and a campanello tower high, on the fields where he remembered execrating the slugs on dewy mornings a few years before. Where a prairie of bright red stocks had perfumed all the summer air with spicy odors, a square of stately mansions stared grimly at each other, and prime ministers' carriages rolled with meteor lamps through the midnight darkness. Where ragged children and gaunt sunburnt women in blucher boots, and with indescribable bonnets balanced on their freckled noses, had weeded strawberry beds for a pitiful sixpence a day, duchesses trailed their silken trains, and wearied of the rolling hours after the approved manner of their kind in the pages of the poets and romancers. The transformation was as perfect as it had been rapid; and instead of the cabbages and cabbage roses, the cucumber frames and hothouse flowers of his youth and early manhood, Mr. Grunderson found himself, at fifty years of age, proprietor of ground-rents that made him a millionaire. He had only one child, a daughter, who had been educated for some fifty pounds a year, at a seminary for young ladies, in which she had been cruelly snubbed on account of her father's cabbages, and who was now determined to revenge herself on the companions of her blighted youth by the splendor of her womanhood. Led by this young lady, who was blessed with an energetic temperament and imperturbable good humor, Mr. Grunderson found himself, always more or less independently of his own agency, going through the complete formula of fashionable life, according to his daughter Rosa's notion of that formula; which notion was extremely variable, and took its color from the last acquaintance to whom the lively heiress was pleased to attach herself.

The very last just now happened to be Maude Tredethlyn, about whom Rosa was ready to go off into raptures at any moment, and whom she always spoke of as "a dear," "a love," or "a darling." But there was a warm womanly heart beating under Rosa's fine dresses, and her raptures had more meaning in them than the raptures of enthusiastic young ladies are apt to have. She attached herself so affectionately to Maude that Mrs. Tredethlyn was fain to forget, or at any rate, to forgive, the occasional lapses in her grammar, the unpleasant warmth of her fat little hands, which always came flopping down on the hands of her companion when she was enthusiastic, and the shadow of vulgarity which is so apt to accompany the sunshine of low-born liveliness.

Harcourt Lowther took an early opportunity to inform his elder brother that the young lady in pink arcophane was an heiress, and an heiress well worthy the cultivation of any enterprising young diplomatist. Roderick was not slow to take the hint, but he was a great deal too much a diplomatist to attempt any obvious angling for this rich prize. He exerted all his powers of fascination in order to make himself agreeable to Mrs. Tredethlyn, and he did not address so much as one syllable of the most commonplace civility to the market gardener's daughter; the consequence of which little manœuvre was, that as Rosa was sitting next to Maude all the evening, she listened open-mouthed to every word he uttered, and when she departed in her papa's three hundred guinea chariot—the market gardener had insisted upon possessing the traditional lemon-colored chariot with hammer-cloth, and powdered retainers, which he had beheld and admired in his boyhood—she carried Roderick Lowther's image away with her.

It must be acknowledged, however, that it was no uncommon occurrence for Miss Grunderson to carry the image of some tolerably good-looking and passably well-mannered young man away from any festal gathering at which she happened to find herself. The good-humored Rosa had a habit of falling desperately in love with any eligible person whom she encountered either in public or private life, who did anything to make himself notorious, or wore his hair long enough to be entitled a Being. A long list of Beings had occupied that sentimental caravansary which Miss Grunderson called her heart. She had been in love with all the poets, from the Laureate to Mr. Tupper; with all the novelists, from the great Sir Edward to the newest fledged of Mr. Mudie's popularities; and I fear she often fell in love with angels unawares in the shape of feminine romancers who were pleased to hide their gentle sex under masculine nomenclature. She had been in love—fathoms deep—with Lord Palmerston, Signor Mario, Sir Edwin Landseer, and Mr. Charles Mathews. She was wont to keep the three hundred guinea chariot waiting in Pall Mall for an hour at a stretch, while she hunted Mr. Graves and his assistants for the last new portrait of her last new idol: and her room was like a good Catholic's chapel hung with the engraved effigies of an army of saints.

It was a very pure flame which burnt before so many shrines, and a very harmless one: and perhaps if Mr Lowther the elder had known Rosa Grunderson's little idiosyncrasies, he would not have felt quite so complacently triumphant in the consciousness that her round grey eyes had been fixed upon him all the evening with the fond gaze of hero worship. Harcourt contrived to swell this triumph by artful little brotherly compliments as the two young men walked Londonwards, under the starlit summer sky, smoking their regalias, and talking as men about town do talk, under those sublime stars. Sentimental Rosa was gazing at those luminous unknown worlds from the covert of the pinkest curtains in Stuccoville, and thinking about Him! Rosa's last adoration was always mysteriously alluded to under cover of a personal pronoun. Her admiration for Roderick Lowther was multiplied a hundredfold by the young diplomatist's disregard of her. Poor Rosa had been accustomed to be made the object of what, in the argotic parlance of her age, she called "a dead set," on account of her papa's ground-rents; and she was inclined to imagine Mr. Lowther the noblest and most disinterested of mankind, because he did not commence this "dead set" immediately after being introduced to her.

"I wonder whether he knows that I'm the Miss Grunderson?" she thought, as she looked up at those romantic stars so familiar to her in her Byron. "Of course he does, though. 'Pa is so different from the rest of society, that people always know there's some reason for his being where he is, and they're not very long guessing that the reason is money. Will anybody ever want to marry me for my own sake, I wonder? Ah, how I wish the Marquis of Westminster would fall in love with me! He couldn't want 'pa's ground-rents."

Thus the maiden mused in her bower, while Roderick Lowther, encouraged by his junior, talked complacently of his conquest.

"She's the simplest little thing in Christendom," he said, "simpler than—anybody I ever met in life. The disinterested game is the dodge in that quarter, dear boy. Do you remember how Frederic Soulié's Lion treats the little shop keeper's daughter? First with the elegant devotion of a fashionable Romeo, then with the brusquerie of a Benedict or a Petruchio. Lise Laloine died under the treatment, by-the-by, but I don't think the plump Rosa is made of quite such etherial stuff. La Petite is sentimental, and wants to be loved for herself alone; 'Oh, wert thou in the cauld blast!' 'And long he mourned, the Lord of Burleigh,' and that sort of thing. She shall have it; the darling innocent! Tennyson and Owen Meredith by the kilo., disinterested devotion by the bushel. But oh, my Harcourt, do not lure your loving brother into the quagmire of delusive wealth. Make sure that our simple-looking Grunderson does not hide the cloven hoof of insolvency under the golden fleece in which he drapes himself; those simple-looking men generally fail for half a million. I like your Mrs. Tredethlyn, by-the-by; she is very pretty and very elegant; but to be candid, my dear Harcourt—a brother ought to be candid, you know, even at the risk of being unpleasant—I fancy there is more in the husband than you imagine. A man with such a chest must have some solidity in his composition. If I am anything of a physiologist, it is not in that man's organization to be made a fool of. Ah, I see you don't care to talk about it; you like to keep your own secrets, and play your own game without backers or advisers. So be it. For myself, I am of an open disposition; I like to talk of my own affairs when they go smoothly, and to drop them when they take the crooked course. I don't suppose Napoleon the First was very fond of talking about Waterloo. He forgot that little skirmish, you may depend, and talked of Arcola and Lodi, the Pyramids, Austerlitz, Wagram, and Auerstadt. I dare say, Mr. Merry holds his tongue about those two thousand-guinea colts that didn't win the Derby. People are not eloquent about their failures. I shall look up my old aunt early to-morrow morning; and after that, if you have any excuse for calling on Mrs. Tredethlyn, I shall be glad to accompany you. Unless I am very much at fault in feminine psychology, Miss Grunderson will drop in upon her friend to discuss my bearish behavior, on the earliest opportunity. Nothing impresses a sentimental young person so favorably as downright rudeness. The heroine in a lady's novel always adores the man who snubs her.

Thus argued the diplomatist by profession, strolling Strandwards in the starlight; while the diplomatist by organization listened quietly, and thought his own thoughts as regards this grand conquest of which his kinsman was so proud. Harcourt Lowther was not apt to resent the insolent insouciance, the calm assurance of superiority with which his senior treated him and had treated him from that early boyhood in which the lads had played together at Eton. But the wrongs that rankle deeply in a man's breast are sometimes those which he endures silently. Harcourt believed that his own prospects had been sacrificed to the advancement of Roderick; and he was not sorry when the elder son went wild and turned his back as coolly upon his father as if he had never been the pampered favorite of weak love, the all-absorbing drain upon a limited income. In every way Roderick had fared better than his brother. Lowther Hall, surrounded by park and farm-lands that constituted an estate of some three hundred acres, might not be worth very much to a man of large ideas and lofty aspirations; but whatever it was worth, it was tightly entailed upon the heir of the Lowthers, and not so much as a gamekeeper's cottage or a scrap of meadow-land was reserved for the luckless junior. Mrs. Lowther had been mistress of a small fortune, but that had been spent upon the education of the two young men, Harcourt in this matter, as in all others, going to the wall; for his university career had been cut short in order that his brother's debts might be paid, and that extravagant gentleman enabled to face the bigwigs of his college without fear of clamorous creditors, and read at leisure for a degree which he was too lazy to succeed in getting. After this, Harcourt's prospects had again been sacrificed; and the young barrister, unable to live at the bar, had been fain to accept an ensign's commission, while Roderick, pushed into the diplomatic world by a desperate effort of family interest, exhibited his handsome face at the Prussian Court, and squandered every farthing that he could screw out of his father's slender purse. When the purse had become as empty as it well could become, there had been the usual remonstrances, the usual bad feeling which is likely to arise between an utterly selfish and unprincipled young man and the father who is no longer able to be of any use to him, and who takes the liberty of resenting the extravagance which has involved his later life in difficulties.

Beyond the advantages obtained from his father's partiality, Roderick Lowther had been the favorite of a maiden aunt of miserly habits and independent fortune, who had condescended to give him her name at the baptismal font, and who had never bestowed upon him anything else—except, indeed, a neat cloth-bound copy of The Dairyman's Daughter, presented to the lad upon a birthday, and promptly disposed of at a rag and bone shop in the High Street of Harrow for the small sum of fourpence. But although Miss Dorothea Burnett had not been very liberal in her donations to her favorite nephew during her lifetime, it was supposed that, after her departure from this world, the young man would reap the reward of occasional dutifully-worded letters and affected deference to her wishes, and that the reward would be a very substantial one; for Miss Burnett had contrived to swell her own little fortune by many stray windfalls in the way of legacies from relatives, whose regard her busy married sister, Mrs. Lowther, had neglected to cultivate. Beyond this the maiden lady had bought small but profitable tenements and had dabbled a little in shares, and had watched her small investments with an intelligence, and nursed them with a tenderness, which her stockbroker had admiringly declared to be a credit to the sex she adorned by her commercial acumen.

So Roderick Lowther, finding his younger brother on the field, was alarmed by the idea that he might have been undermined in this direction, and was by no means inclined to lose any time before presenting himself to his spinster aunt. He brushed and curled his amber whiskers with more than usual circumspection, therefore, on the morning after the diner at Mrs. Tredethlyn's: and walking through Covent Garden, on his way to Miss Burnett's Bloomsbury heritage, he expended sixpence on a hothouse flower to put in the button-hole of the dark blue coat which he wore under a flimsy outer garment of pale gray. He had dressed himself very carefully, for he knew that, in spite of the maiden lady's lectures on the subject of prudence, her feminine eye was fascinated by the elegant frivolities which she affected to disapprove.

Miss Burnett occupied a very big house in the dullest street in Bloomsbury, a dismal cul de sac, in which there was almost always an elderly organ-grinder playing "Home, sweet, sweet Home," or the "Old Hundredth," with a little group of squallid children gathered round him. The big house smelt like a tomb, and was almost as rarely opened as if it had been one; for the butcher boy who brought Miss Burnett's mutton-chop, or the half-pound of steak, or three-quarters of liver, upon which Miss Burnett's servant was wont to make her repast, handed his wares across the area gate, and exchanged no word of comment with the grim damsel who received them, knowing very well that the lady of the house sat at her favorite window in the front parlor, with her open Bible before her, and with a watchful eye upon the outward world, which some sentimental Christians might have thought scarcely consistent with so much piety.

The grim damsel who admitted Roderick Lowther to Miss Burnett's darksome abode relaxed her ordinary sternness of visage into something faintly resembling a smile as she recognized her mistress's nephew.

"Your aunt has been very ill since you were last here, Mr. Lowther," the woman said, in answer to Roderick's inquiry. "She was very bad with her asthma all the Winter, but the warm Spring weather brought her round again."

"Yes," thought the young man, "the Spring weather always does bring her round, and always will, I suppose, till I am dead and in my grave."

He was ushered into the dining-room while this irreverent idea was in his mind, and the next minute he was seated opposite to his aunt, inquiring tenderly about her asthma. The dining-room was very dismal. There was more mahogany furniture and brown damask than is compatible with the smallest ray of cheerfulness, and the walls were rendered ghastly by some hideous preparations painted in asphaltum, and exhibiting gigantic cracks that looked like gory, yawning wounds—preparations which, on account of their smoky nature and revolting choice of subject, were supposed to be the work of the old masters.

"I am very glad to see you, my dear Roderick," said Miss Burnett, gravely; "as glad as I can be about anything in this carnal life," added the old lady, whose spirits had been revived that morning by a rise of one and a quarter per cent in the value of her pet investment. "But we are taught not to rejoice, Roderick, except in that which———Is that a hothouse flower, my dear?" inquired Miss Burnett, looking sharply at the myosotis in her nephew's button-hole. "Dear, dear, what an extravagant age it is! You are looking very well, my dear Roderick. I dare say you are what a worldly-minded person would call very handsome; but we must try to remember that we are all worms," murmured the old lady, with a doleful sigh; for she took the gloomy view of things which is so common to some people who read that gospel which is all life and color and brightness, full of the happy faces of merry-makers at a bridal festival, and little children gathering round a favorite teacher's knees, radiant with sudden rejoicings in mourning households, the dead restored to smile upon the living. There is something strange in the dull gray tint which some worshippers are able to infuse into a story that a painter can hardly read without feeling the tropical heat of a meridian sun, the perfume of a thousand lilies, the spicy odors of the feathery palms, and the free dash of Galilee's blue waves about the prow of a fisherman's frail bark, sailing gaily under an Eastern sky. Surely the richness of color with which the Catholic church invests the Christian faith is, after all, only a natural attribute of a religion which arose amidst the splendor and beauty of the Holy Land.

"I hope, my dear Roderick," said the maiden lady very solemnly, "that, while absent in those idolatrous foreign lands you kept the promise which you gave me before leaving England."

"My dear aunt," murmured the young man, who had quite forgotten having made any promise whatever to his pious relative, and was painfully mystified by this address, "I assure you that I—"

He would have broken down here, but the lady came to his rescue.

"Don't prevaricate, Roderick," she exclaimed, sternly. "Did you, or did you not, enter a Roman Catholic place of worship during your sojourn amongst the high priests of Baal? Did you, or did you not, sit under one of those idolatrous worshippers of stocks and stones? And oh, that I should live to see candlesticks on the altar of a church in this very neighborhood!" cried Miss Burnett, with a sudden burst of indignation; "and to hear snuffling, which I at first attributed to a cold in the head, but afterwards ascertained to be the wicked workings of Rome.

The staunch Dorothea paused for a few moments to recover her indignation, and then tackled her nephew once more.

"You promised me, before going to Belgium, that you would not, however tempted, enter a Roman Catholic place of worship," she said.

"And I did not, my dear aunt," answered Roderick, promptly. "I give you my word of honor as a gentleman."

"Nor any other place of worship," thought the heir, as his aunt nodded approvingly.

And then there was a little more talk, chiefly taking the form of a catechism, which Mr. Lowther went through triumphantly, since his answers to the old lady's inquiries were shaped in accordance with his knowledge of what was likely to please his aunt, rather than with any reference to actual fact. But a man must do a good many mean things when he devotes himself to the cultivation of a narrow-minded maiden aunt, for the chance of inheriting small tenements and first preference bonds in flourishing railway companies. Roderick Lowther breathed a long sigh of relief when he left the house that smelt like a tomb behind him, after drinking a glass of his aunt's dry sherry, which act of devotion was in itself no small penance.

He hailed a hansom as soon as he was safely beyond ken of the observant spinster, and was rattled back to his brother's lodgings, where he found Harcourt pondering moodily over the Times newspaper and whence the same hansom drove the two Antipholi to Stuccoville.

Mr. Tredethlyn was out, but Mrs. Tredethlyn was at home. Harcourt went into his friend's study to write a note, while Roderick followed a servant to the drawing-rooms, in the smallest and cosiest of which three gorgeous apartments the diplomatist found Maude and Rosa seated side by side on a low sofa, while proud Julia meditated apart at the window.

"You're the lady I should like to marry," thought Roderick, as he looked at Julia's dark face, which lighted up for a moment with her flashing smile as she bowed to him, and then relapsed into gloom; "there'd be some pleasure in taming you. Who would care to cage a robin? but there would be some glory in subduing the spirit of an eagle."

Thus mused Mr. Lowther, while he murmured some commonplace remark upon the beauty of the summer day, and dropped himself lazily into a seat near Maude Tredethlyn. He was true to his tactics of the night before, and addressed his remarks almost entirely to Maude and Julia. When he did condescend to address the vivacious Rosa, he did so in a manner that was a delicate admixture of the intellectual bearishness of one of poor Miss Brontë's heroes with the lively banter of a Benedick. The result of this policy was triumphant, and the market gardener's daughter plunged deeper and deeper still into her five-and-twentieth hopeless attachment.

While Mr. Lowther the elder was cultivating his own interests in the drawing-room, Mr. Lowther the younger was pacing up and down Francis Tredethlyn's study, in no happy frame of mind. Imagine the feelings of a Mephistopheles who begins to suspect that his victim has slipped away from him. Harcourt was beginning to feel very doubtful as to the firmness of his hold on his pupil and companion.

Francis Tredethlyn's conduct for the last few weeks had quite baffled his friend's penetration. The Cornishman had grown suddenly preoccupied and reserved. He might still be seen in the haunts of the Bohemians, for Mr. Lowther took care that he should not easily extricate himself from the bonds that he had allowed to be twisted about him; but Francis, always unwilling to be led into the scenes where he found no pleasure, was now more unwilling than ever, and Harcourt found it very difficult to play the game he wanted to play without showing his cards. If it had been a mere question of plucking so many feathers from an innocent pigeon, the thing might have been done easily enough, perhaps; but Mr. Lowther evidently wanted something more than his friend's golden plumage. It seemed, indeed, as if he would be satisfied with nothing less than the utter ruin and degradation of Maude Tredethlyn's husband.

To-day, walking up and down the study, whose broad plate-glass window commanded an agreeable view of a stony quadrangle and the roofs and chimneys of a mews, Harcourt thought very despondently of that grand scheme to which he had devoted himself so patiently since his return to England.

"What secret is the fellow hiding from me?" he thought, resentfully; "he refused to dine with me to-day, and he threw over the party I made for Greenwich the day before yesterday. He has made no book for the York Summer, and yet he is less at home than ever. What does it all mean? Can he have gone to the bad in real earnest at last, and without any real help from me? There must be something in it, but what is the something?"

Tired at last of such meditations as these, Harcourt Lowther flung himself into a chair to compose the letter he had talked about writing when he entered the study.

He wrote his note, which was very brief, and the gist of which was to remind Francis of some engagement that would entail the usual champagne drinking, the usual squandering of money for the gratification of the worthless society in which a few innocent pigeons abandon themselves to be plucked without mercy by every species of predatory fowl. After having written this little note, so carefully worded that no print of the fiend's hoof could have been deciphered therein by uninitiated eyes, Harcourt Lowther sat with his elbow on the table, biting the feather of his pen, and ruminating moodily. There were open letters and tradesmen's bills lying about upon Francis Tredethlyn's disorderly writing-table. Mr. Lowther flung aside his pen presently, and amused himself by a careless examination of these documents. Some of the bills were heavy ones, but not so heavy as to make any very serious inroad upon the Cornishman's fortune, and Harcourt tossed them away from him one after the other, uninterested in their details, unconcerned by their sum-totals, until he came to a dead stop all at once at the first line of a document which seemed to him to bear an extraordinary significance.

The document was the bill of a fashionable upholsterer, and the line below the tradesman's name and address ran thus:

"For goods supplied to Francis Tredethlyn, Esq., at Brook Cottage, Petersham, June 20th, 185–;" and then followed a list of the furnitnre for a cottage, the sum-total of which came to little more than three hundred pounds.

"So," muttered Mr. Lowther, "I think I have fallen upon the clue to the mystery. We will go and look at Tredethlyn's furnished cottage."

He wrote the address upon a tablet in his porte-monnaie, and went up stairs to the drawing-room, where he found Roderick intolerably at his ease in the society of the three ladies. There was an arrangement made for a meeting in Maude's roomy box at Covent Garden, to which Mrs. Tredethlyn was fain to invite the affectionate Rosa, who clung to her with peculiar fondness to-day; and then the two gentlemen took their departure, Roderick to look in at the Traveller's and the St. James's, Harcourt to hurry post-haste—or rather hansom cab haste—to the Waterloo terminus, whence he took the train for Richmond.

(To be continued.)

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[All letters for this department should be addressed to Mr. Mark Twain, who has been detailed from the editorial staff to conduct it. Courting Etiquette, Distressed Lovers, of either sex, and Struggling Young Authors, as yet "unbeknown" to Fame, will receive especial attention.]

Moral Statistician.—I don't want any of your statistics. I took your whole batch and lit my pipe with it. I hate your kind of people. You are always ciphering out how much a man's health is injured, and how much his intellect is impaired, and how many pitiful dollars and cents he wastes in the course of ninety-two years' indulgence in the fatal practice of smoking; and in the equally fatal practice of drinking coffee; and in playing billiards occasionally; and in taking a glass of wine at dinner, etc., etc., etc. And you are always figuring out how many women have been burned to death because of the dangerous fashion of wearing expansive hoops, etc., etc., etc. You never see but one side of the question. You are blind to the fact that most old men in America smoke and drink coffee, although, according to your theory, they ought to have died young; and that hearty old Englishmen drink wine and survive it, and portly old Dutchmen both drink and smoke freely, and yet grow older and fatter all the time. And you never try to find out how much solid comfort, relaxation and enjoyment a man derives from smoking in the course of a lifetime, (and which is worth ten times the money he would save by letting it alone,) nor the appalling aggregate of happiness lost in a lifetime by your kind of people from not smoking. Of course you can save money by denying yourself all these little vicious enjoyments for fifty years, but then what can you do with it?—what use can you put it to? Money can't save your infinitesimal soul; all the use that money can be put to is to purchase comfort and enjoyment in this life—therefore, as you are an enemy to comfort and enjoyment, where is the use in accumulating cash? It won't do for you to say that you can use it to better purpose in furnishing a good table, and in charities, and in supporting tract societies, because you know yourself that you pooplo who have no petty vices are never known to give away a cent, and that you stint yourselves so in the matter of food that you are always feeble and hungry. And you never dare to laugh in the daytime for fear some poor wretch, seeing you in a good humor, will try to borrow a dollar of you; and in church you are always down on your knees when the contribution box comes around; and you always pay your debts in greenbacks, and never give the revenue officers a true statement of your income. Now you know all these things yourself, don't you? Very well, then, what is the use of your stringing out your miserable lives to a lean and withered old age? What is the use of your saving money that is so utterly worthless to you? In a word, why don't you go off somewhere and die, and not be always trying to seduce people into becoming as "ornery" and unloveable as you are yourselves, by your ceaseless and villainous "moral statistics?" Now I don't approve of dissipation, and I don't indulge in it, either, but I haven't a particle of confidence in a man who has no redeeming petty vices whatever, and so I don't want to hear from you any more. I think you are the very same man who read me a long lecture, last week, about the degrading vice of smoking cigars, and then came back, in my absence, with your vile, reprehensible fire-proof gloves on, and carried off my beautiful parlor stove.

Simon Wheeler, Sonora.—The following simple and touching remarks and accompanying poem have just come to hand from the rich gold-mining region of Sonora:

To Mr. Mark Twain: The within parson, which I have sot to poetry under the name and style of "He Done His Level Best," was one among the whitest men I ever see, and it ain't every man that knowed him that can find it in his heart to say he's glad the pore cuss is busted and gone home to the States. He was here in an early day, and he was the handyest man about takin holt of anything that come along you most ever see, I judge; he was a cheerful, stirrin cretur, always doin something, and no man can say he ever see him do anything by halvers. Preachin was his natural gait, but he warn't a man to lay back and twidle his thums because there didn't happen to be nothing doin in his own especial line—no sir, he was a man who would meander forth and stir up something for hisself. His last acts was to go his pile on "kings-and," (calklatin to fill, hut which he didn't fill,) when there was a "flush" out agin him, and naterally, you see, he went under. And so, he was cleaned out, as you may say' and he struck the home-trail, cheerful but flat broke. I knowed this talonted man in Arkansaw, and if you would print this humbly tribute to his gorgis abillities, you would greatly obleege his onhappy friend.

Sonora, Southern Mines, June, 1865.

HE DONE HIS LEVEL BEST.

Was he a mining on the flat—
He done it with a zest;
Was he a leading of the choir—
He done his level best.

If he'd a reglar task to do,
He never took no rest;
Or if twas off-and-on—the same—
He done his level best.

If he was preachin on his beat,
He'd tramp from east to west,
And north to south—in cold and heat
He done his level best.

He'd yank a sinner outen (Hades*)
And land him with the blest—
Then snatch a pray'er 'n waltz in again,
And do his level best.

He'd cuss and sing and howl and pray,
And dance and drink and jest,
And lie and steal—all one to him—
He done his level best.

Whate'er this man was set to do,
He done it with a zest:
No matter what his contract was,
He'd do his level best.

Verily, this man was gifted with "gorgis abillities," and it is a happiness to me to embalm the memory of their lustre in these columns. If it were not that the poet crop is unusually large and rank in California this year, I would encourage you to continue writing, Simon—but as it is, perhaps it might be too risky in you to enter against so much opposition.

Inquirer wishes to know which is the best brand of smoking tobacco, and how it is manufactured. The most popular—mind I do not feel at liberty to give an opinion as to the best, and so I simply say the most popular—smoking tobacco is the miraculous conglomerate they call "Killickinick." It is composed of equal parts of tobacco stems, chopped straw, "old soldiers," fine shavings, oak leaves, dog-fennel, corn-shucks, sun-flower petals, outside leaves of the cabbage plant, and any refuse of any description whatever that costs nothing and will burn. After the ingredients are thoroughly mixed together, they are run through a chopping-machine. The mass is then sprinkled with fragrant Scotch snuff, packed into various seductive shapes, labelled "Genuine Killickinick, from the old original manufactory at Richmond," and so'd to consumers at a dollar a pound. The choicest brands contain a double portion of "old soldiers," and sell at a dollar and a half. "Genuine Turkish" tobacco contains a treble quantity of old soldiers, and is worth two or three dollars, according to the amount of service the said "old soldiers" have previously seen. N. B. This article is preferred by the Sultan of Turkey; his picture and autograph are on the label. Take a handful of "Killickinick," crush it as fine as you can, and examine it closely, and you will find that you can make as good an analysis of it as I have done; you must not expect to discover any particles of genuine tobacco by this rough method, however—to do that, it will be necessary to take your specimen to the mint and subject it to a fire-assay. A good article of cheap tobacco is now made of chopped pine-straw and Spanish moss; it contains one "old soldier" to the ton, and is called "Fine Old German Tobacco."

Anna Maria says as follows: "We have got such a nice literary society, O! you can't think! It is made up of members of our church, and we meet and read poetry and sketches and essays, and such things—mostly original—in fact, we have got talent enough among ourselves, without having to borrow reading matter from books and newspapers. We met a few evenings since at a dwelling on Howard, between Seventh and Eighth, and ever so many things were read. It was a little dull, though, until a young gentleman, (who is a member of our church, and oh, so gifted!) unrolled a bundle of manuscript and read such a funny thing about "Love's Bakery," where they prepare young people for matrimony, and about a young man who was engaged to be married, and who had the small-pox, and the erysipelas, and lost one eye and got both legs broken, and one arm, and got the other arm pulled out by a carding-machine, and finally got so damaged that there was scarcely anything of him left for the young lady to marry. You ought to have been there to hear how well he read it, and how they all laughed. We went right to work and nominated him for the Presidency of the Society, and he only lost it by two votes."

Yes, dear, I remember that "such a funny thing" which he read—I wrote it myself, for The Californian, last October. But as he read it well, I forgive him—I can't bear to hear a goodthing read badly. You had better keep an eye on that gifted young man, though, or he will be treating you to Washington's Farewell Address in manuscript the first thing you know—and if that should pass unchallenged, nothing in the world could save him from the Presidency.

* You observe that I have taken the liberty to alter a word for you, Simon—to tone you down a little, as it were. Your language was unnecessarily powerful. M. T.

CHARMING SIMPLICITY.

I once read the following paragraph in a newspaper:

"Powerful Metaphor.—A Western editor, speaking of a quill-driving cotemporary, says 'his intellect is so dense that it would take the augur of common sense longer to bore into it than it would to bore through Mont Blanc with a boiled carrot!'"

I have found that man. And I have found him—not in Stockton—not in Congress—not even in the Board of Education—but in the editorial sanctum of the Gold Hill News. Hear him:

"Byron Busted.—The most fearful exhibition of literary ignorance—to say nothing of literary judgment—that we have had occasion to notice in many a year, is presented by the San Francisco Californian, a professedly literary journal. It is among the 'Answers to Correspondents.' Lord Byron's magnificent and universally admired verses on the Destruction of Sennacherib, are sent from Dutch Flat to the Californian, and are there not recognized, but denounced as a 'lot of doggerel.' Yo gods! Perhaps the editor will try to get out of his 'fix' by saying it was all in fun—that it is a Dutch Nix joke! Read the comments:

"'Melton Mowbray, Dutch Flat.—This correspondent sends us a lot of doggerel, and says it has been regarded as very good in Dutch Flat. I give a specimen verse:

'The Assyrian came down, like a wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold;
And the sheen of his spears shone like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee.'

"'There, that will do. That may be very good Dutch Flat poetry, but it won't do in the metropolis. It is too smooth and blubbery; it reads like buttermilk gurgling from a jug. What the people should have, is something spirited—something like 'Johnny comes marching home.' However, keep on practicing, and you may succeed yet. There is genius in you, but too much blubber.'"

Come, now, friend, about what style of joke would suit your capacity?—because we are anxious to come within the comprehension of all. Try a good old one; for instance: "Jones meets Smith; says Smith, 'I'm glad it's raining, Jones, because it'll start everything out of the ground.' 'Oh, Lord, I hope not,' says Jones, 'because then it would start my first wife out!'" How's that? Does that "bore through?"

Since writing the above, I perceive that the Flag has fallen into the wake of the News, and got sold by the same rather glaring burlesque that disposed of its illustrious predecessor at such an exceedingly cheap rate.

Literary Connoisseur asks "Who is the author of these fine lines?

"Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
For God hath made them so!"

Here is a man gone into ecstasies of admiration over a nursery rhyme! Truly, the wonders of this new position of mine do never cease. The longer I hold it the more I am astonished, and every new applicant for information, who comes to me, leaves me more helplessly stunned than the one who went before him. No, I don't know who wrote those "fine lines," but I expect old Wat's-'is-name, who wrote old Watt's hymns, is the heavy gun you are after. However, it may be a bad guess, and if you find it isn't him, why then lay it on Tupper. That is my usual method. It is awkward to betray ignorance. Therefore, when I come across anything in the poetry line, which is particularly mild and aggravating, I always consider it pretty safe to lay it on Tupper. The policy is subject to accidents, of course, but then it works pretty well, and I hit oftener than I miss. A "connoisseur" should never be in doubt about anything. It is ruinous. I will give you a few hints. Attribute all the royal blank verse, with a martial ring to it, to Shakspeare; all the grand ponderous ditto, with a solemn lustre as of holiness about it, to Milton; all the ardent love poetry, tricked out in affluent imagery, to Byron; all the scouring, dashing, descriptive warrior rhymes to Scott; all the sleepy, tiresome, rural stuff, to Thomson and his eternal Seasons; all the genial, warm-hearted jolly Scotch poetry, to Burns; all the tender, broken-hearted song-verses to Moore; all the broken-English poetry to Chaucer or Spenser—whichever occurs to you first; all the heroic poetry, about the impossible deeds done before Troy, to Homer; all the nauseating rebellion mush-and-milk about young fellows who have come home to die—just before the battle, mother—to George F. Root and kindred spirits; all the poetry that everybody admires and appreciates, but nobody ever reads or quotes from, to Dryden, Cowper and Shelley; all the grave-yard poetry to Elegy Gray or Wolfe, indiscriminately; all the poetry that you can't understand, to Emerson; all the harmless old platitudes, delivered with a stately and oppressive pretense of originality, to Tupper, and all the "Anonymous" poetry to yourself. Bear these rules in mind, and you will pass muster as a connoisseur; as long as you can talk glibly about the "styles" of authors, you will get as much credit as if you were really acquainted with their works. Throw out a mangled French phrase occasionally, and you will pass for an accomplished man, and a Latin phrase dropped now and then will gain you the reputation of being a learned one. Many a distinguished "connoisseur" in belles lettres and classic erudition travels on the same capital I have advanced you in this rather lengthy paragraph. Make a note of that "Anonymous" suggestion—never let a false modesty deter you from "cabbaging" anything you find drifting about without an owner. I shall publish a volume of poems, shortly, over my signature, which became the "children of my fancy" in this unique way.

ETIQUETTICUS, Monitor Silver Mines.—"If a lady and gentleman are riding on a mountain trail, should the lady precede the gentleman, or the gentleman precede the lady?" It is not a matter of politeness at all—it is a matter of the heaviest mule. The heavy mule should keep the lower side, so as to brace himself and stop the light one should he lose his footing. But to my notion you are worrying yourself a good deal more than necessary about etiquette, up there in the snow belt. You had better be skirmishing for bunch-grass to feed your mule on, now that the snowy season is nearly ready to set in.

(For the Californian.)

ECCE ITERUM CRISPINA.

THE reply to "Antediluvian" we have read with attention and pleasure, but we fail to perceive that the writer has shaken our position or overthrown our statements. We do not discover that she names any principles or benefits resulting from the Reformation, which were not enjoyed by various nations before that movement was thought of, or that she points out a single scientific fact or theory which is to be attributed to Lord Bacon. We looked with care to see if she could show that the science of medicine before the Reformation "was never devoted to the alleviation of pain or to healing of the sick;" if she could make good her direct assertion that "the human frame was never dissected until the fourteenth century," and we are forced to say that our search has been vain. We cannot therefore understand to what end she at great length informs us what she knew, so long as that knowledge does not aid in support of her theories and statements. Or why she should catalogue her Brahminical lore or impart to us her reading in Saracenic literature, when she can use neither to discredit our views. It seems impossible to conjecture how saying that Plato discouraged Geometry and Arithmetic, in view of "practical operations," helps her case, when everybody knows that Aristotle taught directly the reverse. If, a thousand years from to-day—when that popular system of education shall be in full blast—some one should say the Americans knew nothing of science, but were mere dreamers, and should cite Mr. Emerson, we think our authoress, if living, would reply, "There were other writers than Mr. Emerson among that people," and be quick to quote Agassiz or Silliman.

We observe that in two instances only has she departed from her general style of assertion and made points that can be touched upon by us. The one, as to girls' high schools and female teachers before the age of chivalry, which she clearly believes did not exist; the other, as to Leonardo da Vinci, in regard to whom she proffers some extraordinary information. We think that high schools and female teachers did exist before the age of chivalry, and in asking her favor Mrs. H. has probably forgotten the school of Pythagoras. In our view, that was a tolerably high school in its day, and a mathematical one too. Women were as freely taught therein as men, and at one time, we believe, over fifteen female teachers or disciples, as they were called, were engaged in it. The wife of Pythagoras taught quite as much as did Pythagoras himself. It is true that a severe rule was imposed on all members of this institution, no one being allowed to graduate without passing some five years in silence. And while it must be acknowledged that there are benefits which flow from so searching a code, we do not advocate its adoption in this city, for we apprehend that the number of female teachers in San Francisco would be reduced to a decidedly smaller number than that of fifteen. Our writer must have failed to remember that during the latter part of the Roman Empire in the time of Theodoseus, "Girls were often carefully educated * * * and that there were schools designed for them exclusively." She must have overlooked, in her view of the history of the world's progress, a race known as the Jews. Of the schools for girls among them, there is no occasion to speak, and surely, a moment's reflection will call to mind some of the names of "the many female poets and learned women who figured in the history of the ancient Jews." Even among the despised Saracens were medical schools for the education of women. Abucasis has left us not only an ample description of the surgical instruments employed in his time, but from him we learn "that in operations on females, in which delicacy intervened, the services of properly instructed women were secured." The Moorish court richly endowed "schools and universities the advantages of which were open, both to the female sex as well as to the male." And from the Mohammedans, says a great American writer and Professor, "we have copied many of the practices in use in our colleges to-day," though failing to educate both sexes as did the Mohammedans. "They held commencements as we do, at which poems were read and orations delivered in presence of the public." Among the Arabs, as early as the fifth century, Labana of Corduba wrote on Arithmetic, Fatima of Valentia wrote on Jurisprudence, Fatima of Hespili wrote upon and taught Jurisprudence in connection with her brother. It is recorded that Fatima of Cordova wrote many volumes and was very learned. Algasania of Hispili was both an oratrix and a poetess, and these arts, which she professed, she publicly taught. Thona of Valentia was greatly skilled in grammar and jurisprudence, and left many works behind her. And there was Maria, Mophigia, Mozada and Aisch Bent, who either wrote, taught or preached something or other on mathematics, grammar, history, poetry, jurisprudence, to a much greater extent than ladies do at this very day. A "list" of these learned women is given in Sharon Turner's History, which he himself takes from Casiri, though the list is not full nor exactly correct. We trust our authoress will not deem us unkind or as declining her request, when we say to her and her friends that this is not all that might be mentioned in regard to girls' high schools and female teachers, but that we must decline to pursue this branch of the subject further.

As to the other point, little need be said. We understood Mrs. H. to assert that the Reformation, Lord Bacon and the District School system were the causes by which and through which the established laws of our earth had been discovered, "and new worlds in our heavens." We denied this and pointed her to a country where none of these causes could be said to exert any influence whatever. Yet that country, we affirmed, had done more for the discovery of the established laws of our earth than any country in christendom. Our writer now admits that we were correct in naming the country, but she says this country did thus "only through patient and laborious mathematical investigation and severe mental discipline." Of course—but the very point made was that mathematical investigation and mental discipline were not products of the Reformation, Lord Bacon or the District School System. As well might she have said when we pointed out that dissection of the human frame was carried on 1700 years before the time she ascribed to its performance, "that it was only done through the study of surgery or anatomy." This is too clear to detain us. But the fearful error into which she has fallen is, that she has quite forgotten who Leonardo da Vinci was, and what were his works.

Mrs. H. says that though Italy has discovered more of the established laws of the earth than any other country in christendom, yet Italy "has not done so through Leonardo da Vinci nor Correggio, nor Titian, nor Raphael, etc.," "but through patient and laborious mathematical investigation and severe mental discipline." We answer that this country has done so through Leonardo da Vinci—more through him than any other man. Of all men this world ever produced he had mathematical training and severe mental discipline, and we are bold to say that Leonardo da Vinci wrote more mathematics than Lord Bacon ever read. Our authoress places Leonardo with painters and poets; she seems to think that he was only an artist, forgetting that while he was great as an artist—he was greater as a mathematician and an engineer. If she will look into Hallam, Draper or any good cyclopedia she will find who and what Leonardo was. Long before Bacon he (da Vinci) laid down the maxim that experience and observation must be the foundation of all reasoning in science. Unlike Bacon who was ignorant of mathematics, and even disparaged them, he points out their supreme advantage. He gave a clear exposition of the theories of forces obliquely applied on a lever; a few years later he was well acquainted with the earth's annual motion. He knew the laws of friction, subsequently demonstrated by Amontons and the principle of virtual velocities; he described the camera obscura before Baptista Portar; understood aerial perspective, the nature of colored shadows, the use of the iris and the effects of the duration of visible impressions on the eye. He wrote well on fortifications, anticipated Castelli on hydraulics, occupied himself with the fall of bodies on the hypothesis of rotation, treated of the times of descent along inclined planes and circular arcs and of the nature of machines. He considered, with singular clearness, respiration and combustion, and foreshadowed one of the great hypotheses of geology, the elevation of continents. (Draper's Intellectual Development 523-24.) It seems to us that for all this he is entitled to some credit, at least to the admission that he had "mathematical training."

And here we pause. This discussion with our friend upon the question of "Progress,"

"Is with the past, beyond the flood."

The fault we have found with her is, that she looks too much upon to-day and too little upon yesterday. She views all the good in the present and only the bad in the past. She gives "to dust that is a little gilt," more "laud than gilt o'er-dusted." We acknowledge this fault to be common to many women and men, alike able and learned; but we deny that for that reason it is to be deemed less erroneous or grevious. To correct it as far as may be we have expressed in the columns of this paper our views.

In doing so we are not aware of having endorsed the ideal school and denounced the material school. We are not conscious of having proclaimed ourselves in favor of á priori knowledge rather than that obtained from experience. We do not know that we have placed Plato above Aristotle, Kant above Humbolt, Hamilton above Buckle, or Hickok above Dana. Something, indeed, might be said upon this side of the question; yet we have not said it, choosing to meet our writer upon her own grounds and with her own weapons. For this reason we do not feel so deeply as we perhaps should her lecture to us upon "eristic syllogysms;" nor has her reference to the accomplished Grecian at Oakland proved the Parthean arrow, as perhaps it ought. We have no information of this celebrated man, whose mouth it seems speaketh great things; but while, of course, he is infinitely more learned than are we, if his oration contain too much of the nineteenth century, and ever see light, we may be tempted to review it, though at this moment believing, from our author's remark, that the production will come from none save "crest-tossing Bellerophon's" self.

It remains to consider whether we had any right to criticise her essay at all. We willingly concede what she strenuously claims, had this essay been written solely for the Teachers' Association in performance of legitimate duty, we had no right to pass upon either its merits or its demerits. But we cannot admit, when that purpose was departed from, and it was given to the public in one of the largest and most influential journals we have, that we had no right to review it. When notice was specially called to it, and her own name in large capitals attached to it, we cannot understand how we can be charged with ruthlessly dragging her before the public. The essay was printed for some purpose, and we thought as an eulogium upon the departed "Board." As such, like all published essays, letters, speeches, arguments, poems, it stands in the public square for praise or for blame. We certainly were ignorant of its being given to the world without the author's consent.

We realize the position in which we stand; we are not heedless of the swift destruction which is sure to overtake us. We entered the controversy not without fear, and we retire from it not without alarm. "Forty centuries," said Napoleon to his soldiers, when 'neath the shadow of the Pyramids—"forty centuries look down upon you." But what are forty centuries compared with forty teachers, and what the solemn shadow of the enduring pyramids compared to the awful frown of the majestic Board of Education!

ANTEDILUVIAN.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

THE late operatic fiasco ended in the sudden termination of the season at the Metropolitan last week, under Manager Bianchi. By means of "Cards" published in the daily papers, the public have been kept fully advised of the different causes which led to the abrupt conclusion of the performances. Norma was given at the Academy of Music on Monday night in very good style. Scoucia, Phillips and Sbriglia were excellent in their different roles. Donizetti's La Favorita was given on Wednesday night, for the benefit of Miss Adelaide Phillips. This opera, one of the ripest and most characteristic works of the great composer, whose exquisite arias and splended choruses are familiar to all opera-goers, was very handsomely performed. Miss Phillips took the prima donna part of "Lenora," which she rendered with an ability worthy her reputation. She was frequently and justly applauded. Signor Sbriglia's "Fernando," and Orlandini's "Alfonso," were also favorably received. The "Balthazar" of Fossati seems to have been the only infelicity in the cast, and he did not come up to the measure of his role. The choruses were especially excellent and well drilled, and deserved the warmest commendations. Il Trovatore was given on Thursday evening, with new and important additions to the company—the management having secured the services of Morelli, baritone, Barrili, basso, and Morley, tenor, of the late Bianchi troupe—thereby offering to the public a combination of musical talent before unknown to California and rarely seen in Atlantic cities. The prices of admission were advanced slightly, in consequence of the increased expenses, but even with this advance, if we may judge from the balance sheet of Mr. Maguire, lately published, the margin of profits left will be small, and the pecuniary risk of the management not inconsiderable. We trust that our music-loving community will bear in mind that Italian opera—especially of this excellence—is a luxury that must be liberally paid for, if indulged, and the chances of another such combination as Mr. Maguire now offers, may not recur for some years to come. It is due to their own reputation, as a critical and liberal people, to recognize, by a generous patronage, the efforts of the Manager. Trovatore, as given by the new combination, was an almost faultless performance. Traviata was given on Friday evening. To-night, Lucrezia Borgia.

BABY IS KING.

A ROSE-CURTAINED cradle, where, nestled within Soft cambric and flannel, lie pounds seventeen,
Is the throne of a tyrant—that pink little thing
Is an autocrat august, for Baby is King.

Good, solemn grandfather dares hardly to speak
Or walk, lest the sleeper should hear his boots creak;
Grandma is a martyr, in habits and cap,
Which the monarch unsettles as well as her cap.

Papa, wise and mighty, just home from the House,
Grows meek on the threshold, and moves like a mouse,
To stare at the bundle; then outward he goes,
Like an elephant trying to walk on its toes.

The queen of the ball-room throws loyally down
Before him the roses she wore in her crown,
And sings little love-songs of how she loves best
The fair baby blossom she rocks on her breast.

Good aunties and cousins before him bow low,
Though he rumples the ringlets, twists collar and bow;
He bids the nurse walk with his majesty's self,
And cries when she stops like a merciless elf.

He flings right and left his saucy fat fist,
And then the next moment expects to be kissed.
He demands people's watches to batter about,
And meets a refusal with struggle and shout.

Then, failing to conquer, with passionate cry
He quivers his lips, keeps a tear in his eye;
And so wins the battle, this wise little thing,
He knows the world over that Baby is King.

[Harper's Weekly.

AROUND PARIS.

IF you wish to pass a holiday delightfully, if you would amuse and instruct and gratify yourself, if you would see what a blessing peace is, if you would observe what able administration may do, if you would see how nearly two millions of human beings live peaceably and quietly without rowdies, come here. Don't live meanly. Take up your lodgings on the right bank of the river (the left bank is our Sleepy Hollow) in some nice, clean new house (they abound north of the boulevard,) and you will be in the heart of that Paris which a stranger ought to see. Don't mind being cheated a little: 'tis the footsoreness the traveller must expect on his journey. If you haven't much money, don't stay here long: spend it freely, and you will amass pleasant souvenirs which will throw a gleam of sunlight on your life for years to come. Go to the best places in the theatres, for you will see there more life than in the minor seats, besides having the right to go everywhere. Get a hack or brougham (the latter is preferable.) and drive down the Avenue des Champs Elysees and to the Bois de Boulogne on some bright day, between 4 and 6 o'clock P. M. Bore no human being here with letters of introduction; let Charley Greene be your only friend, and don't say anything to him except "Good morning, Mr. Greene; please give me some money—good day, Mr. Greene," for we are all of us as busy as men can be, and have not time for palavers (good only for Indians in the backwoods when they are out fishing;) besides, Charley Greene has about two thousand friends here as intimate as you are, and even more disposed to ear-wig him. Get, at the hotel where you stay, (and I would stop at the Grand Hotel or Hotel du Louvre for the first few days to see life there; besides, at these hotels, and especially at the Grand Hotel, the best valets de place are to be found) a valet de place, and make him show you all that is to be seen. Fatigue him without mercy—he is used to it; besides, he is, as long as you pay him, your chattel, and he, so far from thinking you a bore and execrating you (as the receiver of a letter of introduction would be too apt to do,) will feel as kindly towards you as a dairy maid does to her milch cow. If you have a good supply of money, or, having little money, you stay a short time (I would not think of living for less than $20 a day,) and pursue the course I have indicated, you will think time, pains and money well spent.

The latest wonders of Paris are the garden on Montmartre and Chaumont heights, Bataclan, and the new bazaar. The garden contains sixty-two acres; it is situated on a hill higher than Dorchester Heights and which has valleys on all four sides which spread out as far as the eye can reach and are variegated with churches, villages, gardens, vineyards and fields, a river which winds tortuously as the braided snake, and two great railways on which, coming or going, trains continuously dash through. So great is the distance, even the English express train, which rolls along at the rate of thirty-six miles an hour, seems to crawl at a snail's pace. Here lies Paris with all her monuments. Yonder is the Bois de Boulogne, and over it St. Cloud, Suresnes, Mt. Valerien, Puteaux, Sevres, Mendon; further to the left is Clamart and Montrouge, distinguished by their immense quarry wheels which seem gigantic cobwebs against the sky. Further away still are countless villages; on another side are St. Denis and many more villages. You may spend days there gazing and feel no more fatigue than you experience when staring at the horizon line from the sea shore. Is there a site for a garden in the world comparable to this? You had its cousin once on Dorchester Heights, but private houses have long since confiscated it, and you have not yet learned the lesson of tearing down houses for the public good. Imagine a gem of a garden situated on Montmartre Hill. It has a lake in whose centre rises a sort of pinnacle of rocks some two hundred feet high, and one bank of the lake is formed a hill—Pelion piled on Ossa—one hundred and fifty feet high and crowned with a copy in marble of the Sybil's temple (whose exquisite proportions the engraver has made familiar to everybody) which overlooks the falls of Tivoli near Rome. Bataclan, or, as it is written over the door, Bat A Clan, is a Chinese pagoda, constructed with scrupulous fidelity to the models of Chinese art, decorated inside with figures copied from an album found in the Summer Palace at Pekin. It is a Café Concert. It was built for a musical and dramatic café, but the police struck out the words "and dramatic," so it was forced to give only musical entertainments. It is at this moment the most successful establishment in town. It is not only crowded, but its doors are besieged by thousands—I do not exaggerate—who wait until some spectator vacates his place. There is no charge for admission at the doors; the price is paid in increased rates for refreshments. The bazaar is the latest wonder. It is not yet completed. It is to cost one million of dollars, and, like an Oriental bazaar, will contain everything. The buyer will receive a bond for 100f. if he buys for so much, otherwise he will receive a ticket for the amount of his purchases, and when they have in the course of time reached to 100f. they will be exchanged for a bond. Drawings of these bonds will take place periodically, and the holder whose bond's number is drawn will be paid 100f. Thus people may buy gratuitously (pardon the incongruity.) It is fortunate that such a discovery has been made, for life in Paris is growing so expensive that nobody can live here unless at least two rich uncles or three rich aunts have made him their heir. Will you credit it? you may find in our gentlemen's furnishing shops shirts at the price of $500 and $600. I wish you would let me draw on you for a dozen shirts' worth a year. You ought to do so, for surely you wouldn't see a writer on your paper having less than a dozen shirts in his chest of drawers. Or, as times are hard, we will compromise matters by my accepting one dozen such shirts as an outfit and giving you a quit claim for the future.—"Spiridion," in the Boston Gazette.

THE DESERT OF SAHARA.—The discoveries of recent African explorers have dispelled many of the popular notions concerning the great desert of Sahara. It used to be described as a nearly level plain. This plain, it is now ascertained, does not exist, except its eastern and western extremities. The central portions rise in the form of terraces, from 600 to 1,200 feet above the valley of the Atlas and Soudan. They are interspersed with ravines and granite ravines and granite hills. Barth speaks of mountains 4.000 and 5,000 feet high. In general, however, the surface is flat or slightly undulating; in some places covered with a thick bed of sand, in others hard and flinty. Every aspect confirms the opinion of Humboldt, that the desert is the bed of a former sea, elevated by geological convulsions. The traveller, at almost every step, meets with mounds of fossil, shells and other debris of marine animals. There are immense deposits of rock salt, in some places as pure as marble, and so compact as to serve in the construction of houses. Soudan derives its salt from this source. The efflorescence of nitre are almost everywhere apparent. Lions, tigers, and other ferocious animals, in which the desert has in imagination been peopled, are met with only in forests or oases, where alone they can find food and water. The lion is king of the desert only in poetry. Man is the true wild animal whom he dreads to encounter, and bandits infest every route in the Sahara. In passing between the tropics, the sun carries with it heavy-laden nimbus clouds, which, not meeting any mountains high enough to condense their moisture and cause it to fall at intervals, descend occasionally, by their own gravity, and drop their watery treasures in gushing torrents which fill every ravine. It is a deluge which lasts but for a moment; the water disappears in the permeable soil as fast as it comes, and forms extensive sheets of water a short distance below the surface. This fact has been revealed by numerous soundings. Already excellent artesian wells, sunk by French engineers, have created verdant oases in places where every vestige of vegetation appeared to be eternally buried in the sand. But these hidden lakes, on which the desert partly reposes, are not a recent discovery. From time immemorial, the Arabs have sunk, in the open desert, wells several hundred feet deep, until they met the watery bed, which they have called the subterranean lakes.

AN old gentleman who believed in exercise more than drugs, and who chose horseback riding as the most convenient exercise, on a recent occasion was asked by a medical friend which physician and apothecary he employed, to which he replied: "My physician has always been a HORSE and my apothecary an ASS!"

A COURTIER OUTWITTING A TAILOR.

CHARANCE was one of the pages of King Louis XIV., and an officer in his body-guard. In early life he had played some very strange pranks, but had always met with favor and protection from the King. He did many clever things, but one in particular in which he was engaged made everybody laugh. He had a long and handsome avenue to his chateau in Anjou, in which a peasant had a little house and garden which had stood in the same avenue long before the avenue was planted, and which neither Charance nor his father could persuade the peasant to sell on any terms. This, observes Saint Simon, with proper disdain for so low a person, is a species of obstinacy which petty proprietors often show expressly to annoy people of condition. Charance pretended to let the matter drop; for a long time said no more about it. At last, disgusted that a paltry cottage should intercept the sweep of his fine avenue, he conceived a scheme to get rid of it. It chanced that the owner of the cottage was a tailor, and worked at his trade whenever an opportunity offered. He lived alone, having neither wife nor children. One fine day Charance sent for him, and said that he was suddenly ordered up to Court to fill an office of great importance, that he was anxious to get there as soon as possible and, as he had no liveries for his servants, he wished him to make them forthwith. The tailor agreed, and the bargain was struck on the spot. Charance stipulated, however, that to avoid unnecessary delay he should do the work at the chatean, and that, if promised not to quit the work until it was finished he would pay him something over and above, besides board and lodging him. The tailor set to work on the spot. In the meantime Charance got an architect to make an exact plan of the house and garden, the rooms, the furniture, and even the kitchen utensils. He then sent workmen to pull down the house, take away everything that was in it, and reconstruct it exactly as it had been, internally and externally, at some distance from the avenue, with every article in its accustomed place; and the garden exactly as it had been. They then cleared away all traces of it from the ground it originally stood upon, so that nobody could guess that it had ever been there at all. This was completed before the tailor, who was carefully watched, had finished his liveries. When the liveries were completed, Charance paid his man well, kept him to supper, and then dismissed him. The tailor set out for his home at nightfall. He found the avenue unusually long, thought he had gone too far, retraced his steps, and looked about for the well-known trees near which his house stood. The night was dark, and he groped his way through them as well as he could; but was astonished to find his house nowhere. He passed the whole of the long night in this way. When day broke he saw that he had not gone astray; but that house and garden and all had disappeared, and he came to the conclusion that he was the sport of some evil spirit. After wandering about a good deal, he thought he perceived at a considerable distance from the avenue a cottage which resembled his own, though he knew that there never had been one in the same place. He approached it, examined it closer, and the more he did so the more he was struck with the exact resemblance. He was curious to try whether the key he had in his pocket would fit the lock. It did fit the lock. He opened the door, walked in, and was thunderstruck on finding not only that the rooms were the same, but that every single article of furniture was the same, and precisely in the spot where he had left them. He was near fainting with fright; he fell on his knees and prayed, for he religiously believed that the demon had played him this trick. The following day, however, he learnt the truth from the mocking and laughing of the villagers to whom he told his story. He got furious, went with his complaint to the Intendant of the province, and insisted upon getting satisfaction; but he only got laughed at. The King heard the story, and laughed more than anybody, and Charance had his avenue as he wished it. "Ah!" concludes St. Simon, "had Charance never done worse than what he did to the tailor, he would have preserved his reputation and his liberty."

"OLD BUMBLEBEE" was the cognomen of T——, of Newburyport. He gained the title from the fact of his catching a bumble-bee one day as he was shingling his barn, and, in attempting to destroy the insect with the hatchet, cut off the ends of his thumb and forefinger, letting the insect go unharmed. Other mishaps happened to the old codger on the same barn. In one of his abstractions, he shingled over his spare hatchet; and cutting a small aperture in the building to let a little daylight in, this man actually set a wooden pane as being economical and not likely to be broken. Uncle T——, in one of his oblivious freaks, nailed his left arm so firmly betwixt two boards of a fence he was putting up that he had to call for help to get extricated from his self-imprisonment. He once put a button on the gate instead of the post. But the rarest freak of all was when he ran through the streets with his hands about three feet asunder, held before him, begging the passers-by not to disturb him, as he had got the measure of a doorway with him.

PASTA.

THE art of declaiming recitative passages in opera has almost died out. Its greatest exponent was that gifted woman who passed away from us but a few days ago by the bright shores of Como. Mme. Pasta was undoubtedly the most inspired lyric actress that ever trod the stage; and it is worth while, now that we are art-associated with mincing Aminas, feeble Semiramides and lay-sister Normas, to regard, in the dim distance of the past, that majestic woman's figure, at one moment instinct with the divine madness of a priestess, at another moving with the simplicity of an Alpine peasant. The original heroine of most of Bellini's immortal works, it was in Norma pre-eminently that Pasta soared to the loftiest range of dramatic conception. The present age has no idea of Pasta's Norma. It has seen Grisi (who was at one time only considered worthy to play Adalgisa to Pasta's Norma,) and has given Grisi the title of "Diva" from her appearance in the part. But alas, flexibility and fluency—neither of which gifts Pasta ever possessed—could never atone for Giulia Grisi's want of soul. From her first success as Norma in England, may be dated the gradual decline and downfall of the power of declamatory recitative. Not a bar of Pasta's baldest recitative was without its special significance: it was sung—it was acted—with a force and understanding which were irresistible. Mme. Grisi could not do this, and never attempted it. With her, recitative was reduced into the merest "padding;" the torrent of passionate invective flowed equably along in the calmest manner of the Paddingtonian canal; and the rising race of singers were comforted by the example, which in effect declared all artistic effort beyond the most superficial vocalization to be needless in the interpretation of recitative. And the pernicious force of that example extends down to this day. We have no Pasta come. We have no Pasta coming.

Mme. Pasta's voice was a most difficult organ to reduce to rule. It was hard and unbending—although capable of expressing and pointing, as few could, the highest musical sentiment. It is a curious fact that she could not sing an ascending scale. All her florid passages were on down scales, and these she did perfectly; but every effort to sing an up scale proved utterly futile. Thus in the music of the parts which Bellini and other maestri wrote for her, one finds this peculiarity carefully studied, and the difficulty overcome in a most admirable way. Take the "Ah! non giunge" from the "Sonnambula" as a case in point, and admire the ready dexterity of the master who had to write in fetters, and yet with such marvellous result.

"The last time I saw Pasta," said a musical friend of ours the other day, "was a few years ago at the villa of Count —— on the Lake of Como. We were a large party, and many people of European fame were amongst the guests. One brilliant evening, a strange figure wandered in from the tree-lined highway, upon the glittering group in the Count's salon. It was a woman—a peasant, if you might judge from her dress, which was one of the coarsest description, with rough woolen stockings drawn over her shoes; but you had only to look from the rude raiment to the face of the wearer, to know that she was no common person. Though her figure was bent and her hair gray, her face—which was that of a dark Marie Antoinette—still retained traces of a nobility, which, in youth, must have conferred on her the highest order of loveliness; and her eyes were still full and bright. It was Pasta. She was received with delight and a veneration which was charming to witness. We all felt we stood in the presence of a great mind. By and by, after chatting with her some time about old scenes in London and Paris, where she had been ever the prominent figure, I asked her if she would sing a duet with me—just to let us hear her voice again. At first she refused, but on being further pressed, she diffidently agreed to try a duo from Semiramide. I sat down to the piano, and she began. It was but a thin, quavering sound—uncertain, unsteady—as if perfectly distrustful of itself. But in the cabaletta, where our voices went together, Pasta gained strength—her figure dilated—her eyes flashed, and, strange to say, as if the tramels of age and disuse were like leaves in an autumn torrent, her voice suddenly burst out with a brilliancy and power unsurpassed in her grandest days. The effect was indeed electrical. The russet of the peasant—the gray hair of age—disappeared; and in their place we saw again the real purple of tragedy, and the splendid light of eyes, following the glorious passion of her voice. This was the last time I saw Giuditta Pasta." Orchestra.

HOMELY men are afflicted with a very great drawback. They are always jealous. Show us a gentleman with yellow hair and a pug nose, and we will show you a gentleman who is ready to stab himself with a brickbat every time he sees you looking at chimney-top.

SHAKSPEARE IN PARIS.—It seems certain, from an entry in a manuscript journal of the time, (September 18, 1604,) that an English company performed the second part of Henry the Fourth, at Paris, during the lifetime of Shakspeare.

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE ABROAD.

THE German songstress Lichtmay, in Paris, has just finished the French version of the role of "Valentine" in The Huguenots, and is now studying L'Africaine. Her debut at the Grand Opera will take place at the end of this month. .. The first full rehearsal of L'Africaine in Paris, lasted seven hours, although there was little or no interruption... At the first performance of the Africaine in Paris the ballet will be omitted and the performance thereby shortened to the very moderate time from 7 P. M. to 2 A. M... The sum of fifteen thousand dollars is said to have been paid for the English copyright of Meyerbeer's opera of Africaine.

—

AN active quarrel is going on in London just now amongst the music publishers, and as is usual in such cases, the public get the benefit of it. The attack appears to be directed against Messrs. Novello, and the comparative monopoly of four part and glee music which this house has long enjoyed. The virulence of the fight may be judged from the fact that Messrs. Novello have met the opposition by at once reducing their glees to one cent each. They announce also a complete edition of Mendelssohn's "open air music" for sixteen cents. The lowest price heretofore has been $1 50 gold.

—

THE French Empress wished the other day to hear the famous minstrel of a certain class, Mlle. Terese, in one of the Court concerts; whereupon the director, Mr. Maillard, declared that under these circumstances he would prefer to resign.

—

LEIPZIG contains twenty factories of pianofortes, with 400 workmen, who make about 1,500 instruments yearly, valued at 380,000 Prussian thalers. This is scarcely as much as one of our leading manufacturies accomplishes alone in a single year.

—

OLE Bull and Leo Lion, the pianist, have recently created a furore in Dresden.

THE DESERT FROM A RAIL CAR.—We naturally expected to lose all sense of the desert—not once to come under its spell—in our journey through it by rail. But it was really not so. No railway associations obtruded themselves upon our notice, except the long moving shadow upon the sand. We alone seemed to be in the wilderness, drawn along by a power which, from the very scenery through which we passed, had a strange air of novelty and mystery about it. There were no well-built station-houses like Swiss cottages, but only wooden huts at great intervals, which stood alone and solitary in the arid waste, without a name to distinguish them from each other in the boundless expanse of sand. They are simply numbered like milestones. Such buildings fail to give any life to the scene, and excite in us only feelings of pity for the hermits who inhabit them, and whose duties consist, not in conning over breviaries, or in helping forlorn travellers, but in adjusting switches and supplying water and food to thirsty and hungry steam-engines puffing through the sweltering heat. The railway changed the scenery of the desert no more than a balloon changes the scenery of the clouds. Once out of Cairo, we were in the ocean of sand and desolation, as much as a ship out of Plymouth is in the ocean of green water. We passed across the characteristic flinty ground of the real desert; we saw rolling hills of tawny, almost golden sand like yellow snowhills, drifted and smoothed by the winds, and as if never trodden by the foot of man. We saw troops of light gazelles bounding along with elastic step as they fled in terror from the mysterious monster that rushed snorting toward them from the horizon. We saw in great beauty more than one mirage, fully realizing all we had ever heard of the deceptive likeness to large pools or lakes of water, with shores indented by tiny bays and jutting promontories, and with a hazy brightness over them singularly picturesque. We saw strings of loaded camels, with Arabs on foot guiding them, and slowly journeying, as their predecessors had done for thousands of years, along that old route, it may be to Palestine or to Arabia Petra, or to strange and unknown scenes, or to verdant scenes of pasture-lands and feeding ground for goats and camels, with tents pitched round springs of water—spots to which no vacation tourist has yet penetrated, and that remain as they were in the days of Job. And thus the desert was very desert, out and out, as it ought to have been, in order to meet the expectations of those more sanguine even than ourselves. On we went, thoroughly enjoying the scene, with no feeling of disappointment whatever. We could certainly picture a more ideal mode of passing through that old romantic waste, but it was impossible to picture a more perfect waste than that which we passed through.—Good Words.

THEY have a good joke on Dr. Egan, of Chicago; he is a great land operator, as well as a most successful physician. The doctor prescribed some pills for a lady. She asked how they were to be taken? "A quarter down," said the doctor, "and the balance in one or two years."

HOW OLD ARE YOU?—A French actress, whose youth and beauty appeared inexhaustible—on the boards—never would tell her age. Of course, the more she wouldn't tell it, the more curious people were to know it. A woman can't keep a secret! She kept that.

By good luck—as the multitude thought—she was summoned as a witness on a trial. The gossips rubbed their hands and chuckled. "Aha! we shall know it now. She must tell, or go to prison for contempt of court. She won't go to prison; she will, therefore, tell."

The court was crowded with open-eared listeners. In French courts of justice, the witness does not stand in a box to give evidence, but sits on a stool, in the middle of the floor of the court, in front of the president's desk, and with no barrier or separation between it and himself.

The lady was ushered in, raised her right hand to heaven, took the oath to speak the truth, and then seated herself on the witness-stool.

"Your name?" asked the president.

"Angélique Toujoursfleurie."

"Your profession?"

"Artiste dramatique."

"Your age?"

You might have heard a pin drop, or the hair grow on the bystanders' heads. Every eye was bent on the lady. She was driven into a corner at last!

Foolish Parisian public to think so! Angélique simply rose from her seat, walked straight up to the president's desk, and whispered the secret in his ear. He nodded, made the entry in his private notes, and, smiling, continued the rest of his interrogatory as soon as she had resumed her place on the sellette.

The public retired with feelings of mingled disgust and admiration. The trial had lost all further interest; and the president was known to be a man of honor and gallantry, who would never let a pretty woman's cat escape from his presidential bag.

CHARLES LAMB, who was in the habit of wearing a white cravat, and in consequence was sometimes taken for a clergyman. Once at a dinner-table, among a large number of guests, his white cravat caused such a mistake to be made, and he was called on to "say grace." Looking up and down the table, he asked, in his inimitable, lisping manner, "Is there no cl-cl-clergyman present?" "No, sir," answered a guest. "Th-then," said Lamb, bowing his head, "let us thank God."

A PORTUGUESE shoemaker used to give his wife a severe flogging every month, just before he went to confession. On being asked the reason of this proceeding, he replied, that having a poor memory, he took this method of refreshing it, as his wife, while under the castigation, was sure to remind him of all his sins.

THERE is a Methodist preacher out West whose praise is thus sounded by a contemporary: "I have repeatedly heard the most famous men in America, but there are times when the flame of his pathos licks the everlasting hills with a roar that moves your soul to depths fathomed by few other men!"

"YOUR hand annoys me exceedingly," said a gentleman to a talkative person who was sitting near him at dinner, and who was constantly suiting the action to the word. "Indeed, sir," replied the gabbler, "we are so crowded at the table that I do not know where to put my hand." "Put it in your mouth," said the other.

A SHILLING GIVEN BY A DUCHESS TO KISS HER.—Duncan Mackeuzie, an old Peninsular soldier, aged nearly ninety, died at Elgin. Duncan was a Highlander, every inch of him, and that, too, a stalwart one, for he was more than six feet in height, and must have been (as he was wont to say) a strapping fellow when he kissed Jane, Duchess of Gordon, in taking "the shilling" from between her teeth, to become one of her regiment—the Gordon Highlanders. Duncan delighted to tell how he was enlisted, and he has not left, we presume, one alive to tell the same tale about kissing the duchess in the market. He was born in the parish of Duthil.

THE WORD "ADMIRAL."—The office was first introduced by one of the Khalifs of Spain, Abderrahman II. (912–961.) He appointed a "commander at sea," called in Arabic Amir-al-ma, which was corrupted into Admiral, the final ma being elided and d inserted between the a and m for the sake of euphony.

IF you would improve your disposition, watch your diet. Men who live on meat run as naturally to surliness as Germans to flute-playing. If the English fed as constantly on "garding sas" as the French do, it is quite probable that they would be equally affable and obliging.

NEW WORDS.—Timbromanie (from timbre, a stamp,) has been the name of the rage for collecting postage-stamps, which, as satirical, is to be abandoned for Timbrophilée.

NOTICE

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lob, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1865.

OUR MILITARY WEAKNESSES.

THERE has always been an attraction about the profession of arms, which gave the soldier, who either had flung down his life on the altar of his country, or was clothed in the robes which indicated a future contingency of that character, the tenderest smiles of the ladies and the more boisterous applause of his less dashing brethren in civil life. But during the many years of peace enjoyed by the Republic, when Lieutenant Charley or Captain Toby only made an appearance among the quiet acquaintances of their boyhood, once in a brace of years, their presence excited feelings of enthusiasm among the bread-and-buttery portion of the feminine side of society, and in the various billiard saloons, where the brass buttons and neat undress won the hearts and excited the envy of simple salesmen or rusticated Sophomores; while the more practical elders looked with suspicion on the jaunty West Point airs, and the matrons gathered their admiring daughters more carefully under the parental wing, there was a general feeling that however small the army was, any retrenchment in that direction might be adopted without argument. We did not give our soldiery in those days the full credit for their services and capabilities. We slighted them in every possible way. We felt that the foppishness becoming a martinet was inexcusable; and the pettish insolence of the subalterns, as it developed itself in the social relations of which we speak, gave military genius a bad name that our officers had not fully merited.

But if we wronged the army in our days of peace, the lesson of our war has made us veer too violently in the other direction. The military god which saved us nobly from national ruin, is now prayed to with the same fervor for other favors in channels foreign to his nature. Not satisfied with Mars dashing at the head of our armies, the wheels of his chariot relentlessly crushing out all life before him, we dethrone every other deity with iconoclastic madness, and proceed to array our favorite with the unfit robes of Justice, thrust the abandoned scales in his hands, and demand of him decisions which cannot but be dictated by a bloody code. We would, too, be willing to accept him as the equal of Apollo, and the lute is overpowered by the brazen cymbals and sullen drum, while Mercury, doffing winged cap and sandals, must thrust his legs into cavalry boots, buckle on the sword, and arrange his business through the medium of numbered dispatches and publish his orders at evening parade.

Our attention was vividly drawn to this transformation of sentiment on military matters by what we witnessed at the meeting of Associated Alumni, held a short time since at Oakland. There was a distinguished Major-General present, who was cheered and spattered with scholastic flattery until he must have felt that West Point was a sort of preliminary training for apotheosis. He remarked in a speech, at the anchorite repast which succeeded the literary exercises, (and we are glad, by the way, that the Flag did not get hold of it,) that, "on entering the chapel, a pert young man asked him if he was an alumnus; that after having listened to the poem, wherein x and y were handled so unmercifully, and feeling that his own training had consisted mainly of the mathematics so much scorned as means of education, he had about concluded that he was not an alumnus. Looking around and noting how many of the members of the association hailed from Western and Lake Colleges, and knowing what slight claims to literary ability the institution on the Hudson possessed, (sarcastically,) he was rather glad that he had not been invited as a graduate, but rather on account of his position as Commander of the Department." Now it would be difficult to make out where applause could come in for the proper reception of the above remarks; and yet it did, and of the most boisterous character. The adjective applied to the meek undergraduate, who found proper seats for Alumni and Philistines, when, by the exercise of a proper amount of "pertness," he could discover which was which, was, we believe, peculiarly acceptable; while the slap at the literary capabilities of the "Western and Lake Colleges," was received with a tremendous burst of applause, although there might have been some poor wretches hidden in the crowd who had received their modicum of Latin and rations of x and y at garrisons of literature west of the Alleghanies. The remaining portion of his little speech proved the gentleman to be above jealousy as a general, and his concluding remarks were certainly worthy a kind acknowledgment on the part of his auditors.

Not content, however, with mere physical enthusiasm towards the military hero, it seemed to be a strong feeling of respect which made so many of the reverend and legal gentlemen who succeeded him, refer in such pointed terms, when discussing military matters, to the reputation of the soldier present. There was a learned judge at the table, renowned for his scholarship and jurisprudence: a savan also, who had gained world-wide reputation; and yet each of these received a paucity of cooler compliments, which indicated how far arms had gained the victory over the toga in the scholastic mind. We have, in spite of the radical arguments of one of our dailies, a certain admiration for the Commander of this Department, and believe him to be a man of military genius, a true patriot, one who loves his fellow men, and has done and will do all that he can for the common weal, but we may be pardoned if we fail to follow in the wake of the superficial current of admiration or abuse which seems to pursue each and every soldier of the republic, however may be his deserts. It might be fairly suggested that the unjust attacks lately made upon the loyalty of the military chieftain had some influence in producing this extraordinary enthusiasm. But whatever the cause, we give the incident as it occurred.

But the Associated Alumni are not the only class of our citizens who instinctively cower in the presence of the Republic's physical defenders. The poison has crept through every system. It sticks out in the theatre, the church and the political meeting. "Under the patronage of Major General Fightemwell," tickles the fancy of the actor and spectator; the priest preaches nervously for the good opinion of the commander; and no enthusiastic meeting is worth chronicling unless some man of military rank has stumbled through a few patriotic formula before it, or has relieved the plain garb of the civilian platform-statuary by his dashing uniform.

War has made an impress upon our minds too deep to be reasonable. We have adopted its rules in too many directions to be correct. We always knew that jury trials were liable to error, and that judges were not always correct in their rulings; but both judge and jury have all the perfection in their acts that humanity will allow; and we fail to see what especial advantages over "twelve good and true men," with the venerable learning of our most accomplished jurists to instruct them, are to be obtained from "not less than five or more than thirteen" officers detailed from a military roster. It is an insult to every loyal man on this coast to suppose that the average intellect of a city like San Francisco is not as capable of divining what does or does not constitute piracy and treason as any military commission. Erskine has said that "there is a vast difference between courts of justice and courts martial." The archives of the Judge Advocate at Washington are full of instances of summary and proper punishment meted out to offenders who might otherwise have escaped, but we doubt not they also embody many a case of innocence crucified at the drumhead. We cannot blame the military authorities for what was and always must be a necessity in war, but now, that peace has waved her olive sceptre over us, we should bow to her commands, and walk once more in her paths.

Military men have done their duty and should be rewarded. We must not forget that the future may need them again, and they should be cherished and honored, as well for the past as for the future. If the war horse is too stiff and awkward to curvet again on the road of pleasure, he should have the most fertile corner in the republican pasture to rest in. If the ex-cavalry colonel can deliver an oration that will instruct and please his auditory, he cannot be heard with less respect because he has flung himself at the head of his squadrons into the jaws of death to save the Republic; but let us not declare that his commonplaces are the pearls of eloquence, and receive his crude ideas on politics or literature as the utterances of an oracle.

It is better to have a civilian for governor at Sacramento with a body-guard of clerks, a red tape uniform and a sceptre of sealing wax; it is less dangerous to our liberties to be indicted in civil courts, and it is more in consonance with the spirit of Christianity to listen to religion as it is declared from the lips of pious old-fashioned divines, than to bend the pregnant hinges of the knee to military authority, as it rides by, surrounded by all the glory of a well-appointed staff, to be summoned by a natty orderly before a court blazing in all the majesty of epaulettes and side arms, and to hear of the doctrines of peace from men whose hands grasps more affectionately the sabre than the Concordance.

All the prisoners confined at Alcatraz upon charges of treasonable utterances or practices, have been released.

ANSELMO AND HIS REVIEWERS

WE have received two communications concerning "Antediluvian's" review of Anselmo, in our last issue. The first communication from Mr. Parbort, being brief, we give entire:

To the Editor of the Californian: The malice prepense manifested by "Autediluvian" in his review of Anselmo, would, were it not for its coarseness, almost justify me in replying to it. He is evidently spleeny and should be pitied, not opposed.

The effort of "Antediluvian" reminds me of a story related by Felix Platerns. A countryman falling into a pit, where were frogs and frog-spawn, and a little of the water being swallowed, began to suspect he had likewise swallowed frog spawn, and with that conceit, his phantasy wrought so far that he verily thought he had young live frogs in his belly, qui vivebant ex alimento suo, that lived by his nourishment. He studied physic seven years to cure himself, and travelled into Italy, France and Germany to consult the best physicians. But it did not avail him. When his counsel told him it was wind, he replied, "No, it is not wind, but real frogs; do you not hear them croak?"

There were no trout there. "Antediluvian" is an ancient croaker, who fancies himself a critic.

Please accept a copy of Anselmo. I hope your impressions, on reading it, may not be altogether "Antediluvian."

George R. Parbert.

The second communication is from "Postdilnvian," who devotes six pages of manuscript and sixty or seventy lines of selections from Anselmo, to a defence of its poetic excellence. Want of space and a decent regard for the pecuniary rights of the poet and publisher compel us to decline what would eventually amount to a cheap republication of the poem, and an infringement on Mr. Parbnrt's copyright. We are willing, however, to give one of "Postdiluvian's" selections. He writes:

"The remainder of the first canto, says "Antedilnvian," is devoted to wildly apostrophizing Woman, the Atlantic ocean, Cuba, etc. What nobler themes could be selected? And in what poem are those themes more elegantly and poetically apostrophized? For example—To the Ocean, Stanza 62:

Thou art no emblem of eternity;
Law mocks thee with a—"thus far shalt thou go!"
Thou art no image of the Deity:
Unstable,! Uncreative! Apropos
Of Godhead—thou hast taint of lunacy?
What dost thou when thy proudest currents flow?
Like a sick swain, whose love retires too soon,
Thou moanest night-long to the wanton moon.

If the question "In what poem are these themes more elegantly and poetically apostrophized" be addressed to us, we prefer to evade it. Human criticism is apt to be fallible, and if Ante and Postdiluvial research fail to yield a proper exposition of Mr. Parburt's poem, our humble efforts would be futile.

We were obliged to cut out much of "Antedilnvian's" article from the multiplicity of quotation. The same inexorable law compels us now to omit the greater portion of "Postdiluvian's" remarks, which, we will do him the justice to say, are highly laudatory of the poem. A question of fact arises, however, in regard to the omniverous propensities of trout. "Postdiluvian" gives the line thus:

"On oysters, garlic, turkies, trout, could dine."

But on referring to the poem courteously furnished to us by the author, we find the line as follows:

"On oysters, garlic, turkies, trout could dine," which, while it by no means proves Mr. Parburt's intention to imply the extraordinary voracity of trout, at least relieves "Antedilnvian" from the charge of deliberately misquoting. In conclusion "Postdilnvian" says:

"As an American, and especially as a Californian, I am proud of Anselmo. It is a poem of more than ordinary excellence. In the language of the Sunday Mercury, "the versification is easy and harmonious, and the narrative well sustained." And the Flag truly remarks: "The poem is gracefully written, and possesses adequate interest to enchain the reader's attention to the end." It is not, as "Antedilnvian" says, "a sorry imitation of Don Juan. It is not in any manner a satire on decency, or religion, as was that "celebrated composition." It has a nobler aim, a more refined and enduring originality and excellence—the sacredness of youthful love, and its fruition in holy matrimony. At some future time, I may desire to present to your readers my views of the theology of Anselmo. The story of Don Carlos seems to have a graver meaning than appears on its surface. And it may not be too severe to the author to say, that the pleasant story of Anselmo and Isabel is used merely to beguile the attention, while cherished theological and political sentiments are being instilled into the mind. I am not quite sure that

'Anselmo hath no mysteries to unravel.'

Postdiluvian."

We beseech "Postdiluvian," by our kindred blood "as an American, and especially as a Californian," to smother any unhallowed desire that he may hereafter feel to present to our readers his "views of the theology of Anselmo. We have a vague impression that a theological review of Mr. Parburt's poem would be more than we could stand, or than could be reasonably asked of any journal. At any other time we might question the critical ability of the Sunday Mercury, which, we believe, objects to Mozart's Don Giovanni—taken from the popular English pantomime, and not from Byron's poem—and yet endorses Anselmo. Under any other circumstanaces we might object to the poetical criticism of the Flag, which can seriously praise a poem as "being remarkable for the sublimity of its conceptioas aad fearful in its imprecations." But we have no wish to pursue this subject further than to add to the concluding line of "Postdiluvian's" extract—

"Anselmo hath no mysterics to unravel,

the consecutive line of the dedication, which "Postdeduluvian" has oiaitted:

So having made his debut—let him travel."

(For the Californian.)

ON THE DECAY OF PROFESSIONAL BEGGING.

AS the aew Benevolent Association has had the effect of withdrawing beggars from the strects, and as Professional Mendicancy bids fair to be presently ranked with the Lost Arts, to preserve some records of this noble branch of industry I have endeavored to recall certain traits and peculiarities of individual members of the order whom I have known, and whose forms I now miss from their accustomed haunts. In so doing, I confess to feeling a certain regret at this decay of Professional Begging, for I hold the theory that mankiad are bettered by the occasioaal spectacle of misery, whether simulated or not, on the same principle that our sympathies are enlarged by the fictitious woes of the Draaia, though we know that the actors are insincere. Perhaps I am iadiscreet in saying that I have rewarded the artfully dressed and well acted performaace of the begging imposter through the same impulse that impelled me to expend a dollar in witnessing the counterfeited sorrows of poor "Triplet" as represented by Charles Wheatleigh. I did not quarrel with the deceit iu either case. My coin was given in recognition of the sentiment; the moral responsibility rested with the performer.

The principal figure that I now mourn over as lost forever is one that may have been familiar to many of my readers. It was that of a dark-complexioned, black-eyed, foreign-looking womaa, who supported in her arms a sickly baby. As a pathological phenomena the baby was especially interesting, having presented the Hippocratic face and other symptoms of immediate dissolutioa, without change for the past three years. The woman never verbally solicited arms. Her appearance was always mute, mysterious and sudden. She made no other appeal than that which the dramatic tableau of herself aad baby suggested, with an outstretched hand and deprecating eye sometimes superadded. She usually stood in my doorway, silent aad patient, intimating her presence, if my attention were preoccupied, by a slight cough from her baby, whom I shall always believe had its part to play in this little antomime, and generally obeyed a secret signal from the maternal hand. It was useless for me to refuse alms, to plead business or affect inattention. She never moved; her position was always taken with an appearaace of latent capabilities of eadurance and experience in waiting which never failed to impress me with awe and the futility of any hope of escape. There was also something in the reproachful expression of her eye, which plainly said to me, as I bent over my paper, "Go oa with your mock sentimentalities aad simulated pathos; portray the imagiuary sufferings of your bodiless creations, spread your thin web of philosophy, but look you, sir, here is real misery! Here is genuine suffering!" I confess that this artful suggestion usually brought me dowa. Ia three minutes after she had thus invested the citadel, I usually surrendered at discretion without a gun having beea fired on either side. She received my offering aad retired as mutely and mysteriously as she had appeared. Perhaps it was well for me that she did not know her strength. I might have bcea forced, had this terrible woman been coascious of her real power, to have borrowed moaey which I could not pay, or have forged a check to purchase immunity from her awful presence. I hardly kaow if I make myself understood, and yet I am unable to define my meaning more clearly when I say that there was somethiag in her glance which suggested to the person appealed to, when in the presence of others, a certain idea of some individual responsibility for her sufferiags, which, while it never failed to affect him with a mingled sense of ludicrousness and terror, always made an impression of unqualified gravity on the minds of the bystanders. As she has disappeared within the last month, I imagine that she has fonnd a home at the San Francisco Benevolent Association—at least, I cannot conceive of any charity, however guarded by wholesome checks or sharp-eyed almoners, that could resist that mute apparition. I should like to go there and inquire about her and also learn if the baby was convalesceat or dead, but I am satisfied that she would rise up with a mutc and reproachful appeal, so personal in its artful suggestions, that it would end in the Association instantly transferring her to my hands.

My next familiar mendicant was a vendor of priuted ballads. These effusions were so stale, atrocious, and unsaleable in their character, that it was easy to detect that hypocrisy, which—in imitation of more ambitious beggary—veiled the real cleemosynary appeal, under the thin pretext of offering an equivalent. This beggar—an aged female in a rusty bonnet—I unconsciously precipitated upon myself in an evil moment. Oa our first meetiag, while distractedly turniag over the ballads, I came upon a certain production entitled, I think, "The Fire Zouave," and was struck with the truly patriotic and American manner in which "Zouave" was made to rhyme in different stanzas with "grave, brave, save aad glaive." As I purchased it at once, with a gratified expressioa of countenance, it soon became evideat that the act was misconstrued by my poor friend, who, from that moment never ceased to haunt me. Perhaps, in the whole course of her precarious existence, she had never before sold a ballad. My solitary purchase evidently made me, in her eyes, a customer, and in a measure exalted her vocation; so, thereafter, she regularly used to look in at my door, with a chirping confident air, and the question, "Any more songs to-day?" as though it were some necessary article of daily consumption. I never took aay more of her songs, although that circumstance did not shake her faith in my literary taste; my abstiaence from this exciting mental pabulum being probably ascribed to charitable motives. She was finally absorbed by the S. F. B. A., who have probably made a proper disposition of her effects. She was a little old woman, of Celtic origin, predisposed to melancholy, and looking as if she had read most of her ballads.

My next reminiscence takes the shape of a very seedy iadividual, who had, for three or four years, been vainly attemptiag to get back to his relatives in Illinois, where sympathizing friends and a comfortable alms-house awaited him. Only a few dollars, he informed me—the uncontributed remainder of the amount necessary to purchase a steerage ticket—stood in his way. These last few dollars seem to have been most difficult to get—and he had waadered about, a sort of antithetical Flying Dutchman, forever putting to sea, yet never getting away from shore. He was a "'49-er," aad had recently beea blown up in a tunnel, or had fallen down a shaft, I forget which. This sad accidcat obliged him to use large quantities of whisky as a liniment, which, he informed me, occasioned the mild fragrance which his garments exhaled. Though belonging to the same class, he was not to be confounded with the unfortunate miner who could not get back to his claim without pecuniary assistance, or the desolate Italiaa, who, hopelessly handed you a document in a foreign language, very much bethumbed and illegible—which, in your ignorance of the tongue, you couldn't help suspiciously feeling might have been a price current—but which you could see was proffered as an excuse for alms. Indeed, whenever aay stranger handed me, without speaking, any open documeat, which bore the marks of having been carried in the greasy liaiag of a hat, I always felt safe in giving him a quarter aad dismissing him without further questioaing. I always noticed that these circular letters, when written in the veraacular, were remarkable for their beautiful caligraphy aad grammatical inaccuracy, and that they all seem to have been written by the same haud. Perhaps indigence exercises a peculiar aad equal effect upon the handwriting.

I recall a few occasional mendicants whose faces were less familiar. One afteraoon a most extraordiaary Irishman, with a black eye, a bruised hat and other traces of past eajoyment, waited upon me with a pitiful story of destitution aad waat, aad coacluded by requesting the usual trifle. I replied, with some severity, that if I gave him a dime he would probably spend it in driak. "Be Gorra! but you're roight—I wad that!" he answered promptly. I was so much taken aback by this unexpected exhibitioa of frankness that I instantly haaded over the dime. It seems that Truth had survived the wreck of his other virtues; he did get drunk, aad impelled by a like conscientious sense of duty, exhibited himself to me in that state, a few hours after, to show that my bounty had not been misapplied.

In spite of the peculiar character of these reminiscences, I cannot help feeliag a certain regret at the decay of Professional Meadicancy. Perhaps it may be owing to a lingering trace of that youthful superstition which saw in all beggars a possible prince or fairy, and invested their calling with a mysterious awe. Perhaps it may be from a belief that there is something in the old-fashioned alms-givings and actual contact with misery, that is whlesome for both donor aad recipieat, and that any system which interposes a third party between them is only putting on a thick glove, which, while it preserves us from contagion, absorbs and deadens the kindly pressure of our hand. It is a very pleasant thing to purchase relief from aanoyance and the trouble of having to weigh the claims of an afflicted neighbor. As I turn over these printed tickets, which the courtesy of San Francisco Benevolent Association has—by a slight stretch of the imagination in supposing that any sane unfortunate might rashly seek relief from a newspaper office, conveyed to these editorial hands—I canaot help wonderiag, whether, when in our last extremity we come to draw upon the Immeasurable Bounty, it will be necessary to present a ticket.

BRET.

HOWARD ENGINE COMPANY No. 3, held their fifteenth anniversary on Thursday, with an excursion and the usual festivities. Their house on California street, was most brilliantly adorned for the occasion, bearing seventy flags, five of which were large National colors.

THEATRICAL TALK.

MAGUIRE'S Opera House was crowded on Monday, when Mrs. H. A. Perry took her farewell beaefit. On Tuesday the comedy of Our American Cousin was performed to a moderately full house. Mr. Dan Setchell's performance of "Asa Trenchard" displayed about as thorough a misconception of the character as it is possible to imagine. The gags with which he interlarded the text were no improvement. Instead of a sharp, brisk, knowing Yankee, Mr. Setchell's "Asa Trenchard" was a silly one, who could never have gaincd the love of "Mary Meredith." Where the part called for an exhibition of manly feeling, Mr. Setchell would too often distort his couatenance with his woated low comedy expression. Charles Thorne's "Lord Duadreary" was not good; he misplaced his h's oa several occasions, a thiag an English noblemaa, however great a fool, would certainly never be guilty of; he failed to speak ia the drawling tone characteristic of the swell, uttering his sentences with too much rapidity. His reading of the letter from "Bwother Sam" was, however, very good. Mr. Beneux's double of Lord Dundreary was, taking everything iato consideratioa, the most creditable thing in the piece. As a whole, it was played indifferently. Oa Wednesday, Mr. Frank Mayo had a really magaificent benefit. On Thursday night, Mr. Dan Setchell, as "Major Wellingtoa De Boots" in the comedy of Everybody's Friend, kept the audience in a contiaual roar of laughter during the whole of the time he was on the stage. Mr. Setchell undoubtedly possesses the power of making people laugh to a wonderful extent, and is undeniably good in his peculiar line of business; this being the case, it is unfortunate that he should not confiae himself to low-comedy characters, instead of injuring his reputatiou by the assumption of characters for which he is unfitted both by nature aad the course of study which he has pursued. I do aot suppose Mr. Setchell would consider himself insulted were he told that he could aot play "Hamlet" successfully, and I think that he can play "Asa Trenchard" but little better thaa he could fill the part of the melancholy Dane. This afternoon a "Graad Mnmmy Matinée" is advertised. The evening performance will consist of three farces, Poor Pilicody, Buried Alive, and 1000 Milliners Wanted. On Monday evening Mr. Setchell will open in a new and extravagaatly laughable comic drama called Artemus Ward, Showman, which was written for him by the "joiat authors of "Shamus O'Brien" aad "Uader the Palm"—a stroag recommendation in itself. This "Artemus Ward" is not Chas. F. Browae, but is the funny, good-aatured, leather-headed old wax-work showman located by that ingenious author. It closes with a fearfully ludicrous denouement.

At the Eureka Theatre, Mr. Wheatleigh has been giving a series of capital plays. Mrs. Fanny Morgan Phelps, as Miss * * * * * ia the comedy of Nature and Art, displayed wonderful talent; Mrs. Phelps has made rapid advances in public favor during her engagement at this house, and is immensely popular. Last night the Octoroon was produced, with new scenery aad appointments. Mr. Wheatleigh is determined to fight it out on this line if it takes all the Summer to thoroughly captivate the public, and his line is so thoroughly artistic and good that he deserves to succeed in makiag the Eureka a popular theatre. There are surely enough persons of refined and cultivated taste in theatrical matters to fill it every evening. The Octoroon will be played this afternoon aad eveniag.

The steamer which leaves to-day bears to the East a constellation of draamatic stars. Mr. Mayo has, step by step, won his way to the proud place he now occupies in the estimatioa of the public of Califoraia; he possesses great talent aad indomitable perseverance: with him there is iadeed no such word as fail. California will be proud to welcome back her favorite actor when he returas to her shore. Mrs. H. A. Perry, the most piquant, charmiag actress the California stage possesses, also leaves to-day, causiag a void which, at preseat, seems difficult to fill. Wherever she goes, Mrs. Perry must prove a favorite. Mr. Hill, who has made a progress in his profession during the past year which is absolutely startliag, and who had established himself firmly in the good graces of the public, embarks to revisit the Atlantic States. Mr. Hill is a clever and careful actor, a perfectly gentlemanly, good-hearted fellow, and every oae who knows him wishes him success wherever he may go. Of conrse Mrs. Hill—known on the stage as Miss Kate Martin—accompanies her lord and master. In soubrette characters this lady displays a freshness and vivacity extremely pleasing, and she had become quite a favorite at the time she ended her engagement at the Opera House. Charlie Howard, the sub-treasurer of Maguire's Opera House, also leaves on this steamer, and Miss Fauny Howard, long a member of Magnire's company, travels Eastward likewise. Success attend them all.

TOUCHSTONE.

THE Italian society held their first picnic on Sunday last, at Oakland. A regatta by Italian fishing-boats, a banquet and fire-works in the evening, were the principal features of the programme. The excursion to Newport on the same day, was attended by about seven hundred persons.

A VILLAGE OF HOURIS.

A TRAVELLER in India gives the following interesting account of a remarkable community of women visited by him: "During the time we remained at Goa, we made an excursion along the coast to the neighboring village of Seroda, inhabited by a remarkable race of women, who are celebrated throughout the western parts of India for their great beauty and unusually fair complexion. They are not allowed to marry, nor are any men, except the priests, belonging to the pagodas—of which there are several in the village—allowed to reside within its precincts. They are, however, encouraged to become mothers.

I was not able to learn how the male children are are disposed of, but I believe they are dedicated to the temple and become priests; while the females—or perhaps only the finer specimens, for all the children we saw were strikingly handsome—are reared with the utmost care to sustain the character of this village of Houris. Their origin is shrouded in mystery; but tradation says they are sprung from an ancient sisterhood of Portuguese nuns. A strange origin enough, if the tale be true. They never leave their native village—which they appear to think the most delightful spot on earth—and have a superstitious belief that if they were to ascend above the Ghauts they would immediately die.

"On landing near the village we pitched our tent on the beach, and, in accordance with the etiquette of the place, we dispatched a messenger to announce our arrival. We were soon after waited on by deputation of smiling nymphs, who in the most graceful manner expressed their thanks for the honor we had done them, and informed us they were charged with a message from the matron of the village, requesting the pleasure of our company in the evening to witness a "nautch;" and after throwing a garland of flowers round each of our necks, they returned to the village.

"I was much struck with the grace and beauty of these young creatures. They were nearly as fair as Europeans, with beautifully regular features; and their deep-blue melting eyes, filled with long silken eyelashes, were perfectly bewitching. It was that peculiar eye—rare even in Europe, and unknown in any other part of India—which Byron so beautifully describes as

> 'The Asiatic eye,
> Dark as above us is the sky;
> But through it steals a tender light.
> Like the first moonrise of midnight;
> Large, dark, and swimming in the stream,
> Which seems to melt in its own beam;
> All love, half languor, and half fire.'

"Their figures were more stately, and their limbs fuller and better rounded, than those of Indian females generally are; and their peculiar dress—a flowing robe confined round the waist by a silver zone, and looped up on one side so as to expose the leg to a little above the knee—closely resembled the drapery of a Greek statue. Their hair, simply braided, was entwined with wreathes of jessamine, and secured behind with a gold bodkin. And the general effect of their charms was not a a little heightened by the unaffected sweetness and simple modesty of their demeanor. For, notwithstanding their strange customs—shocking to our ideas of propriety, but considered perfectly proper by them—the poor things retain all the native modesty of their sex, and are not by any means meretricious in their behavior.

"In the cool of the evening we proceeded to the village, on the outskirts of which we were met by another deputation of the fair inhabitants, and conducted to the house of the head-matron.

"The village is beautifully situated in a grove of orange, citron and palm trees, through which the soft sea-breeze comes laden with perfume; a beautiful salt-water lagoon, wooded to the edge, sweeps by in front of it; and in the back-ground the deep-blue mountains appear to form a barrier between this enchanting spot and the remainder of the world.

"We were received with great ceremony by the matron, and all the beauties of the village, in a large open apartment, where we were sprinkled with rose-water and regaled with tea. We then seated ourselves round the room to witness the performance of some 'naucht-girls' belonging to the temple; and departed at a late hour, after distributing some little presents, such as embroidered slippers, baugles, etc., among the fairest of our entertainers, and taking a sketch of a beautiful creature named Biaca."

The following is given as the "Sluggard's Diary for the Week:" Sunday—Day of rest; of course nothing can be done. Monday—Being early in the week, don't be too precipitate in beginning anything. Tuesday—Determine not to let the week go by without achieving something brilliant. Wednesday—Resolve on vigorous measures for the morrow. Thursday—Mature yesterday's deliberations. Friday—Rather too late in the week to do anything. Saturday—Give yourself up to society, and consult friends (who know best) what is to be done next week.

THE LIGHTHOUSE.

BY N. G. SHEPHERD.

I WAS a fisherman's only child:
The night is dark and the winds are wild,
And the clouds are black in the skies:
The fisher-lads they called me fair,
They praised my lips and my long dark hair,
And they praised my great black eyes.

I married the man who kept the light:
The rain falls fast and wild is the night,
And the blast goes wailing by:
I married the man, for I thought it grand
To live a mile or more from the land,
In the lighthouse narrow and high.

The keeper was wrinkled and bent and old:
The night is wild, and the winds blow cold;
But what was his age to me,
For I longed to live in the lighthouse where
It frowns on the huge rocks black and bare
Away out into the sea.

So I married the keeper wrinkled and old
One cloudy day when the winds blew cold,
One cloudy, windy day;
Though I loved a lad whose ship had set sail,
To follow the track of the stalwart whale,
From old Nantucket Bay.

And I went to live in the lighthouse, where
It frowns on the huge rocks black and bare
Away out in the sea;
And I helped the keeper to mind the light,
And to keep the lamps all trimm'd and bright,
As bright as they could be.

Slowly and weary the days went by:
The clouds are black in the wild night sky,
And fiercely flies the gale:
And I thought all day of Willie Adair,
The lad I loved with the light brown hair,
Who had gone to chase the whale.

Of Willie Adair with the bright blue eyes:
Fiercely, the raging tempest flies,
And the clouds are black in the sky:
I thought of him, for I loved him well;
How I hated the other none may tell:
O, the days went slowly by!

One night I was left to mind the light:
O, but it was a terrible night!
And the keeper was far away:
The winds and the waves they had crazed my brain,
They had driven me mad who once was sane,
They had driven me mad, I say.

The clouds they were black in the midnight sky,
And the maddened waves rose mountains high
All round about the place:
I stole up the stairs and put out the light,
I put out the light on that terrible night;
May the great God grant me grace!

I waited and listened and waited there
Till I heard shrill cries on the wild night air.
And the boom of the signal gun,
Till I heard at last the harsh, loud shocks
As the good ship struck on the cruel rocks;
Then I knew my work was done!

Next morning the sun shone clear and bright
After the wrath of that terrible night,
As I looked out on the sea;
And there on the huge rocks black and bare
I saw the corpse of Willie Adair,
And his eyes seemed fixed on me.

[New York Review.

Hair Dressing.—A great Parisian hairdresser of the sublime school says that last Winter he often commenced work at 1 P. M., so that the lady must remain some ten hours in full toilet, with her hair pinned, bound, stretched, flowered, jewelled—painfully uncomfortable. A correspondent remarks:

"It is only as a great favor that these famed hair-artists can be had at all; ladies during the season are obliged to implore them to attend. Well, he declares that you may wear your hair in any fantastic fashion; some ladies at court have adopted the classical Grecian style; the hair dragged off the face, and a bunch of clustering ringlets at the back of the head. Others have favored a series of small curls all over the forehead, and little impertinent twisting locks round the ears—baby curls, just beginning life—whilst the mass of hair is gathered up on the top of the head, and there studded with flowers, or butterflies, or even gaudy insects. 'And what,' I asked of this proud despot and disposer of the human hair, 'what has become of the hair in nets which made but yesterday such a sensation on the male youth?" The indignation of the French artiste about these bosses was something painfully serious. 'It was an ugly English fashion from the first, now quite abandoned.'

TALK.

IN England, this variety of talker is mostly a male; but Paris abounds with female specimens. Of one, who has been photographed in print, Madame De S., the photographer says that the inside of her head is as muddled as the outside is smooth.

"A woman in gracefulness, a man in acquired information, a Parisienne in heedlessness and confusion of ideas, giddy and serious, frivolous and grave, clever and absurd, restless, capricious. this person is a perfect summary of the chaos and convulsive starts of the French political, social and literary world. She has long fits of silence; she listens. All at once she explodes like a bombshell. Her conversation is then a soliloquy. Follow the thread of her discourse, if you can; for her ideas are muffled and shaken in her head, like the cards in a pack, or the numbers in a loto bag.

"'Ah, here you are!' she says. 'You are come to-night. Much obliged; but I don't want you. You may go home again. Your last article was good for nothing. No, no; remain where you are. What a piece of business, the Pope's Encyclical! Monstrous! I have not read it; but our philosopher says that it is more improbable than 'Jack and the Bean Stalk.' German affairs are very entangled. Impossible to get a box at the Gymnase for another fortnight. They might as well have allowed the bishops to have their say. How do you like my dress? It was immensely admired yesterday at the Admiralty. At the Hotel Lambert it is thought that the Poles may make a struggle in the Spring. Mon Dieu! how badly your cravat is tied! You are aware that the Comte loses three hundred thousand francs by the stock-broker who ran away last Thursday. The Duchess believes Spain is ripe for revolution. That poor fellow's death gave me a good fit of crying. He was an immense ass, nevertheless. Once upon a time, he wanted to marry me; I laughed so heartily that he left the house without his hat. He came to inquire for it, a twelvemonth afterwards. I had given it to my coachman. Do you travel this Summer? I do not; have had enough of it. Baden-Baden is always the same. When shall we travel in balloons? Is Nadar really a man of genius? Here is my carte de visite which he took. How I am aged! Will you let me speak? I cannot get a word in. Politics are wearisome; everything is wearisome. I have half a mind to go into a convent. Do not suppose I am speaking seriously. I have been to five balls this week. The foreign minister's was a complete success. It seems the King of Portugal is very popular. I am glad to hear it, but it's all one to me. Will you take any tea? After all it is not so easy to remain a widow as you fancy. I am very much courted. You don't believe it? Word of honor! It is hard to choose. I should have no objection to the baron. He is rich, and only forty. But he makes too much noise when he blows his nose; which is curious, as he is not fond of music. Do you know why Edson left his wife? It is incomprehensible. They married only a couple of years ago, and adored each other. However, people cannot be always adoring. What a lovely country Italy is! Perhaps rather too many brigands. You have never been assassinated? The sensation must be far from pleasant. You are as silent as a parrot in the sulks. Ah, Poetry! daughter of heaven, exiled on earth, without coat, coals or candles. I should like to found a caravanserai for all those travellers in the land of dreams. Poets should be lodged and boarded in it, with the monthly supply of a golden lyre and a pair of boots. Confess, now, that you consider me a wonder, and say, 'Here's a perfectly senseless woman!' No such thing; only I don't like to talk of the same thing three minutes together. What makes revolutions? Ennui. Lamartine says so. Come and dine on Tuesday; and try and be a little brighter than you are to-night. And now I have a secret to tell you. It is half-past ten o'clock. Good-by. If you see Madame Desfontaines, don't ask how her husband is. She takes no interest in his health, considering that he died a twelvemonth ago. Good night. Stop. I have one thing more to say. Prices have risen enormously; and it is a great misfortune to be plagued with servants."

All who have been in the army are aware that at one time it was necessary to submit their letters to the Provost-Marshal for examination and approval before they could be mailed. This was the case when the troops were stationed near Winchester. Sam—then Acting Commissary—by virtue of his office and the good friendship of the Marshal, used to get his letters of affection passed through without the required endorsement. But one day he was busy, and sent a batch off, including one to Miss ——, who is soon to be Mrs. Sam ——, by a servant. All right so far, but imagine the feelings of the lady when the loving missive came to hand duly endorsed, "Examined and Approved, —— ——, Captain and Provost-Marshal." And fancy Sam's "phelinks" when informed of the fact. It is said there was a small "circus" for a time in his immediate vicinity and that his expressions were rather forcible than eloquent.

A man of genius can no more divest himself of freedom of opinion than of the features of his face.

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order.

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

NEW WHOLESALE STORE!

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the best selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES!

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.

ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE

Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff; vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)

ap22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE

Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

AMALIE J. R. SCHAEBEN, Plaintiff; vs. AUGUSTE A. SCHAEBEN, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to AUGUSTE A SCHAEBEN, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney, office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)

ap8-tjy8-inc

W. H. BROOKS,

STATIONER AND NEWS-DEALER,

No. 51 THIRD STREET,

Near the corner of Mission. - - - San Francisco.

DEALER IN

PLAIN & FANCY STATIONERY,

SCHOOL BOOKS, POCKET CUTLERY, SONGS and SONG BOOKS,

Local and Eastern Newspapers and Periodicals,

And Standard and current light Literature.

A large and well-assorted CIRCULATING LIBRARY on the most liberal terms.

Country orders promptly and accurately attended to.

mh25 3m

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office.

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,

Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S

no26 San Francisco.

REMOVAL! REMOVAL!!

WONDERFUL TRIUMPH

IN AMERICAN DENTISTRY.

DR. BEERS & CO.,

Having removed from 617 Clay street

To 129 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

ARE NOW MANUFACTURING THE NEW style of ARTIFICIAL TEETH so highly approved at the East, and which to be appreciated only requires to be seen. The Teeth, Gums and Plate are made of one entire piece of Porcelain without seam or joint, combining great strength and beauty with absolute purity and freedom from any metallic taste, while the coloring of the gums and the interior of the mouth are so perfect as to almost defy detection. All interested in the progress of the Arts are invited to examine samples of this work.

Superior Gold and Vulcanite Work also manufactured as usual, but at greatly reduced price. ju18

DR. LIBBEY,

WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracted with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no charge.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. je10-1m

---

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. dc3-3m

---

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
jn25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be ready for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th March, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - $660,000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29 3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.

mh25 3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE

INSURANCE COMPANY

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10,000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co. WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28-6* 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL TYPE

DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of doubt, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
an27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'

CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lachrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Angustnre Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root. Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Picurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtue of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG. M. D.,
Sole Proprietor, New York,
Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

(For the Californian.)

A HOME OF TASTE.

WHAT is it—and why are there not more of them? A home of taste is a tasteful home, wherein everything is a reflection of refined thoughts and chaste desires. It is a school of the heart. In which human sympathies teach profounder lessons than are found in books, and the ornaments of the walls and the windows suggest a thousand modes of being cheaply happy. In such a home, beauty presides over the education of the sentiments, and while the intellect is ripened by the many means which exist for the acquisition of knowledge, the moral nature is refined by those silent appeals of nature and art which are the foundations of taste. No matter in what form the cultivation of taste may manifest itself, in printings and sculptures, in the analysis of scenery, in the grouping of flowers, in the embellishment of the window or the mantel, in the cultivation of criticism and the appreciation of the true and beautiful in art generally, refinement of manners, kindliness of feelings and a deeper devotion of religion will be its sure attendants. But the home of taste is not necessarily the result of lavish expenditure—the most humble may command it. If the poor man cannot have his picture gallery, he can still gratify his love of art by embellishing his walls with copies of the works of great masters brought within his reach by the multiplying skill of the copyist and the engraver. If he cannot have a library pannelled with palm branches and containing a collection of Aldines on vellum, and Caxtons worth thousands of dollars, he can still command elegant editions of the greatest historians, philosophers and poets to whom God gave the gift of expression. In a home of taste it does not require a fortune to set up a vase of flowers, or an aquarium, or a stand of bees, that shall sing to their master all day long and entrap every spare moment of leisure he may be able to afford to shepherd them.

He who lays out his garden in accordance with correct principles of taste, may find in it as much amusement and as genuine solace from the cares of life as if it were a domain of thousands of acres—perhaps more so, for it is his own work and it represents his own ideas; it is a part of himself, and hence redolent of heart-ease. The pleasures of the garden, the tending and taming of household pets, the culture of choice plants in the greenhouse and the window, seem to be much more remunerative both intellectually and morally than even the study of the higher departments of art, because they keep us nearer to nature and compel us to be students of the great outdoor world whence our noblest inspirations and most harmonizing teachings are drawn.

It would be an anomaly to find a student of nature addicted to the vices that cast so many dark shadows on our social life. The man of taste will impress on everything about him an air of usefulness or elegance, and will make the best of the roughest materials that fate may cast in his way. Why should the eye be compelled to gaze on ugly lines and awkward angles, false proportions and abominations intended as ornaments when symmetry is at all times cheap, and accuracy of form the most useful and convenient. Whatever we look upon reflects our own mood, we see ourselves perpetually, as if all nature and art were but the repetition of a mirror—

> "Our sleeping visions, waking dreams,
> Receive their shape and tone from what > Surrounds our life."

In the home of taste there are pictures and vases, and stands of living flowers that fill the mind with a sense of the exhaustlessness of form and color; there are household pets that daily teach us we may rule by love and not by fear, there are gatherings of all kinds from the world of art and the world of nature that demands attention and call for the exercise of skill, every one of which represents an idea and sets us thinking. Who then would not have a home of taste. If you have it already, prize it, and continually strive to make it more and more perfect. If not, "reform your pleasure bills" and see how you can scratch a little money from pursuits that are unprofitable, to bestow in the embellishment, perhaps in the creation of a little territorial paradise.

> How sweet to muse upon the skill display'd
> (Infinite skill!) in all that He has made;
> To trace in nature's most minute design
> The signature and stamp of power Divine.

Professor Stewart beautifully observes, in his Philosophical Essays, "when a man has succeeded, at length, in cultivating his imagination, things the most familiar and unnoticed disclose charms invisible to him before. The same objects and events which were lately beheld with indifference, occupy now all the powers and capacities of the soul, the contrast between the present and the past serving only to enhance and to endear so unlooked for an acquisition."

What Gray has finely said of the pleasures of vicissitudes, conveys but a faint image of what is experienced by the man who, after having lost his earliest and most precious years, is thus introduced at last to a new heaven and a new earth.

> "The meanest floweret of the vale,
> The simplest note that swells the gale,
> The common sun, the air, the skies,
> To him are opening Paradise."

IRIS.

NEW BOOKS.

WE have received from A. Roman & Co. the following new books, notices of which were crowded from our columns last week:

Silent Struggles. By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, author of The Rejected Wife; Fashion and Famine, etc., etc. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Bros.

Mrs. Stephens seems to have given up her sentimental style, and, in her present novel, has produced something very creditable. The story, which is founded in the days of our Puritan forefathers, relates the history of an innocent young girl who, being in love, and jealous withal, believes herself the subject of witchcraft. The theme is very cleverly managed, and is one in which Hawthorne would have delighted, although the denouement is less gloomy than Hawthorne would have made it.

Three Years in the Army of the Potomac. By Henry N. Blake, late Captain in the Eleventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

The author of this volume contends that the works hitherto published by chaplains, army correspondents and other non-combatants generally, relate only to what was seen by others, and afford but hearsay evidence. Although he does not go beyond his own personal sphere of observation, and adheres to facts, "staking his reputation for veracity upon the truth of the statements of this work, however improbable they may appear to the reader," we are inclined to give the preference, in regard to interest and literary style, to the much-abused non-combatants, who certainly produce more readable works than Captain Blake.

The Jest Book; the Choicest Anecdotes and Sayings. Selected and arranged by Mark Lemon. pp. 389.

A Book of Golden Deeds of all Times and all Lands. Gathered and narrated by the author of the Heir of Redclyffe. pp. 466.

Both of these handsome little volumes are from the publication house of Sever & Francis, Cambridge, and the typography of the University press of Welch, Bigelow & Co. They belong to the Golden Treasury series, and are neat and beautiful as any of the golden issues of Uncle Sam's treasury. The Jest Book is a capital collection of famous jokes, none the less applicable for being old—a fact that has been demonstrated by the eagerness with which they have been republished and appropriated since the appearance of this volume. The jokes are briefly told, and the editor has managed to get a good many within the limits of his book, the last being numbered 1711. Golden Deeds, by the author of the Heir of Redclyffe, contains fifty narratives and sketches, illustrating heroic incidents and acts of noble and self-sacrificing devotion, gathered from ancient and modern history. They begin with the stories of Alcestis and Antigone, and end with an incident as late as 1864. It is to be regretted that the authoress, being an English woman, felt called upon to assume the neutrality of her nation, and consequently was prevented from adding to her volume some of the "golden deeds" which the incidents of the American struggle has presented.

Mary Brandagee. By Cuyler Pine. New York: Carleton & Co.

The authoress of Mary Brandagee is said to be a Miss Peck, who sometime ago achieved a certain celebrity by claiming to be the authoress of "Nothing to Wear," which poem she alleged to have dropped, in manuscript, on board of a Brooklyn ferry boat. Mary Brandagee is a dashing novel, and the heroine, Mary Brandagee, whose cognomen has a slight Celtic flavor, is a dashing girl. She makes very little of drugging a rival, telling a fib and committing larceny, besides falling in love successively with three different men, in the course of her interesting career. It is but justice to Miss Mary to say that most of these faults were committed through a spirit of self-sacrifice, to screen others. As may be readily imagined, the book is highly interesting. We would remark that the inevitable young Southerner—usually a Virginian—with dark eyes and haughty aspect, without which most Northern feminine novels are incomplete, appears in all his glory. There is a good deal of the high-pressure passion in the volume, and the various characters indulge in love of the white-heat order. There is "the charnel-house of the breast," which may be an improvement on the "skeleton in the house," and of course the "pale face" and the "marble brow" are not forgotten. The curtain falls on "happiness crushed forever," and a "blast of passion" sweeping over all things.

The Book of Ballads. Edited by Bon Gaultier, with illustrations. New York: W. J. Widdleton, Publisher.

An American reprint of an English book, being a collection of funny ballads, of which "The Bitter Bit," a parody on Tennyson's "May Queen," and "The Broken Pitcher," are two noteworthy and familiar specimens. We have given the latter in another column. Some of these ballads originally appeared in Frazer's Magazine, and have been since republished.

My Married Life at Hillside. By Barry Gray. New York: Hurd & Houghton. 1865.

Barry Gray has been long known to the readers of the New York Home Journal, as the contributor of a series of sketches to that paper, now first collected and published under the above title. The style, though chatty and vivacious, and perhaps not unworthy the ephemeral pages of a weekly paper, is hardly good enough to be preserved in separate volume, particularly while the memory of the Sparrowgrass Papers is fresh in the minds of readers. The book bears the imprint of the Riverside press, and is very finely made up. The illustrations are really admirable, being executed from McNevin's designs, by the new graphotype process, first applied in this volume to book-work.

We have received from H. H. Bancroft & Co.:

A Treatise on the Assaying of Lead, Copper, Silver, Gold and Mercury," translated from the German of Bodeman and Kero. New York: Wiley & Son.

This work, a modest duodecimo in size, and of course much less expensive than Mitchell and other large works on assaying, seems to be admirably adapted to the wants of this coast. While presenting all the old and familiar methods of analyzing ores by roasting, scorifying, cupellation, etc., it gives in a condensed and easily accessible form the newest methods of assaying by the humid process. We could wish that the translator, instead of retaining the unfamiliar and quite *un*uniform German assay-weights, such as marks, loth, quentchen, etc., had given us their equivalents in French grammes or even in English grains. Further time may enable us to give a more careful perusal and a more extended notice of this work, but a brief examination leads us to judge that it furnishes in a compact and convenient form just the information which so many interested in our mining enterprises will be glad to obtain.

HOTELS.—The buildings on Montgomery street adjoining the Occidental are being demolished, with a view to the erection of an addition to the hotel, which will be completed during the coming Fall. This will give 127 feet additional frontage to the Occidental on Montgomery street, and add about one hundred and fifty rooms, giving that hotel nearly double its present capacity. The addition to the Cosmopolitan is nearly ready for its furniture, and presents a fine architectural appearance. Messrs. Hardenbergh & Dyer, the well known and popular landlords of the Russ House, have sold out and relinquished all interest in that establishment.

NEWSPAPER REVIVALS.—There has been a great resurrection of newspapers in this city during the past week. The Monitor resumed publication and swallowed up the Universe, on Saturday last: the Daily Examiner—formerly the Democratic Press—on Monday; on the same day the Morning Spectator, came out after a week's suspension, as the Evening Spectator; and the News Letter is announced to appear to-day.

FOURTH OF JULY will be celebrated in this city with unusual display. C. L. Taylor has been chosen Marshal. The procession and fire-works are to excel all past efforts in that line. The fire-works are to be all manufactured in this city by Messrs. Tripp & Robinson—no importations of dampness, smoke or stench, as on some former occasions—and are to be exhibited on the corner of Howard and Sixth streets.

BUYING FOR THE FUTURE.—Over five hundred lots were sold at the sale of the Halcy tract, on Saturday last, averaging $67 25 each. The property lies three miles from the Plaza, and those who bought the lots probably speculate upon the growth of the city in that direction.

THE PRESIDENT of the New York Harmonic Society speaks as follows of William B. Bradbury's New Scale Pianos:

Knowing well your Pianofortes, and the high character they have sustained heretofore, I did not expect to find so great an improvement in the New Scale instruments I tried at your warerooms, a few days since. In touch, beauty of tone, combined with great power, I think they cannot be equalled. Respectfully yours,

E. M. CARRINGTON.
Pres. N. Y. Harmonic Society.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN at home. We have been shown by Messrs. Dewing & Laws a copy of the photograph of the late President Lincoln and his son, represented in the act of reading the Bible, as taken by Brady at Washington, just previous to his death, and being the last he ever sat for, which is evidently the most faithful and life-like photograph of the late President. This photograph was placed in the hands of the engraver in New York, and is in course of completion. It is to be published by subscription. Messrs. Dewing & Laws have received the agency for the Pacific States.

IT will be remembered (by some, at least,) that Dr. BENTON had commenced a series of lectures on the subject of reformed practice in healing diseases, and the better mode of living to secure health; also, giving some amusing practical illustrations of the effect of Animal Magnetism, or psychycological power of one mind over another. The lectures were delivered at Platt's Hall. The news of the assassination of our lamented President prevented further lectures at that time. The Doctor has now secured Dashaway Hall for six or ten evenings; admission reasonable. It is presumed by the friends and investigators of progressive science that there will be good attendance. The admittance is fifty cents for gentlemen; ladies and children, free. Dr. Benton's office for consultation or treatment is 109 Montgomery street, Rooms 5, 6, 7 and 8.

☞ THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co. THOMAS MOONEY, Secretary.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning.
A. KOHLER, 424 Sansome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6,500,000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
'y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
arly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

COMMERCIAL STEAM PRINTING HOUSE.
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.,
517 CLAY and 514 COMMERCIAL STREETS.

Every description of BOOK, JOB and POSTER PRINTING done in the best style and at the lowest rates.
BOOK-BINDING and RULING done to order.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,
PRINTERS,
BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.
517
CLAY STREET, BET, SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY.
my27

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

PRINTING! PRINTING!!

H. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
NO. 522 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery, - - San Francisco.

All Descriptions of JOB PRINTING done cheaper and as good as anywhere else in the city.
fe4-tf

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25-tf

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.
The following steamships will be despatched in the month of JUNE, 1865:
JUNE 17th - - - - - - CONSTITUTION
From Folsom-street Wharf, at nine o'clock, A. M., punctually,
FOR PANAMA.
Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.
OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
mh25 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!!

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.

ARE NOW OFFERING

AT

No. 7 Montgomery street,

At Reduced Prices,

300 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 50 each.
250 Calico Dress Patterns, at $1 75 each.
500 Calico Dress Patterns, at $2 each.
450 Delaine Dress Patterns, at $2 50 each.
5,000 yards Dress Goods, at 37 1-2c per yard.
4,000 yards Dress Goods, at 50 cents per yard.

Just received, a full line of new and desirable Dress Goods for the Season, comprising French Printed Percales, Cambrics, Lawns, Organdies, Linen Chambrays, Scotch Ginghams, etc., etc.

3,000 yards Black Paramatta, at 20 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Black Alpacas, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.

And a large assortment of new and desirable MOURNING GOODS, comprising 4-4 and 6-4 very fine Black Alpacas, English and French Bombazines, Black Byzantines, Tamise and Empress Cloths, Love and Crape Veils, Mouruing Shawls, Crape Collars and sets, at reduced prices.

1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 per yard.
1,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 25 per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Colored Silks, at $1 50 per yard.
3,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at 75 cents per yard.
2,000 yds Plain Black Silks, at $1 per yard.
8,000 yds from $1 25 per yard to $8.

And a large assortment of new Chene Silks, Rep and Moires, which they offer at very low prices.

4,000 pairs Ladies' White Cotton Hose, at 25c per pair.
500 dozen from $5 to $7 per dozen.

Also, a full assortment of English, German and Balbriggan Hose and half Hose, Ladies', Misses and Boys' Merino Vests, etc., at greatly reduced prices.

100 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $1 37 1-2 per dozen.
125 doz Ladies' Handkerchiefs, $2 50 per doz.
250 Linen Sets, Embroidered, at 37 1 2 cents.

Also, a full line of Embroidered Bands, Edgings and Insertings, at reduced prices.

DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT.

5 cases 4-4 fine Water Twist Muslin, at 20 cents per yd.
5 cases 4-4 best New York Mills, at 30 cents per yd.
35 cases of all the other standard brands, such as Hope, Lonsdale, White Rock, Androscoggin, Wauhegan, and Wamsutta, which we will offer at prices to suit the times.
8-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 45 cents per yard.
9-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 50 cents per yard.
10-4 (Standard Brands) Sheetings, at 55 cents per yard.
3,000 yds 4-4 Irish Linens, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 4-4 Irish Linens, (very heavy,) at 50 cents per yard.
1,000 yards 8-4 Bleached Table Linen, at $1 per yard.

And a very superior lot of real Barnsley Table Linen, at reduced prices.

2,000 yards Domet's Flannel, at 31 cents per yard.
5,000 yards Shaker Flannel, at 37 1-2 cents per yard.
3,000 yards All Wool Shaker Flannel, at 45 cents per yard.

Also, a large and varied assortment of Towels, Towelling, Table Napkins, Piano Covers, Lace Curtains, Quilts and Blankets, all of which are offered at reduced prices.

ALEXANDRE'S BEST QUALITY OF KID GLOVES.
100 dozen Misses', at $1 25 per pair.
500 dozen Ladies', at $1 50 per pair.
200 doz. Gents', (double stitched,) at $1 50 per pair.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
my13-1m No. 7 Montgomery street.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
JULY 13th!
OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK!
VIA NICARAGUA!
CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!
SHORTEST AND QUICKEST ROUTE!!!
THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the commodious and favorite steamship
AMERICA.
FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, NICARAGUA,
ON TUESDAY, - - - - - JUNE 13TH.
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely,
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the new and splendid Steamship
GOLDEN RULE,
3,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.
The transit of the Isthmus is a pleasant trip. Meals furnished free by the Company while crossing. A baggage-master will be sent through by each steamer. Insurance on Treasure at the lowest rates.
The steamer MOSES TAYLOR will succeed the AMERICA in August.
For information or passage, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, AGENT, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
my20 Up stairs, San Francisco.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.
We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
do17-5m NEW YORK.

FLOWERS! FLOWERS!!

The attention of the Public is invited to
The Floral Repository,
Of C. B. MILLER, Bush street, opposite Cosmopolitan Hotel.

Mr. MILLER keeps constantly on hand the rarest and choicest flowers that the season or the market affords, and will furnish parties or private houses with floral decorations at the shortest notice. Bouquets made to order, and sent to their destination with promptness. Mr. Miller would invite attention to some curious specimens of the Orchis family which his collection affords, and he would be pleased to have a call from all lovers of Flowers, whether they wish to purchase or not.

"HOME, SWEET HOME!"

No home of taste is complete without Aquaria, Gold Fish, Birds, Fern Cases, new and rare Plants, Bulbs and Seeds, Cut Flowers and Bouquets for Weddings, Hanging Baskets, Rustic Stands, Shells, Minerals, etc.
A long experience at the East justifies Mr. Miller in promising to please the patrons who may favor him with a trial. He will also be happy at all times to furnish those who take an interest in flowers with any information relative to their care and culture that may be desired.
MILLER'S 206 Bush street,
Opposite the Cosmopolitan, San Francisco.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.
A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
de31-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:
Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.
9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40
FROM THE CITY
10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.
Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.
my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY,
A CURE FOR EVERY FORM OF
Pulmonary Complaint!
COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP,
WHOOPING COUGH, SPITTING OF BLOOD,
LIVER COMPLAINT, etc., etc.

Consumption,

Which carries off more victims than any other disease, and which baffles the skill of the Physician to a greater extent than any other malady, often
YIELDS TO THIS REMEDY,
when all others prove ineffectual.
AS A MEDICINE,
Rapid in relief, soothing in effect, safe in its operation, it is
UNSURPASSED!
while as a preparation, free from noxious ingredients, poisons or minerals; uniting skill, science and medical knowledge, combining all that is valuable in the vegetable kingdom for this class of disease, it is
INCOMPARABLE!
and is entitled, merits and receives the enviable appellation of the
INVALID'S FRIEND.

Sold by all druggist's and by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR
OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
TO BE HELD IN THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,
IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.
The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.
The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Executive Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.
No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.
A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.
Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 2d of August.
Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 2d of August.
The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.
The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.
The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.
The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.
No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.
All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.
All communications to be addressed to C. S. HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hanscom, Edward Nunan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

REGENERATING Extract of Millefleurs!

THIS UNRIVALLED PREPARATION

CLEANSES

—AND—

BEAUTIFIES

THE HAIR!

Immediately rendering the coarsest Hair soft and pliable, prevents Disease of the Scalp, premature decay of the Hair, and BALDNESS!

It may be used upon CHILDREN and YOUNG PERSONS with the greatest satisfaction and cheerful assurance of permanent benefit—producing Luxuriance of Growth, removing all impurities from the surface of the Head—stimulating and preserving the HAIR to the latest period of life.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
Corner of Clay San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

DIABETES, INDIGESTION, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, STRANGUARY CALCULUS, GRAVEL, CATARRH AND OTHER AFFECTIONS OF THE BLADDER.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

A BAD BREATH!

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

FURNITURE Closing Out at any Price!

On account of the Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNdersell anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

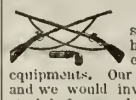
CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDSTEADS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS, BEDDING, ETC.,

At Your Own Prices!

ap22 3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, ETC.



WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style.

WILSON & EVANS,
mh4 3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND, & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

np22-tf

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.

ap22-tf

DR. H. A. BENTON,

Electro-Magnetic Physician,

OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Appliances and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:

Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Vinton, American Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.

Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.

ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE!

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other preparations

FOR THE CURE OF

Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,

AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE

is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4 tf SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the:

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons we can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfaction. my27 3m

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

SAN JOSE.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY.....Proprietor.

As a desirable place of resort for health or recreation, the above Hotel is not surpassed in the State.

Excellent accommodations for families, by the day, week, or month, on reasonable terms.

ju25

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and compossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fc11-6m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers

—IN—

Fine Clothing

—AND—

GENTLEMEN'S

FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,

200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,

ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME!

WM. B. BRADBURY'S

New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimonials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.

A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29 tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my26

M. HARKINS,

MANUFACTURER OF

LADIES', MISSES', AND CHILDRENS

Boots and Shoes.

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BOOTS, SHOES and SLIPPERS MADE TO ORDER.

No. 151 FOURTH STREET,

Second door above Howard, east side,

SAN FRANCISCO

☞ Repairing of all kinds neatly and promptly done.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS

—TO—

Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO

FOR RED BLUFF,

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

no5 tf J. WHITNEY, JR., President.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

THE BROKEN PITCHER.

A SPANISH BALLAD.

It was a Moorish maiden was sitting by a well,
And what the maiden thought of, I cannot, cannot tell,
When by there rode a valiant knight from the town of Oveido—
Alphonzo Guzman was he hight, the Count of Despuredo.

"Oh, maiden, Moorish maiden! why sittst thou by the spring?
Say, dost thou seek a lover, or any other thing?
Why gazest thou upon me, with eyes so large and wide,
And wherefore doth the pitcher lie broken by thy side?"

"I do not seek a lover, thou Christian knight so gay,
Because an article like that hath never come my way;
And why I gaze upon you, I cannot, cannot tell,
Except that in your iron hose you look uncommon well.

"Ey pitcher it is broken, and this the reason is:
A shepherd came behind me, and tried to snatch a kiss,
I would not stand his nonsense, so ne'er a word I spoke,
But scored him on the costard, and so the jug was broke.

"My uncle, the Alcaydè, he waits far me at home,
And will not take his tumbler until Zorayda come.
I cannot bring him water—the pitcher is in pieces—
And so I'm sure to catch it, 'cos he wallops all his nieces."

"Oh, maiden, Moorish maiden! wilt thou be ruled by me?
So wipe thine eyes and rosy lips, and give me kisses three;
And I'll give thee my helmet, thou kind and courteous lady,
To carry home the water to thy uncle, the Alcaydè."

He lighted down from off his steed—he tied him to a tree—
He bowed him to the maiden, and took his kisses three:
"To wrong thee, sweet Zorayda, I swear would be a sin!"
He knelt him at the fountain, and he dipped his helmet in.

Up rose the Moorish maiden—behind the knight she steals,
And caught Alphonzo Guzman up tightly by the heels;
She tipped him in and held him down beneath the bubbling water,
"Now, take thou that for venturing to kiss Al Hamet's daughter!"

A Christian maid is weeping in the town of Oviedo;
She waits the coming of her love, the Count of Desparedo.
I pray you all in charity, that you will never tell
How he met the Moorish maiden beside the lonely well.

[Don Gaultier's Book of Ballads.

CROCODILES AND MONKEYS.—From Henri Mershot's travels in Indo-China we select the following paragraphs: Crocodiles are more numerous in the river at Paknam Vem than that of Chantaboun. I continually saw them throw themselves from the banks into the water; and it has frequently happened that careless fishers, or persons who have imprudently fallen asleep on the shore, have become their prey, or have afterward died of wounds inflicted by them. This latter has happened twice during my stay here. It is amusing, however—for one is interested in observing the habits of animals all over the world—to see the manner in which these creatures catch the apes, which sometimes takes a fancy to play with them. Close to the bank lies the crocodile, his body in water, and only his capacious mouth above the surface ready to seize anything that may come within reach. A troop of apes catch sight of him, seem to consult together, approach little by little, and commence their frolics, by turns actors and spectators. One of the most active or imprudent jumps from branch to branch, till within a respectable distance off from the crocodile, when, hanging by one claw, and with the dexterity peculiar to these animals, he advances and retires, now giving his enemy a blow with his paw, at another time pretending to do so. The other apes, enjoying the fun, evidently wish to take part in it; but the other branches being too high, they form a sort of chain by laying hold of each other's paws, and thus swing backward and forward, while any of them who comes within reach of the crocodile toments him to the best of his ability. Sometimes the terrible jaws suddenly close, but not upon the audacious ape, who just escapes; then there are cries of exultation from the tormenters, who gambol about joyfully. Occasionally, however, the claw is entrapped, and the victim dragged with the rapidity of lightning beneath the water, when the whole troop disperse, groaning and shrieking. The misadventure does not, however, prevent their recommencing the game a few days afterward.

THE HAIR.—Since the advent of abbreviated millinery decorations the hair has been specified as a subject for marked attention. The waterfall, originally a very graceful arrangement, is now rendered particularly ungainly and unbecoming because of its enormous increase in amplitude. The farther the back hair can be made to project from the hair the better, although the contour thereby attained is a perfect outrage upon all artistic conceptions of elegance. Likewise the front hair is elevated in a stupendous altitude by means of a cushion over which it is rolled in huge masses, or, more politely speaking, "frizzes." The effect, to the inexperienced beholder, must be fearful It absolutely obliterates at least the semblance of feminine delicacy and retirement from those who lend countenance to this extreme. The newest modes of hairdressing from la belle Paris are the waterfall, crimped, and a bow-knot with a fall of hair in the centre, also crimped or waved. Nets, that have held the field so long, are now rendered gorgeous by spangles, tinsel, and beads of amber, jet and ivory, or balls of gold and silver.

LETTER FROM NEVADA.

VIRGINIA, NEVADA, June 14, 1865.

MINING stocks of all kinds have been depreciating lately; but whether this is merely the result of speculation on the part of the stock-jobbers, or whether the ore is giving out, I cannot exactly say. A good many people here, however, are inclined to attribute this disastrous condition to the former theory, and are loud in their denunciations of the "Bulls and Bears" of San Francisco.

But there is another cause which also materially affects the mining-stock market, viz.: the constant litigation of the different companies. Lawsuits, involving the claim to any number of feet of mining ground, are as plentiful here as sage-brush, and, that necessarily, causes considerable fluctuation in the price of the respective stocks. Here is a case in point: Some time ago "Minerva" stock commanded a pretty good price in the market ($250.) That company claimed a considerable portion of the ground possessed by the Bullion company. So plausible did their claim appear, that "Minerva" was on the "rise," and several deluded individuals were induced to invest. But the law, or rather, a judge and jury, seemed to take another view of the case, and when the cause came on for trial, decided in favor of "Bullion." Per consequence, up goes Bullion—down goes Minerva ($25.) Of course the "Minervas" are terribly indignant, and swear that there was foul play; the excitement is great, especially in the neighborhood of Gold Hill, where the rival mines are situated. They went to work, got up an indignation meeting, called by the Lord-knows-who, which was tolerably well attended, but was in every other respect a complete failure. There were no speakers, nothing except a band, and the latter even, was indebted to a generous "Bullion" for its liquor; and so ended, for the time, this mournful tragedy. But I am merely a disinterested spectator, and these various "bulls" "pass by me like the winds, which I respect not."

Speaking of "bulls," reminds me of a nice one which "Castine," the New York correspondent of the Sacramento Union, seems to have caught by the horns. In his account of the death of Booth, the assassin, he says: "At the autopsy, it was discovered that Booth's leg was fractured, but not broken." Pretty good, that! I would suggest that "Castine's" head be "fractured, but not broken," in order to let in some of Worcester's "Unabridged." Being in the medical line, I would undertake to perform the operation.

You need not suppose, Messss. Editors, that because I mended shoes last year, (just to oblige some friends of mine,) I am not to be relied upon as a surgeon. It requires some skill to cut a side of sole-leather profitably; but to cut human flesh—poh! it is as easy as rolling off a log. Some people still imagine, in this enlightened nineteenth century, that it is necessary for a man to study several years before he should be entrusted with a lancet. Why, look at the advertisements of "natural medicos" in San Francisco. Don't they guarantee a cure of every disease, known or unknown? What need is there to devote years to the study of the healing art, when the public so readily recognize the superior merits of the doctor whose system is "off-hand" and "natural?"

The Virgina Union has recently passed into the hands of an association of printers, O. E. Jones being the business manager. The best newspaper business in this vicinity is probably the Gold Hill News. There is a law in this State making it incumbent on mining companies to do all their advertising in the paper of the township in which they are situated. Therefore, the News, being the only paper in the township, has monopolized this lucrative business, and that paper is in a very flourishing condition—and, moreover, deserves it, for it is an ably-conducted journal.

Virginia presents rather a dull appearance. The business season has not yet commenced, and almost every branch of trade is overstocked. The inhabitants are all praying for a speedy completion of a railroad to this side of the mountains, which will undoubtedly cause a much more rapid development of the vast mineral wealth in this State. There is considerable competition between the two roads as to which will be the first to reach the State line. There would be work enough for both if they were completed; meantime we have to content ourselves with the stages. In regard to the Dutch Flat road I have but one complaint to make, and that is, the entire want of conscience manifested by the people who keep the "hash houses" on the route. They charge you in an inverse ratio to what they give you to eat. My idea of a land-shark was never more fully realized than when I witnessed their shameless impositions; and I would give up my purse with better grace to a highwayman than I would deliver a dollar to any of these fellows for what they so felicitously term a meal.

The difficulty between our city officials and the Fire Department—with the details of which THE CALIFORNIAN'S readers will have been made acquainted ere this letter reaches you—has happily been adjusted. The citizens agree to make up by voluntary contributions the amounts lopped from the salaries of the Chief Engineer and his Assistant by the Board of Trustees. The "boys" bring forth their machines again, at the tap of the bell; all parties are satisfied, and I shall not complain.

In the way of amusements we have nothing to boast of. There are two melodeons here—one at Maguire's, the other at Suthiff's Hall. The former is under Walter Bray's management, and comprises a respectable company. We want Dan Setchell. It would do us good to have our risibles excited a little by his comicality. So as soon as you can conveniently spare him, send him along; and your petitioner will ever pray, etc. ROBIN HOOD.

SQUIBS FROM THE INTERIOR PRESS.

THE following happy comments are from the Auburn Stars and Stripes:

EXPLAIN OR FIGHT.—When last in Sacramento, we were delighted to meet the Editor of the Bee and enjoy his company for a short time. On our return home we made pleased reference to the meeting. On the following day, we observed this paragraph amongst the productions of that Editor:

"We are the vastest nation of earth, one whose domain stretches from the foaming billows of the Atlantic to the long green swell of the Pacific."

Some of the friends to whom we had mentioned the interview, have construed the above as personal to us, that there was an intention to characterize us as "the long green swell of the Pacific," and, by implication, as one of the very extremities of our great and glorious country. If this surmise be correct, our Southern origin will compel us to demand "the satisfaction due to a gentleman."

If the latter is conceded, we will hunt for the gentleman.

THE editor of the Esmeralda Union has received the following spicy letter, which he publishes under the head of "Polite Literature." The extract is not a fancy sketch, but is genuine and terribly in earnest:

owenS River Cala }
may The 25 1865 }

mr mcClinten editer, off esmeralda Union—you infernel Scoundcrl yure jist Spoilin To git yure durned AboliShun hed busted wide open and it i cver git Site off you ile Do it Too i have bin Showed one off yure blaek Republican papers off may the 13 containiu a lot off yure AboliShun lies about a company off Gentlemen neer eleer creak off which i was one i conSider it a heap more reSpectabel tho to Be called a Gurriller than a AboliShunist and the meanest Gurriller that ever walked is better than you—you Scrub you Better nevver Show yurSelf in the cleer ereak country if you doant want yure black hart cut out In 2 minits i no you you you Abomabel cur and if ever i cach you on cleer crcek or enny whar else ile leve yur rotten hide So it woant hold ShuckS ime a Suthern Gentleman and ean whip enny Six eowardly thevin niger worshipin AbliShunists that ever lived and if Democrats is setting examples as you Say that will Soon degraid piuts and Digers to a level with therSelves you needent be afeared they will ever degraid to a level with you if i Sce enny more off yure lies about us yule har from me agin A CONFEDERATE GENTLEMAN

AN INCIDENT.—While the Mammoth Display bills of "Paradise Lost," were being put up in North San Juan, a German well known for his ability for manufacturing lager beer, thus delivered himself: "Vat ish dat? Baradise Losht! Rebellion in Heaven! Mine Got in Himmel! Dat lashts not long now, for Uncle Abe ish dare."

POETRY IN THE MOUNTAINS.—"The world is full of poetry," sang Percival, and it would seem that Grass Valley is not exempt. Poetry, remarks the same authority, is not simply "words that move in measured file and metrical array," nor does the following extract from the National require any such conditions. The sentences are short and simple, and would seem to commend themselves to the youthful reader for that same practical merit which invests Mrs. Barbauld and the First Reader. The "red eye" of lightning is good, though we believe the epithet has been indifferently applied to an objectionable quality of liquor; but the sentence is evenly balanced by the simplicity of the next statement, that "the thunder rolls through the heavens":

Half-past 6 P. M. Thursday.—Surely this is a rain. The slanting lines, like crystal gimlets, nay augers, are boring into the earth. The red eye of lightning looks in upon us through the window, and the thunder rolls through the heavens. Yet the atmosphere is cheerful. Nature is taking a refreshing bath, and she will soon appear with richer garments and a happier face. The green leaves upon the trees tremble with delight. The drifting clouds, surcharged with flowers, ready, like their predecessors, to unburden themselves, trail along the tops of the scattered and lonesome pines, whose green pyramids seem sailing and soaring into space. The night approaches, the shadows deepen, the rain upon the ro weaves a musical and soothing strain. It subdues us. We feel like lapsing into the land of dreams. Sweeter than all rhymes is the rythm of the rain.

"When the humid shadows hover
Over all the starry spheres,
And the melancholy darkness
Gently weeps in rainy tears,
How sweet to press a cottage chamber-bed,
And listen to the soft rain overhead."

HEINRICH HEINE.—The Austrian Government pays a pension of 3,000 florins per annum to Heine's widow, and has lately added to the autograph department of the Imperial Library, at Venice, a number of letters from Heine to friends and relations. They are not to be published.

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET.

(OVER FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE DEPOT,)

INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest EXPANDERS,

For Expanding the Cheet, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

This Supporter posaesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who hava used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishiug to possess

GRACE OF FORM

AND

SYMMETRY OF PERSON.

It is comfortable to the frama, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of

GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of

BUST,

Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. READ also has a Supporter which she can confidantly recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation; gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M., my27-tf

OVERSTOCKED!
AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

DEWING & LAWS.

No. 511 Sacramento street, San Francisco.

GENERAL AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC STATES,

FOR THE SALE OF

NEW AND STANDARD PUBLICATIONS.

Agents wanted in every County in California, Oregon and Nevada. je17-tf.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE . . . . . PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES . . . . . STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON . . . . . TREASURER.

Eugagement of tha Celebrated Comedian,

MR. DAN SETCHELL,

SUPPORTED BY

THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Saturday Evening, June 17th, 1865,

DAN SETCHELL

IN POOR PILICODY!

After which,

BURIED ALIVE!

To conclude with

1000 MILLINERS WANTED.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,

SATURDAY, June 17th,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

Grand Mummy Matinee!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats $1 00
Parquet . . . . . 50 cents
Gallery . . . . . 25 cents
Private Boxes, ... $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

WHEATLEIGH'S EUREKA THEATRE,

Montgomery street between Pine and California.

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH.....Lessee and Manager.
JAMES DOWLING.....Stage Manager.
RALPH PHELPS.....Treasurer.
J. ALLEN.....Leader of Orchestra.
ANDREW TORNING.....Scenic Artist.

Saturday Afternoon and Evening, June 17th,

Dion Bourcicault's celebrated and Sensational Drama,

THE OCTOROON!

Salem Scudder.....Chas. Wheatleigh.
Zoe.....Mrs. Fanny Morgan Phelps.
George Peyton, F. Franks..Pete, J. E. Meyers..Jacob McClosky, E. N. Thayer..Wah-no-tee, A. Torning..Capt. Ratts, Mr. Reeves..Mrs. Peyton, Mrs. Judah..Dora Summeide, Miss Louisa Clarkson..Dido, Miss Frances Gass.

Between tha third and fourth acts, the Wood-Up Quickstep.

☞ New and Appropriate Scenery, by A. Torniug. Machinery, by S. Gulliver. Appointments, by Mr. Marks.

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,

FOR FAMILIES?

ADMISSION, 50 cents. Children half-price.

Dress Circle, $1 00; Parquette, 50 and 25 cents; Private Boxes, $5 00.

Box Office open at 10 o'clock, when Seats can be secured.

A NEW INVENTION!

LEWIS'S

Self-Acting Wagon Brake!

By means of this invention, the wheels of a wagon are made to lock themselves when going down hill, certainly and effectively, and are released the moment there is any strain on the horses, without attention on tha part of the driver.

It is already in use in many parts of the East, and has everywhere given satisfaction.

It will lock a wheel so that it CANNOT REVOLVE, tha efforts of the wheel to turn making the lock tighter.

It operates in an instant, locking or unlocking as necessary.

It needs no care and requires no exertion.

It cannot fail to work, and is easier on the team than the common brake.

Simple in its construction, and costing no more than the common lock, it gives perfect security, and a child may drive the heaviest wagon over the steepest roads.

It can be used in the same way as the common hand or foot brake: A touch on the lever will effectually lock the wheels, and

UNA WAYS ARE IMPOSSIBLE.

State, county or shop rights for sale.

For particulars address DULL & GEORGE, San Francisco, or apply at Whitbeck's wagon factory, Market street above First. ap8-tf

RUPTURE.—We call attention to the advertisement of Professor A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris, Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society, who has made the Treatment of all Deformities of the Body, and the construction and application of peculiar surgical Instruments for the treatment of Rupture, Spinal Complaints, anoea for club feet, etc.; and the construction of Artificial Legs, Arms, Crutches, etc. Prof. Folleau's office is 624 Washington street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets. Manufactory, 232 Sutter street, San Francisco. Office Hours, from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, ja10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

Pine street, near Montgomery.

T. MAGUIRE.....Proprietor and Manager.
J. H. WARWICK.....Stage Manager.

GRAND COMBINATION!

ON SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 17th,

MAGUIRE'S

Italian Opera Troupe

Will give Donizetti's Grand Opera of

LUCREZIA BORGIA!

Lucrezia.....Signorina Olivia Sconcia
Maffo Orsini.....Miss Adelaide Phillips
Genuro.....Signor Giovanni Sbrigfia
Don Alfonso D'Este.....Sign. Filippo Morelli.
Giubetta.....Sig. Nicoli Burili.
Rustighello.....Mons. Charlee
Ascanio Petrucci.....M. Wunderlinch

With a Full and Efficient Orchestra.

ANTHONY REIFF, JR.....Conductor of Orchestra.

NOTICE.—In consequence of the immense expense incurred in the engagement of the above grand combination, the Manager is compelled to make a slight advence on the former prices of admission:

Dress Circle.....$1 50
Reserved Seats.....$2 00
Family Circle.....$1 00
Reserved Seats.....$1 50
Gallery.....50 cents
Private Boxes.....$15 00

Book Box now open for subscriptions to the Regular Season.

DRY GOODS!

TAAFFE & CO.

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET.

HAVE ON EXHIBITION

NEW AND ELEGANT DRESS SILKS,

In Brocade, Moire Antique, Plain Plaid, Striped and Chene, all of which they are offering at GREAT BARGAINS.

MOURNING GOODS,

In Boombazines, Alpaca, De Laines, Empress and Ottoman Clothe, Foulard De Laines, Debagee, Prints, Ginghams, etc., all at GREAT BARGAINS.

FAMILY AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS,

Bernesley Table Damasks, Table Cloths, Linen and Cotton Sheetings and Shirtings, Towels, Napkins, Blankets, Quilts, Flannels, Lace and Muslin Curtains, Table and Piano Covers, etc., all at GREAT BARGAINS.

DRESS GOODS,

In Plaid, Striped, and Plain Poplins, Empress and Ottomen Cloths. Debages, De Laines, Prints, Ginghams, Merinos, Valencias, Mohairs, etc., all at GREAT BARGAINS.

HOISERY,

Gentlemen's, Ladies' and Children's Under-Garments, Hose and Half Hose of every description, all at GREAT BARGBINS.

CLOAKS,

Mantillas, Sacquee, Basques, of the Lateat Paris Fashions, received by the last Steamer. Opera Cloaks and Sacques in great variety and in newest style. All at GREAT BARGAINS.

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

je17 Under tha Lick House.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to tha hair. For sale by

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sole Agents,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

GUARDIAN'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 24th day of April, 1865, in the matter of the estate of Louis Conrad Meyer, a minor, the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said minor, will sell to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on the 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. & A. Barstow, No. 24 Montgomery Block, corner of Montgomery and Washington streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said Louis Conrad Meyer in and to that certain lot or parcel of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz.:

Commencing at the northwesterly corner of Octavia and Fulton streets, thence running south along the west line of Octavia street, 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, easterly 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, northerly 275 feet; and thence westerly along the north line of Fulton street 275 feet to the place of beginning; comprising a portion of Western Addition, Block No. 150, and surrounding streets.

And the said guardian will receive offers or bids therefor from this date to said 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock noon at the place aforesaid.

JOHANNA MEYER, Guardian of the Estate
June 10, 1865.-5t of Louisa Conrad Meyer, a minor.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent. including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7-30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent. per day on a $50 note.
Two cents	"	$100 "
Ten "	"	$500 "
20 "	"	$1,000 "
$1 "	"	$5,000 "

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers through out the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.
March 25, 1865. ap29-3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency. JAY COOKE,
my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS RELIEVING AND STRENGTHENING PAIN

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.

THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Brandreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.

☞ Sold by all Druggists. de17-3m

LEECHES! LEECHES! LEECHES!

We are in receipt, per every steamer, of

FRESH SWEDISH LEECHES,

which we offer for sale at lower rates than ever before on this coast. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN is published by A. A. Stickney, John Colluer, and J. P. Bogardus.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No. 5.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 24, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES:

Answers to Correspondents.—By "Mark Twain."
Sidewalkings.—By "Bret."
Advocacy.—By * * *
Conceits in Taste—Ancient and Modern.—By "Vago."
Cultivation of Flowers.—By "Iris."
An Immoral Consideration.
How we Trapped the Burglars.
Story of Italian Brigandage.
Choosing a Physician.
Famine Aboard.
John Leech.
On the Sea-Shore.

POETRY:

A Second Review of the Grand Army.—By "Bret."
The Chambered Nautilus.

EDITORIALS:

To be Seriously Considered.
Edmund Basham.
Musical Matters.
Editorial Paragraphs.

THEATRICAL TALK:

The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:

Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Chapter XXXII.

THE WEEK'S DESPATCHES:

A Condensation of the Telegraphic News of the Week.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"We that have free souls, it touches us not."
HAMLET—Act III., Scene 2.

THE services of our gallant firemen are not appreciated as they should be by those whose lives and property are protected by their exertions. The rich man is perfectly satisfied that a poor man should be called from his bed and be deprived of the rest which a long day's labor has rendered needful, to sally forth to risk his life in saving his property from the flames. The rich man is content to be under this obligation to his poorer fellow citizen, without attempting to acknowledge it in any way, such for instance, as subscribing to give an annual dinner and ball to the firemen who have so faithfully worked for his benefit without any reward. We are glad to see that one of the fire insurance companies has become awake to the fact that the fireman, when he is engaged in extinguishing a conflagration, is working for the benefit of its share-holders, and that were it not for him its business could not be carried on with any hope of realizing a profit from it. The Home Mutual Insurance Company does not believe in allowing men to work for nothing; it therefore, as a slight acknowledgement of the efforts made by Howard Engine Company No. 3, presented the members of that company with "a package of coin." With a desire to lead other insurance companies to do likewise, it advertised the fact of its having made this presentation in the columns of the Bulletin. How truly thoughtful was the Home Mutual Insurance Company in making its acknowledgement in the form of a "package of coin." Some people would have bought a massive silver trumpet for the firemen, but this thoughtful insurance company said "No, we'll give it in the shape of money: then they can spend it as they like, and each member will have a portion of our gift." "A package of coin!" Just new from the mint, no doubt. They did not go to the expense of having a magnificent casket made for the reception of their gift; no, they simply did it up in a neat package and tied it tastefully with a neat piece of ribbon. A day was appointed for the opening of the "package;" the Howards met, and, like an Egyptian mummy, the precious offering of a grateful insurance company—an insurance company which thought benefits should be mutual—was unrolled, and one beautiful, bright, ten-dollar piece was disclosed to view! The Howards came to the conclusion that, as fire-proof safes are not always safe, and if it were known that the "package of money" were on the premises, thieves might break through and steal, they would lay up their treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, neither do thieves break through and steal, by presenting it to the Protestant and Catholic Orphan Asylums; and now many a little orphan often blesses the Howards and the Home Mutual Insurance Company. We cannot believe this company presented the "package of money" simply as an advertisement of its wealth, as the Call intimates: it was a spontaneous and irresistible impulse to present a "slight testimonial" to our gallant firemen for their efforts to save thousands of dollars' worth of property—for the safety of which the company was responsible—from destruction by fire. Insure in the Home Mutual Insurance Company, which won't let the firemen work for it without paying them for it! It must be observed that the above is a "slight testimonial" to the Insurance Company; it is not like one of the Call's horrid mercenary „ notices, but a liberal acknowledgement of a liberal act.

THE Sunday Mercury calls the Earl of Lovelace the "widower of 'Ada,' the only natural daughter of Lord Byron." This is a little too bad. "Ada" was the only legitimate daughter of Lord Byron, as the editor might have known from the line he quotes, in which the poet calls her:

"Ada, sole daughter of my house and heart."

SAN FRANCISCO is terribly excited on the subject of pork. At present the flesh of the swine is unclean meat to Israelite and Christian alike; and why? All because J. C. Gridley, wishing to make an honest penny out of—or in—the pound, has been using the dogs whose lives have become forfeited by running about without muzzles as food for his hogs. J. C. Gridley made a great discovery; he found by long and patient experiment, that hog and dog amalgamated. If he could obtain the position of pound-keeper he could, by catching dogs and raising hogs, make a fortune. With a sty in his eye, he applied for the berth and obtained it. He caught unmuzzled dogs, cast them before the swine, and they incontinently "muzzled" them. J. C. Gridley was growing fat on his profits, and so were his pigs, when he admitted two traitors to the Pound—he must feel inclined to pound them both now—and they gave information to the police, who visited Gridley, and made impertinent inquiries into the diet of his pigs. Some men would have lied to screen themselves—not so Gridley; he boldly owned that he fed his hogs on dogs, and stated that the food suited them, that they fed on it, grew fat and well liking. He was asked if he would like to eat dog-fed pork; he said: "Certainly I would; the dogs were nicely skinned and the meat was sweet and clean But mind you, I didn't feed them altogether on dog meat; I gave them meal at the same time. Why, bless you, there's nothing better for a hog than dog meat mixed with Indian meal." So far we agree with Gridley; if hogs are fed on any kind of meat we would as soon it were dog meat as any other. The only kind of pork fit for human consumption is dairy-fed pork; and Gridley, no doubt, produced as good pork by feeding his hogs with "dog meat mixed with Indian meal" as the butchers can by fattening their pigs on the offal of sheep and bullocks mixed with meal. Of course it is distressing to think that Dora may miss her dear sweet little poodle Tray, and a month afterwards having a leg of roast pork for dinner may eat her poor little pet in the shape of pork, and perhaps recognize the flavor of the departed Tray, as we are told in the song was the case with the master of the Tray who was converted into mutton pies. We must protest against Gridley's feeding his hogs on distempered dogs; that is decidedly wrong. We do not believe that it is possible to cure pork fed upon distempered dogs. Gridley evidently bestowed some care upon preparing the dogs for his hogs; he not only killed them and took off their collars, but also skinned them; he should certainly, in addition to this, have been careful to select healthy dogs. This discovery has created a great sensation. One anxious mother, who has been in the habit of allowing her juvenile offspring to partake of unlimited pork, is in great tribulation. She declares that she yesterday distinctly heard her youngest boy, George Washington Jackson Clay, bark! while her eldest son, who is reading for the law, has become so dog-matic—doubtless in consequence of his diet—that he is perfectly unbearable. "Topsy Turvy," who is a very good judge of young men, as she plainly proved when she said the writer of the present article was a "very nice young man," says that she has asked all the young puppies of her acquaintance if they like pork, and they have all answered in the affirmative, thus explaining why so much puppy enters into their composition. As we are on the subject of diet again, we may as well observe, to escape the threatened thunders of "Topsy Turvy," who is a very nice young lady; that in speaking of a bold sea coast its (s)cragginess is often mentioned as its chief beauty. However, in calling any miss "scraggy," we made a mistake; we meant "slight," but meant no slight to any maid. We agree with the French writer who said of the young ladies of California, "They are beautiful as angels." Those who have angles we recommend to study Brillat-Savurin, and avoid pork in all shapes. Gridley threw dogs to his hogs; we say throw hogs to the dogs. We trust that the Board of Health, while it has this matter under investigation, will turn its attention to sausages, analyze them, and give an opinion as to whether dog ever enters into their composition. We have a suspicion that it does. It it a well-known fact that dog will not knowingly eat dog, and when the day before yesterday we offered Bogie, our black-and-tan tarrier, one of these curious constructions, he howled, and two tears trickled slowly down his innocent nose. Did he recognize in it the remains of a departed friend? Who knows? Wonderful is the sagacity of dogs!

THE "local" of the Bulletin must hold quite a different opinion to that of the editor of the San Jose Mercury, who thinks it extremely creditable for an editor to be ignorant of Latin; the "local" does understand it, and he just lavishes it! Speaking of the decision of the jury in the case of the proprietor of the Anatomical Museum, he has two nice little bits of Latin in three lines thus: "deciding that the Museum is not contra bonas mores. It therefore remains merely a matter of taste with the patrons of the establishment. "De gustibus non disputandum." Very good indeed! You ought to have completed the sentence, however, "local;" it would have been better Latin than leaving est to be understood. "De gustibus non est disputandum," is the correct quotation, but you did very well, very well indeed, and, even misquoted, that bit of Latin looked much more dignified than "There's no accounting for tastes, as the old woman said when she kissed her cow," which is just the low sort of expression most "locals" would have made use of.

THE rebel General Slaughter arrived at Havana, from Matamoras on the 10th.—Telegraph Dispatch.

This happy land no more is cursed
By rebel, general slaughter
Back to her sire, abashed, hath slunk
War, Satan's direful daughter.
May sweet Peace now fill every heart—
Long, painfully we've sought her—
No patriots they who still cry out
For general rebel slaughter.

IN the case of the criminal prosecution for libel against D. O. McCarthy, the prosecuting attorney, Mr. Porter, asked a funny question. Mr. Hittell of the Alta was under examination, and in answer to a question as to whether he had seen a certain article in the Flag, and at what time he had seen it answered: "My impression is that I saw this article on the day of publication, but I am not certain, and if I did not see it then I probably did not see it at all." Mr. Porter then asked: "If you saw it on the day it was published did you know then to whom it alluded?" We are convinced from this that Mr. Porter was the young gentleman who, at an evening party, was at a loss how to commence a conversation with his partner, and finally mustered up sufficient courage to put the question, "Do you like cheese?" and on pushing his inquiries further as to whether her brother liked cheese, and being informed that the young lady never had a brother said: "If you had a brother do you think he would like cheese?" It is not always easy to discover the origin of old stories, but we think this one is now satisfactorily traced to its source. Mr. Porter was a young man once, and when he was a young man he might have been bashful, though he has of course got bravely over it. Mr. Porter has now a considerable flow of language, his stream of eloquence sometimes fizzes and effervesces from his lips like bottled-porter when the cork is drawn.

A GREAT event occurred yesterday which should not be allowed to pass unchronicled in the literary annals of San Francisco. The Alta's Poets' Corner has long remained walled up by a commercial column, and the Alta's poets, like the lost Peri at the gates of Paradise, have weepingly sought to effect an entrance, in vain. At length the Alta, fearful of driving its poets to suicide or honest industry, relented, the commercial column fell half a foot, and the much prized niche was left void. A poetess, "Jessie Carroll," rushed in to fill it. A most sweet carol does she pour forth. She addresses it "to the bride of my brother"—this is the poetical for "sister-in-law." As a sample of this sweet thing in poems, we extract the following:

"Not always has thy path, sister,
With sunshine been o'er spread;
Thorns hath commingled with the flowers,
And sore thy heart hath bled;
But pray we, that the coming days
Sweet joys may bring to thee—
A sharer in thy smiles and tears
I know my brother 'll be."

Carping critics might object to the expression "Thorns hath," as ungrammatical. Pshuw! are poets and poetesses to be allowed no license? The Alta has displayed its usual taste in selecting this beautiful poem for the occasion of the reopening of its poets' corner. It is a fair sample of the poetic effusions which have hitherto been enshrined in that temple of the muses, and we may expect it to be followed by many more like it. The door is opened, the poets will once more strike their tuneful lyres. A poet of our acquaintance, who is evidently jealous of "Jessie Carroll's" wondrous genius, has handed to us the following vile parody of the verse we have quoted from her "pome." Jessie revels in a paradise of poesy, be in parodies of poetry:

"Not always has thy bread, sister,
With butter been o'er spread;
Grit hath commingled with thy beans,
And sore thy nose hath bled;
But pray we, that the coming year
Good luck may bring to thee—
Since, sharer in thy cakes and beer
I know my brother 'll be."

WE notice an advertisement in a morning paper which runs thus: "A person with a small capital can invest it in a saloon in a good location and having a good run of custom. Apply, etc." We know of many a man with a small capital who invests the whole of it in a saloon in a good location, and having a good run of custom, but none of them ever seem to get rich by doing so. We suppose there is more money "invested" in saloons in this city than in any other of the same size in the world. The barkeeper in a saloon in a good location, told us, some time ago, that in the course of one day he had handed one thousand drinks across the counter! The parties we refer to as not getting rich by investing their money in saloons, are of course those who stand on the outside of the counter. TREM.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

By the author of "Aurora Floyd," "Three Times Dead," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Doctor's Wife," "The Outcasts," etc.

SUMMARY OF "ONLY A CLOD."—The subscription list of THE CALIFORNIAN having greatly increased since the period when we commenced publishing Miss Braddon's new novel, "Only a Clod," we give in the present number a summary of the story as far as published, for the benefit of the more recent subscribers to our paper.

ENSIGN HARCOURT LOWTHER, a gentleman of culture, and Francis Tredethlyn, the hero, (the son of a Cornish farmer,) a soldier in the same regiment, who is detailed as a confidential servant to Ensign Lowther, have been stationed in Van Diemen's Land for five years. In boyhood Tredethlyn had fallen in love with his rich uncle's only child, "cousin Susy," and a secret engagement had taken place between them, which was afterwards broken off, and he enlisted. Although he had written frequently to his cousin he had received no response or any intelligence from home, until the story opens with the reception of information of the death of his miserly uncle and his inheritance of thirty thousand pounds a year. He departs for England to take possession of his inheritance.

Upon his arrival in England, his first action is a vain attempt to find his cousin Susan, who had been forbidden her father's house in a moment of stormy passion, to divide his fortune with her. His monied influence gains him an introduction into the family and social circle of Lionel Hillary, an apparently wealthy merchant, whose family consists of his only daughter, Maude, and her friend and companion, Miss Julia Desmond, both cultivated and prepossessing young ladies. Tredethlyn soon becomes enamored with Maude, though the consciousness of his social inferiority causes him to hide his passion and endeavor to subdue it. Dazzled and flattered by his new position, he is made an easy victim to the designs of Miss Desmond, who sees in his fortune an incentive to the exertion of all her arts with a view to a matrimonial alliance that will at once free her from her situation of dependency, and give her wealth and position. An avowal and declaration is forced from Tredethlyn at a designed interview, by the artful Miss Desmond, and they are engaged.

A panic now occurs in the mercantile affairs of Lionel Hillary, and ruin stares him in the face. His daughter, noticing his changed manners and sleepless nights, watches him, and prevents him from committing suicide; winning from him the avowal that twenty thousand pounds are immediately required to save him from failure, disgrace and poverty. She seeks the frank, good-hearted Tredethlyn, and, in an impassioned manner, appeals to him to rescue her father from his situation. This interview brings forth an equally impassioned declaration from Tredethlyn of his love for her, of his conscious unworthiness, and his willingness to bestow the whole of his fortune for her benefit, if necessary.

Miss Hillary is surprised, shocked and offended by this avowal, and is about retiring in anger, when Miss Desmond, who has overheard enough to obtain a clew to the purport of the interview, enters; charges Maude with mercenary motives in supplanting her, and Tredethlyn with infidelity, and declares all is cancelled between him and herself. Miss Desmond leaves the house early next morning without an explanation. Tredethlyn attempts an apology to Maude, who refuses to listen to him. He, disgusted by the troubles his fortune and new position have environed him with, determines to estrange himself from them and fly to London. The next day twenty thousand pounds are placed to the credit of Lionel Hillary at his banker's, from an anonymous source. The merchant is all gratitude; points to Tredethlyn as his benefactor, and speaks of him in the warmest terms to his daughter.

Tredethlyn seeks again in vain for his cousin Susan, though he learns she has been entrapped into a mock marriage by a villain, who deserted her, and that she then fled to London. Subsequently new meshes are thrown around our hero by the designing Lionel Hillary; ten thousand pounds more are obtained from him, and he is admitted a silent partner in the house of Hillary & Co. Maude, who was betrothed to Ensign Harcourt Lowther—Tredethlyn's old master—before he left England, is commanded by her father to break off all correspondence with him and to look with favor upon an alliance with Tredethlyn. A chance encounter occurs, and Maude's amiability paves the way for a new hope and a new declaration. Acceptance and marriage speedily follow.

Just previous to the marriage, Ensign Harcourt Lowther returns from Van Diemen's Land, and seeks an interview with Maude, only to learn from her own lips the story of her forced engagement. Learning the name of the affianced, he tells her of the old relation of master and man, and makes Maude pledge him not to reveal to Tredethlyn the secret of their earlier love and engagement. Nettled and stung by his jealousy and pride, he plans a cultured and villainous revenge. After the marriage occurs and Tredethlyn and wife have become engrafted into the fashionable circles of London, he seeks him out and installs himself into the graces of the young Cornishman, and becomes his inseperable companion and mentor, leading him gradually into (for Tredethlyn) the dangerous confines of vice and dissipation and widening more and more the gulf between him and Maude, who had become the "sensation," the leading fashionable wife of London, whose apartics, receptions and dinners were notable for their extravagance.

Maude one day encountered Miss Julia Desmond, who is occupying the position of governess, seeks her forgiveness and tenders her a home. Julia, still rankling with jealous passion, refuses the offer, except as a hired companion. Maude humors her foible, but insists on her promising to come as a "friend." Envy and jealousy urging Julia to seek a proper opportunity to become avenged, she dissembles and accepts.

Tredethlyn, sickened by the constant round of gay and dissipated life, is withdrawn from the dangerous highways by the discovery of his cousin, whom he encounters one night as a supernumerary of one of the London theatres. He seeks an interview, with the determination of bestowing on her a portion of that fortune, which his innate convictions have always told him should have been hers.

Harcourt Lowther continues his daily visits to the house of Tredethlyn, and is constantly poisoning the wife's mind by noting the husband's absence and inventing excuses for him with the mock morality of a "Joseph Surface." Tredethlyn has a secret which calls him frequently from town during the day, which excites Lowther's curiosity, but his efforts to discover it are fruitless. The greater portion of Tredethlyn's time, however, is spent in the old way, with cards, at the race-track, and in dissipation, under Lowther's guidance.

Roderick Lowther, the elder brother of Harcourt Lowther, and much like him in appearance and character, prepossessing, cool, calculating and unscrupulous—a member of the corps diplomatique at Belgium—returns to England on a three months' leave of absence, and becomes domiciled with Harcourt. He announces his intention of seeking a good pecuniary match and marrying to secure the approval of an old maiden aunt, whose fortune he expects to inherit. He soon fathoms his brother's schemes, promises his assistance in their furtherance, and asks Harcourt to aid his own. He is introduced into the house of Mrs. Tredethlyn, and there meets Miss Grunderson, a young lady of ordinary appearance and intellect, but an heiress.

Roderick at once perceives that the most feasible way to make an impression upon Miss Grunderson, (who has frequently been courted for her wealth, and is somewhat suspicious of motives,) is to appear eminently disinterested, and rather skeptical, withal, relative to the desirableness of the matrimonial condition. Pursuing this line of policy, he is successful. He next visits his aunt to propitiate her favor. Harcourt Lowther finds Tredethlyn no longer a willing instrument in his hands, but discovers a clue to the mystery that so long has baffled him, in a tradesman's bill for goods and furniture supplied at Brook Cottage, Petersham, the bill having been carelessly left by Tredethlyn in his study.

CHAPTER XXXII.

HARCOURT GATHERS HIS FIRST-FRUITS.

THE party in Mrs. Tredethlyn's opera-box that evening was a very pleasant one. Whatever business had taken Harcourt Lowther to Richmond must have been tolerably satisfactory in its result, for that gentleman's spirits were gayer than usual as he stood behind Maude's chair in the shadow of the crimson curtain, talking to her under cover of all those crashing choruses and grand orchestral effects which Meyerbeer must surely have composed with a view to comfortable conversation. Miss Grunderson was gorgeous in thirty guineas' worth of blue moire antique a la Watteau, and exhibited a small fortune in the way of lace and artificial flowers upon her plump little person. Her diamond ear-rings were the biggest in the opera-house, though it must be confessed that a straw-colored tint, which the connoisseur repudiates, pervaded the gems that the market gardener had bought for his daughter—size, rather than purity of water, being the quality for which Mr. Grunderson selected his diamonds. Nothing could be more striking than the contrast between Maude's simple toilet of white silk and Rosa's gaudy splendor.

But Miss Grunderson was very happy this evening, for the delightful Roderick condescended to talk to her, while his brother was engrossed by Mrs. Tredethlyn. He was not very polite, but Rosa thought him positively charming. She had learnt to understand the emptiness of the attentions that had been paid to her by enterprising young bachelors, who thought that an alliance with the great Grunderson's daughter would be a very pleasant starting-point upon the high road of life; but she did not understand that there might come a man wise enough to eschew vain flatteries and all the ordinary allurements of the vulgar fortune-hunter, and yet designing enough to spread his nets for any heiress worthy of his ambition.

In his conversation with the simple-minded Rosa he affected the sentiments of a confirmed misogynist.

"If there were such a possibility as a sensible woman," he said, "I might perhaps hope to end my days in the bosom of a family; but since the age of miracles is past, I resign myself to the idea of remaining a lonely wanderer until the day of my death."

Thus half in despondency, half in bitterness, Roderick Lowther replied to some leading remark of Miss Grunderson's. She called him a horrid man and a dreadful creature: but she admired him amazingly notwithstanding, and she felt a seraphic happiness in listening to this delightfully cynical being, to the utter neglect of Meyerbeer.

"With the exception of public characters," mused the market gardener's daughter, "I don't think I was ever really in love until now."

And thus it fell out that when Mrs. Tredethlyn said in the course of the evening that she was going to spend the following day at Twickenham, Rosa gave such broad hints about the loveliness of the weather, and the delights of suburban scenery, that good-natured Maude promised to take her down for a long afternoon among the roses in the dear old garden where so much of her own happy youth had been idled away.

"Are droppers in to be permitted in your Arcadia ladies?" demanded Harcourt; "and will the balls and mallets be considered out of place upon the lawn by the river?"

This was quite enough for Miss Grunderson, who cried out directly that of all things in the world she adored croquet, and that "Par" had bought her a set of Cremer's most exquisite walnut-wood balls and mallets. There were times when the vivacious Rosa called her indulgent parent Par, in spite of those half-dozen annual accounts which he had paid for the young lady's education.

"I shall so enjoy a game of croquet in a real garden," cried Rosa. "We play it in the square sometimes; but the little boys, and the bakers' and butchers' young men outside the rails are so dreadfully trying, especially when the balls won't go where one wants them, owing to nervousness; and I'm sure it's enough to make anybody nervous to have a strange chimney-sweep calling out, 'Well done, butter-fingers!' if one drops a mallet, and that square-keeper is never within sight when wanted."

"Does Tredethlyn go with you to-morrow?" asked Harcourt Lowther presently. He had been very thoughtful for the last few minutes.

"No," Maude answered, rather sadly. "I asked Frank to drive me down in the mail phaeton, but he told me he was going a little way out of town on business."

She was thinking how very great a change had come to pass since her husband had been her adoring slave, only too happy to follow wherever she pleased to lead him. Now there was no quarrel, no actual misunderstanding between them; but there was quite a wide breach, as if they had agreed to separate after a long series of domestic battles.

"Roderick and I will come down to the Cedars to-morrow," said Harcourt, bending over Maude's chair, "unless you forbid us to do so. The river is delightful just now, and you may want the services of a couple of boatmen."

"We shall be very glad to see you, if you like to come," Mrs. Tredethlyn answered, carelessly. Looking up just then, she saw Miss Grunderson's round eyes fixed upon her with a very earnest expression. Rosa had heard all sorts of insinuations respecting Mr. Lowther's constant attendance upon Mrs. Tredethlyn, and the young lady was wondering whether her darling Maude did really deserve any of the reprobation that had been showered upon her as a flirting matron.

"There's a way of saying 'How do you do?' or 'Pretty well, thanks,' that seems like flirting," mused Miss Grunderson; "and Mr. Lowther always has that way when he talks to Mrs. Tredethlyn. I know she is too good to be a flirt, in spite of all those malicious people may say about her; and I don't like Harcourt Lowther a bit, for he must know how his flirting manner is talked about, though she doesn't. I've seen half a dozen opera-glasses turned this way to-night, just because he's been bending over her chair in that whispering way of his. And yet he has only been talking of croquet."

Rosa's friendship was quite as ardent as her love, and much more lasting. Mrs. Tredethlyn's gentleness had quite subdued that affectionate little heart, and the market gardener's daughter would have been willing to make any effort in her friend's service. She was a very energetic little girl, with a good deal of that moral courage which is sometimes wanting in more delicate natures. To put the fact in her own words, Rosa was able to speak her mind, and to speak it very freely too, whenever the occasion called for candor.

The next day was one of the brightest in a brilliant July, and Mrs. Tredethlyn's shell-shaped barouche was waiting before the ponderous stuccoed portico at eleven o'clock. Francis had left the house half an hour before on foot, bent on that mysterious expedition a little way out of town which he took so frequently now. Maude and Julia came down stairs at a quarter after eleven, and Miss Grunderson skipped up the stone steps two minutes afterwards, with the bluest bonnet and the pinkest parasol in London.

"How do you like the new contrast?" she inquired, twirling the pink parasol triumphantly, when she had adjusted her flounces and furbelows to the best of her ability on the front seat of Mrs. Tredethlyn's carriage. "I remember, when I was at school, pink and blue together were thought bad taste, but now they're quite de rigger. Ness pas ker say joli dong? s'p'tite embrelle?" demanded Miss Grunderson, bursting into French. "Vingt-huit shillings, ma chère! Ness pas tres-che, chere? Et le boutiquier ne voudrait pas prendre un six-sous la dessous, quique je l'ai marchandé comme un juif," she added, with a slap-dash rendering of the language which was peculiar to her.

The summer day was delightful, and Mande's spirits, which had been rather depressed of late, rose with the sunshine and the pure air, as the high-stepping bays left Stuccoville behind them for the pleasant country road, and the rustic odors of suburban gardens. And then, when she found herself amongst her own birds and flower-beds it was hard to believe that she was no longer a girl, with a girl's careless happines in beautiful things. She sat under a great drooping willow, whose lowest branches dipped into the water, and watched her dogs gambolling with Rosa on the grass.

"I was like that once," she thought, "before I knew of papa's difficulties—before I sold myself for money. I fancied that it was a heroic thing to marry the man I did not love, in the hope that my esteem might be some poor repayment of his generous devotion—his noble trust in my father. But I know now that I could do him no baser wrong than become his wife. I know it now, when he himself has learnt to despise and to avoid me, even when I am anxious to win back his regard."

Yes, it had come to this. Maude Tredethlyn deeply felt her husband's palpable avoidance of her. So long as he had been slavishly devoted she had been just a little inclined to despise him; but now that the treasure of an honest man's love seemed to have slipped away from her, she awoke to the consciousness that it was a treasure, and that she had need to be happy in the loss of a jewel that is not given to every woman to possess. She sickened at the thought of the wealth which her marriage had given her, now that it was unsanctified by the love of the giver. Was it gone, that devoted affection which she had held so lightly while it was hers to throw away? She began to understand now how delicate a thing a heart is, even when it beats under the rudest breast, and how soon it withers under the blighting influence of disdain. Yes, she had been faithfully loved by an honest man who would have given his very life for her happiness, and she had trifled with his love until it was lost. Queen Guinevere has only one set of diamonds to throw in the river, and when the passion has passed in whose hot impulse she flung them away, the lady is apt to regret her lost jewels.

Miss Desmond and Miss Grunderson trifled with the balls and mallets, while Maude wandered listlessly on the terrace thinking of the breach between herself and her husband. She was still lingering there alone, when Harcourt and Roderick Lowther strolled from the drawing-room into the lawn. The elder set about instructing Julia Desmond and Miss Grunderson with regard to the latest and most intricate by-laws of croquet, and the younger made his way at once to the terrace, where Maude was walking listlessly and slowly under a coquettish white umbrella.

Harcourt Lowther took care that Mrs Tredethlyn had no more time for solitary musing. He brought all his talents to bear to keep her amused, and by the aid of fashionable small-talk, sharp little criticisms on new books, croquet, luncheon, and an incursion among Mr. Hillary's hothouses, he contrived to chase the shadow of care quite away from the young wife's girlish brow. It was about four o'clock, and the afternoon had lapsed into a sultry sleepy brightness that was almost oppressive even in that green retreat beside the river, when the two gentlemen suggested the water.

"Of all things in the world the most delightful," screamed Miss Grundersou. "Oh, do please take us out in one of those darling little dangerous-looking boats I saw in the Swiss boat-house down there. And oh, what a pity I didn't wear a hat instead of this odious blue bonnet, which is beginning to fly already!" said Rosa, looking despondently at the expansive ribbons fluttering below her double chin, which had lost some little of their azure intensity under the influence of the July sun. To Miss Grunderson's great delight, the two gentlemen proceeded forthwith to the boat-house, and lowered a couple of wherries, as perfect in their way as any craft that ever came out of the hands of Messrs. Messenger. Harcourt placed Mrs. Tredethlyn and Julia Desmond in one of these boats, and to the other descended Miss Grunderson, with more small shrieks of terror and feminine skirmishing, and a greater display of Balmoral boots and embroidered flounces than were absolutely necessary to the embarkation.

"I never get into a boat without thinking I shall be drowned," said Rosa, plumping down upon the cushions, and all but upsetting herself at the first start; "the water does give way so. But if one was drowned it would be rather nice to have a paragraph all to one's self in the daily newspapers, or perhaps what pa calls a social leader, beginning with something about the Moloch Pleasure having swallowed another victim, and Youth at the Prow and Pleasure at the Helm, and the Pale Horse, and so on."

And then Miss Grunderson, finding herself alone with the latest object of her adoration, exerted all her small fascinations to beguile the woman-hater from his stern aversion to her sex. She chattered as gaily as some talking bird, and Roderick Lowther, who imagined that he had by this time established himself firmly as a disinterested individual, condescended to make himself agreeable, and to drift into that pleasant current of meaningless small-talk which malicious people call flirtation.

While Roderick rowed his fair companion swiftly past the verdant bank, Harcourt let his boat drift slowly down with the current, only dipping his oars now and then in the intervals of his discourse. Maude had forgotten her troubled reverie upon the terrace, and gave herself up to the enjoyment of all the old books and music, poetry and painting, which had been so delicious to her in those departed days when she and Harcourt had drifted down that same river, plighted husband and wife. There is no monitor so sharp as rural nature when we have need to be reminded of our inconstancy. Looking at these reedy banks, those tranquil gardens sloping to a tranquil tide, Maude found it almost difficult to believe in the changes of her life since she had first floated down that stream, a child, with wild flowers in her lap, and her little bare arm hanging across the edge of the boat, for the infantile pleasure of splashing.

Harcourt Lowther found his brother's boat moored to a little quay in a shady corner of the river below the "Star and Garter," and the splendid coloring of Miss Grunderson's toilette made that young lady conspicuous as she ascended a little pathway sloping upwards to the terrace, attended by her cavalier. Harcourt shipped his oars and proposed a stroll in the Petersham meadows. Maude looked at her watch; it was a quarter to five, and Mr. Hillary's dinner-hour was half-past seven. There was plenty of time for a stroll across those verdant meadows, and Mrs. Tredethlyn, having the interval to dispose of somehow, had only to choose in wasting it in this way or in some other fashion. Harcourt gave his coat into the custody of one of the lounging watermen at the rustic landing-stage, and then strolled with his two companions into the meadows leading towards Petersham.

There is little need to tell the reader what Petersham is like. Almost everybody knows that rural cluster of modern villas and grand old red brick mansions nestling so comfortably under the shadow of Richmond Hill. Surely the next best thing to inhabiting Earl Russell's house in Richmond Park, or that magic chateau of Monsieur Fould's, hidden deep in the woody heart of grand old Saint Germain's, would be to own one of those Georgian mansions at Petersham, with cool fishponds and shady gardens, long ranges of narrow windows and a marble-paved vestibule, with a ceiling by Thornhill, and old family portraits by polite Sir Joshua himself. It was the afternoon of afternoons for listless dawdling about such a place as Petersham, and Mr. Lowther and the two ladies were alike enthusiastic in their admiration of the Georgian mansions.

"I wish Francis would buy a nice old house down here," said Maude. "I am so tired of London; it is all the same over, and over, and over again; the same flock of sheep jumping through the same gap in the same hedge, and not one of them—no, not even the leader—knowing why they do it. I should be near papa here, and all my old friends. In town I seem to know everybody, and yet not to have a single friend."

There was a rustic bench in the lane through which they were walking as Maude said this. The ladies sat down to rest for a few minutes, and Harcourt Lowther took out his cigar case.

"I shall leave you just long enough to smoke a cigarette," he said, "and then I will take you back to the water-side by a still prettier road, if you like."

He went away at a leisurely pace, lighting his cigar as he went; but he walked a good deal faster when he was out of Maude Tredethlyn's ken, and he was flushed with heat when he returned after a quarter of an hour's absence.

"Now, ladies," he said, "if we are not to keep Mr. Hillary waiting for his dinner, it is high time for us to go back to the boat."

Maude and Julia rose, and the little party strolled into the road at the end of the lane in the straggling order usual to people who walk for their own pleasure in a country village. Mrs. Tredethlyn's white umbrella was a little way ahead of her companions, when Harcourt Lowther laid his gloved hand lightly upon Julia's shoulder.

She looked up at him, startled by the gesture.

"You have had some reason to complain of your friends, Miss Hillary and Francis Tredethlyn," he said. "I am going to give you your revenge."

Julia stared in amazement at the speaker; but he did not wait to be interrogated.

"Come, Mrs. Tredethlyn," he said, "your papa will have to wait for his dinner unless you walk a little faster."

He had not much reason to complain of Maude, who had been ahead of him until this moment, but he hurried her along the dusty road until, at a spot where it curved round to the river, he stopped suddenly, pointing to a cottage garden, seen through the iron rails of a high, old-fashioned gate set in a framework of clematis.

"Look at that, Mrs. Tredethlyn! Isn't it a pretty picture?"

It was a rustic tableau composed of two figures grouped under a mulberry tree—a delicate-looking woman with soft brown hair, touched here and there with a glimmer of gold, seated on a rustic bench. Her face was turned away from the road, and she was looking at a man who leaned against the trunk of the tree.

It was only a glimpse of this picture which Maude caught between the iron scroll-work of the gate, but she saw quite enough. The man was Francis Tredethlyn.

"Great Heaven!" exclaimed Harcourt Lowther, in an audible whisper. "It is Francis!"

(To be continued.)

(For the Californian.)

CULTIVATION OF FLOWERS.

THE pleasure derived from flowers is one of the sweetest, simplest and least animal of all the gratifications of the senses, and it is a pleasure which is inexhaustible in its variety, and which may be enjoyed by every one, from the wealthiest owner of fine conservatories and extensive grounds, down to the humble possessor of the smallest patch of earth, or even of a single flower-pot in the window. The varieties of plants are stated to be over fifty thousand distinct species, which are being constantly augmented by new discoveries. This vast number is variously distributed over the globe in its different regions, according to the several latitudes, climates and characters of the soil. It is neeessary that every one who cultivates plants should know something of the general principles according to which the plants of our climate may be most successfully grown, and especially made to bloom in perfection in another and a different one. The pleasure of this is of a higher order than that derived from the mere possession of any flowering-plants, how beautiful or how rare soever the blooms of those plants may be. The profit derived from it is also correspondingly great, for when a person cultivates and attends to a flowering plant which is a native of any country, the love of the plant will naturally lead him to the desire of knowing something about the country which produces such fine flowers, and there is so much knowledge abroad upon such subjects and it is now so readily and so cheaply obtained, that the flower becomes a silent but delightful teacher to the cultivator, to a far greater extent than those who have not attended to such subjects would be apt to suppose. Indeed, whatever may be the species or the original native locality of the flower which is loved and cultivated, it will invariably be found that, whether learned or unlearned in the scholastic sense of the word, the cultivator of flowers is a more intelligent, as well as more amiable character, than he who looks upon the gems and essences of the material creation with an eye of perfect indifference. In attending to flowers, there is nothing that can, in the least degree, excite the merely animal appetites or passions, or stir up enmity or mischief against others, and therefore florieulture is a direct means of virtue, by preventing or weakening its opposite in the very first formation of the desire. We are not now speaking of those with whom the culture of flowers is a profession, or of the opulent, who, though they admire flowers, employ others to do the labor of the cultivation.

We are speaking only of those who cultivate flowers on account of the pleasure which they take in so doing, and who thus substitute florieulture for the less simple and innocent occupation of the leisure hour in which they who do not resort to some such natural amusement as this, are but too prone to indulge, and to the indulgence of which they are often drawn and induced to continue by the example and enticements of others. Now, apart from the direct pleasure that the cultivators derive from watching the progress and perfection of the flowers, as the result of their own skill and handiwork, directing and seconding the powers of nature, their cultivation enables the person to live for the time, at least, happy in their own society, which is one of the best foundation both of contentment and of virtue, for there has been many a person, who, to escape the ennui of their own company, has sought the company of others, and by this means, in the end materially injured, or even altogether ruined both their fortunes and their happiness, and entailed the severest afflictions upon those dependent upon them. Among all the good habits of mankind, there is probably not one more valuable than the habit of regularity in timing what we have to do to those seasons at which it can be most advantageously done, and as every flower has its season at which it requires attention in order to bring it to maturity at its appointed period, and even to preserve its healthy and pleasant appearance at all times, it teaches habits of attention in all other matters. Thus, a fondness for flowers and a careful and judicious management of them are both the means and the indications of a virtuous and orderly habit in all matters, and this quite independently of the pleasure or profit which the flowers directly furnish. The love of flowers for their own sakes, is perhaps the most unmixed instance of the love of beauty which is anywhere to be met with, and if the sentiment of beauty can once be made to occupy a high place in the mind of any person, it tends more to root out the mean and grovelling appetites than any other we can name.

Our ability to improve flowers, that is, to break them from the characteristics they possess in a wild state, depends in no small degree upon the difference of the circumstances in which they grew naturally, and those in which we rear and train them artificially. It is true that some plants will bear only a limited change, while others admit of change to a very great extent; but notwithstanding this, it is a general law in floriculture that the more different treatment it can bear from that which nature gives it, the more it may be improved by the cultivator. There is also another general principle: Plants, including flowers, evergreens and all others, can bear much better to be transported from warm latitudes and situations to cold, than from cold to warm. There are two causes for this. In the first place, a plant never produces a flower so long as it can effect an increase in the volume of that particular portion of its system in which the flower has its beginning; and in the second place, the artificial treatment which can be best applied is that which approximates a transfer to a climate warmer than our own. When the plant of a cold climate is taken to a warm one, the tendency of it is to run to stem and leaf, and not produce any flowers at all—as is the case with the gooseberry trees which have been sent from England to the island of St. Helena. In that island they have become evergreens, producing no berries and but few flowers, but extending themselves by roots so as to form a sort of copse or jungle. In other cases of plants removed to a warmer climate, the produce of leaf and stem is so great that the season of growth is over before they can perfect their flowers. On the other hand, when flowers of the warm latitudes are transported to colder ones, they have less tendency to run to stem and leaf and more to flowering. These circumstances apply much more to the operations of climate and seasons upon the plant, than to the soil upon which it is grown.

The attentive observer cannot but perceive "that every flower on earth appears and expands in its appointed order. The God of the Seasons has exactly determined the time when this flower shall unfold its leaves, that spread its glowing beauties to the sun, and a third hang down its drooping head, and, withered, resign its sunny robes."

> "'Not to myself alone,'
> The little opening flower transplanted cries—
> Not to myself alone I bud and bloom;
> With fragrant breath the breezes I perfume
> And gladden all things with my rainbow dyes."

Professor Schleiden of the University of Jena, says: "By the teachings of the vegetable world, the tone of our moral being is affected in no small degree, and flowers are often interwoven with the web of human destiny. In a word, the heart of man is susceptible of no purer or more enduring earthly pleasure than that which it experiences in its free communion with the inexhaustible beauties of the vegetable world."

"Away to the hills, to the streams, the woods, for a spell of peace is there—
A welcome, bland, from the early flowers, and a kiss from the perfumed air;
Away! and thy heart shall find a friend in every flower and tree,
And Nature's pure and beautiful forms shall whisper of love to thee."

Happy, then, is the person who is early taught a love of flowers. Earth may grow weary to him, life may lose its charms, but he will ever derive consolation from the thousand sources of nature. He may go forth despairing and disgusted with the deceiving charms of the worlds, but when alone in the mossy wood with the flowers all around, and their odor rising in the hushed air, he finds that there is beauty still left in existence. IRIS.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[ALL letters for this department should be addressed to MR. MARK TWAIN, who has been detailed from the editorial staff to conduct it. Courting Etiquette, Distressed Lovers, of either sex, and Struggling Young Authors, as yet "unbeknown" to Fame, will receive especial attention]

TRUE SON OF THE UNION.—Very well, I will publish the following extract from one of the dailies, since you seem to consider it necessary to your happiness, and since your trembling soul has found in it evidence of lukewarm loyalty on the part of the Collector—but candidly, now, don't you think you are in rather small business? I do, anyhow, though I do not wish to flatter you:

"BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL.—San Francisco, June 17, 1865. Messrs. Editors: Why is it that on this day, the greatest of all in the annals of the rights of man—viz.: the Glorious Anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill—our Great Ensign of Freedom does not appear on the Custom House? Perhaps our worthy Collector is so busy Senator-making that it might have escaped his notice. You will be pleased to assign an excuse for the above official delinquency, and oblige

A NEW ENGLAND MECHANIC."

Why was that published? I think it was simply to gratify a taste for literary pursuits which has suddenly broken out in the system of the artisan from New England; or perhaps he has an idea, somehow or other, in a general way, that it would be a showing of neat and yet not gaudy international politeness for Collectors of ports to hoist their flags in commemoration of British victories, (for the physical triumph was theirs, although we claim all the moral effect of a victory;) or perhaps it struck him that "this day, the greatest of all in the annals of the rights of man," (whatever that may mean, for it is a little too deep for me,) was a fine, high-sounding expression, and yearned to get it off in print; or perhaps it occurred to him that "the Glorious Anniversary," and "our Great Ensign of Freedom," being new and startling figures of speech, would probably create something of a sensation if properly marshalled under the leadership of stunning capitals, and so he couldn't resist the temptation to trot them out in grand dress parade before the reading public; or perhaps, finally, he really did think the Collector's atrocious conduct partook of the character of a devilish "official delinquency," and imperatively called for explanation or "excuse." And still, after all this elaborate analysis, I am considerably "mixed" as to the actual motive for publishing that thing.

But observe how quibbling and fault-finding breed in a land of newspapers. Yesterday I had the good fortune to intercept the following bitter communication on its way to the office of a cotemporary, and I am happy in being able to afford to the readers of THE CALIFORNIAN the first perusal of it:

Editors of the Flaming Loyalist: What does it mean? The extraordinary conduct of Mr. John Doe, one of the highest Government officials among us, upon the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill—that day so inexpressibly dear to every loyal American heart because our patriot forefathers got worsted upon that occasion—is matter of grave suspicion. It was observed (by those who have closely watched Mr. Doe's actions ever since he has been in office, and who have thought his professions of loyalty lacked the genuine ring,) that this man, who has uniformly got drunk, heretofore, upon all the nation's great historical days, remained thoroughly sober upon the hallowed 17th of June. Is not this significant? Was this the pardonable forgetfulness of a loyal officer, or rather, was it not the deliberate act of a malignant and a traitorous heart? You will be pleased to assign an excuse for the above official delinquency, and oblige

A SENTINEL AGRICULTURIST UPON THE NATIONAL WATCHTOWER.

Now isn't that enough to disgust any man with being an officeholder? Here is a drudging public servant who has always served his masters patiently and faithfully, and although there was nothing in his instructions requiring him to get drunk on national holidays, yet with an unselfishness, and an enlarged public spirit, and a gushing patriotism that did him infinite credit, he did always get as drunk as a loon on these occasions—ay, and even upon any occasion of minor importance when an humble effort on his part could shed additional lustre upon his country's greatness, never did he hesitate a moment to go and fill himself full of gin. Now observe how his splendid services have been appreciated—behold how quickly the remembrance of them hath passed away—mark how the tried servant has been rewarded. This grateful officer—this pure patriot—has been known to get drunk five hundred times in a year for the honor and glory of his country and his country's flag, and no man cried "Well done, thou good and faithful servant"—yet the very first time he ventures to remain sober on a battle anniversary (exhausted by the wear and tear of previous efforts, no doubt,) this spying "Agriculturist," who has deserted his onion-patch to perch himself upon the National Watch-Tower at the risk of breaking his meddlesome neck, discovers the damning fact that he is firm on his legs, and sings out: "He don't keep up his lick!—he's DISLOYAL!"

Oh, stuff! a public officer has a hard enough time of it, at best, without being constantly hauled over the coals for inconsequential and insignificant trifles. If you must find fault, go and ferret out something worth while to find fault with—if John Doe or the Collector neglect the actual business they are required by the Government to transact, impeach them. But pray allow them a little poetical license in the choice of occasions for getting drunk and hoisting the National flag. If the oriental artisan and the sentinel agriculturalist held the offices of these men, would they ever attend to anything else but the flag-flying and gin-soaking outward forms of patriotism and official industry?

SOCRATES MURPHY.—You speak of having given offense to a gentleman at the Opera by unconsciously humming an air which the tenor was singing at the time. Now, part of that is a deliberate falsehood. You were not doing it "unconsciously;" no man does such a mean, vulgar, egotistical thing as that unconsciously. You were doing it to "show off;" you wanted the people around you to know you had been to operas before, and to think you were not such an ignorant, self-conceited, supercilious ass as you looked; I can tell you Arizona opera-sharps, any time; you prowl around beer-cellars and listen to some howling-dervish of a Dutchman exterminating an Italian air, and then you come into the Academy and prop yourself up against the wall with the stuffy aspect and the imbecile leer of a clothing-store dummy, and go to droning along about half an octave below the tenor, and disgusting everybody in your neighborhood with your beery strains. [N. B. If this rough-shod eloquence of mine touches you on a raw spot occasionally, recollect that I am talking for your good, Murphy, and that I am simplifying my language so as to bring it clearly within the margin of your comprehension; it might be gratifying to you to be addressed as if you were an Oxford graduate, but then you wouldn't understand it, you know.] You have got another abominable habit, my sage-brush amateur. When one of those Italian footmen in British uniform comes in and sings "O tol de rol!—O, Signo-o-o-ra!—loango—congo—Venezue-e-e-la! whack fol de rol!" (which means "Oh, noble madame, here's one of them dukes from the palace, out here, come to borrow a dollar and a half,") you always stand with expanded eyes and mouth, and one pile-driver uplifted, and your ample hands held apart in front of your face, like a couple of canvas-covered hams, and when he gets almost through, how you do uncork your pent-up enthusiasm and applaud with hoof and palm! You have it pretty much to yourself, and then you look sheepish when you find everybody staring at you. But how very idiotic you do look when something really fine is sung—you generally keep quiet, then. Never mind, though, Murphy, entire audiences do things at the Opera that they have no business to do; for instance, they never let one of those thousand-dollar singers finish—they always break in with their ill-timed applause just as he or she, as the case may be, is preparing to throw all his or her concentrated sweetness into the final strain, and so all that sweetness is lost. Write me again, Murphy—I shall always be happy to hear from you.

ARITHMETICUS, Virginia, Nevada.—"I am an enthusiastic student of mathematics, and it is so vexatious to me to find my progress constantly impeded by these mysterious arithmetical technicalities. Now do tell me what the difference is between Geometry and Conchology?" Here you come again, with your diabolical arithmetical conundrums, when I am suffering death with a cold in the head. If you could have seen the expression of ineffable scorn that darkened my countenance a moment ago and was instantly spht from the centre in every direction like a fractured looking-glass by my last sneeze, you never would have written that disgraceful question. Conchology is a science which has nothing to do with mathematics; it relates only to shells. At the same time, however, a man who opens oysters for a hotel, or shells a fortified town, or sucks eggs, is not, strictly speaking, a conchologist—a fine stroke of sarcasm, that, but it will be lost on such an intellectual clam as you. Now compare conchology and geometry together, and you will see what the difference is, and your question will be answered. But don't torture me with any more of your ghastly arithmetical horrors (for I do detest figures anyhow,) until you know I am rid of my cold. I feel the bitterest animosity toward you at this moment—bothering me in this way, when I can do nothing but sneeze and quote poetry and snort pocket-handkerchiefs to atoms. If I had you in range of my nose, now, I would blow brains out.

YOUNG MOTHER.—And so you think a baby is a thing of beauty and a joy forever? Well, the idea is pleasing, but not original—every cow thinks the same of its own calf. Perhaps the cow may not think it so elegantly, but still she thinks it, nevertheless. I honor the cow for it. We all honor this touching maternal instinct wherever we find it, be it in the home of luxury or in the humble cow-shed. But really, madam, when I come to examine the matter in all its bearings, I find that the correctness of your assertion does not manifest itself in all cases. A sore-faced baby with a neglected nose cannot be conscientiously regarded as a thing of beauty, and inasmuch as babyhood spans but three short years, no baby is competent to be a joy "forever." It pains me thus to demolish two-thirds of your pretty sentiment in a single sentence, but the position I hold in this chair requires that I shall not permit you to deceive and mislead the public with your plausible figures of speech. I know a female baby aged eighteen months, in this city, which cannot hold out as a "joy" twenty-four hours on a stretch, let alone "forever." And it possesses some of the most remarkable eccentricities of character and appetite that have ever fallen under my notice. I will set down here a statement of this infant's operations, (conceived, planned and carried out by itself, and without suggestion or assistance from its mother or any one else,) during a single day—and what I shall say can be substantiated by the sworn testimony of witnesses. It commenced by eating one dozen large blue-mass pills, box and all; then it fell down a flight of stairs, and arose with a bruised and purple knot on its forehead, after which it proceeded in quest of further refreshment and amusement. It found a glass trinket ornamented with brasswork—mashed up and ate the glass, and then swallowed the brass. Then it drank about twenty or thirty drops of laudanum, and more than a dozen table-spoonsful of strong spirits of camphor. The reason why it took no more laudanum was, because there was no more to take. After this it lay down on its back, and shoved five or six inches of a silver-headed whalebone cane down its throat; got it fast there, and it was all its mother could do to pull the cane out again, without pulling out some of the child with it. Then, being hungry for glass again, it broke up several wine glasses, and fell to eating and swallowing the fragments, not minding a cut or two. Then it ate a quantity of butter pepper, salt and California matches, actually taking a spoonful of butter, a spoonful of salt, a spoonful of pepper, and three or four lucifer matches, at each mouthful. (I will remark here that this thing of beauty likes painted German lucifers, and eats all she can get of them; but she infinitely prefers California matches—which I regard as a compliment to our home manufactures of more than ordinary value, coming, as it does, from one who is too young to flatter.) Then she washed her head with soap and water, and afterwards ate what soap was left, and drank as much of the suds as she had room for, after which she sallied forth and took the cow familiarly by the tail, and got kicked heels over head. At odd times during the day, when this joy forever happened to have nothing particular on hand, she put in the time by climbing up on places and falling down off them, uniformly damaging herself in the operation. As young as she is, she speaks many words tolerably distinctly, and being plain-spoken in other respects, blunt and to the point, she opens conversation with all strangers, male or female, with the same formula—"How do, Jim?" Not being familiar with the ways of children, it is possible that I have been magnifying into matter of surprise things which may not strike any one who is familiar with infancy as being at all astonishing. However, I cannot believe that such is the case, and so I repeat that my report of this baby's performances is strictly true—and if any one doubts it, I can produce the child. I will further engage that she shall devour anything that is given her, (reserving to myself only the right to exclude anvils,) and fall down from any place to which she may be elevated, (merely stipulating that her preference for alighting on her head shall be respected, and, therefore, that the elevation chosen shall be high enough to enable her to accomplish this to her satisfaction.) But I find I have wandered from my subject—so, without further argument, I will reiterate my conviction that not all babies are things of beauty and joys forever.

BLUE-STOCKING, San Francisco.—Do I think the writer in the Golden Era quoted Burns correctly when he attributed this language to him?

"O, wad the power the gift tae gie us."

No, I don't. I think the proper reading is—

"O, wad some power the giftie gie us."

But how do you know it is Burns? Why don't you wait till you hear from the Gold Hill News? Why do you want to rush in ahead of the splendid intellect that discovered as by inspiration that the "Destruction of the Sennacherib" was not written in Dutch Flat?

Agnes St. Clair Smith.—This correspondent writes as follows: "I suppose you have seen the large oil painting (entitled 'St. Patrick preaching at Tara, A. D. 432,) by J. Harrington, of San Francisco, in the window of the picture store adjoining the Eureka Theatre, on Montgomery street. What do you think of it?"

Yes, I have seen it. I think it is a petrified nightmare. I have not time to elaborate my opinion.

DISCOURAGINO.

The fate of Mark Twain's exquisite bit of humor, in which he treats Byron's "Sennacherib" as a communication from a Dutch Flat poet, will teach a lesson to our wits. The next time Mark gets off a good thing in the same fine vein, he will probably append a "key" to the joke.—Dramatic Chronicle.

Ah! but you forget the Gold Hill News and the Flag. Would they understand the "key" do you think?

(For the Californian.)

CONCEITS IN TASTE—ANCIENT AND MODERN.

I HAVE two literary neighbors whose characters are astonishingly dissimilar, whose ideas clash in their daily conversation with a terrible sound, and yet both parties seem to live together in a sort of quarrelsome harmony, very amusing to a lazy spectator like myself. Argument is apt to run high with them, and at moments I half suspect a danger of a physical cast, when I note columbiad encyclopædias and heavy infantry of commentaries with the skirmishing reviewers and sharp-shooting editorials thrashing around in the wordy battle. But the danger does not answer the promise of its threats, and when sleep proclaims its truce, both lie down together to the most amiable state of supineness and stertoration. One is an old-fashioned man of taste who has never to my knowledge wandered into print, and indeed whose language and style would require a labored translation to make it intelligible at a hotel breakfast table or in a fashionable bar-room. He is a middle-aged, shambling sort of a gentleman, who has for his bundle of personal habits a number of negligent tricks and absurdities that would render a wife desperate in the attempt to cure. It is pitiable that no lady has ventured it; for if the miserable state of his shoe-strings could only be remedied; if the load of dandruff on his coat-collar, which seems to collect there in defiance of the law of gravitation, were brushed off, and if a stop could be put to the active olfactory prospectings in which he indulges his fingers, he would be an ornament in the way of an escort through life to any sensible lady who cared little for a dashing cavalier. His head has already grown very bald, and it is a wonder to me where the dandruff mill which leaves such a powdery result on his curved back and round shoulders can be situate. Where he came from is a mystery which he never unfolds. I shrewdly surmise, however, that he must be the son of some half-starved English curate, who gave him what he could, that heritage of woe—the education and tastes of a scholar and a gentleman, without the gold to gild them into revered respectability. He probably, at some time or other, had hopes and aspirations, but a film must have long ago gathered over the eyes of his guardian angel; for he seems to have been deserted by both success and ambition. How he managed to wander to California, this Ultima Thule of book-worms, is one of those oddities of migration which, when reflected upon, call a smile to the surface that would be grotesque, were it not too sad.

The other hero of my theme is easily described. His profession lies somewhere in newspaper toils. He is a quick-witted, active materialist, full of the present, and careless as to the claims of the past. Sbriglia is more interesting to him than a whole dynasty of Tigelliuses, and Anselmo works upon his sarcastic side with far more effect than would Mævius or Codrus. He is popular as a writer, and is generally on the extreme edge of the common-place taste of the day.

I lounged in on the two chums the other evening, and it struck me as I reflected on the ideas evolved, that perhaps a little of the current of their conversation might be advantageously diverted into the mill-race of The Californian.

"Ancient" had stumbled that night into the parquet of the opera, and having returned home, was then sitting scribbling on the play-bill, his eyes lighted up with a childish brilliancy of reflection, the unoccupied hand vexing his nose, and one untied shoe abstractedly crushed out of shape beneath an awkward splay sort of a foot. "Latterday" was dampening his moustache in a toby of beer, which he ever and anon removed to blow smoke-wreaths around Ancient's smooth pate.

I saw a hesitating method in the pencillings of the scholar, and ventured to ask what idea he was working up. With a blush, such as a freshman wears when he gives in his first essay, and questions the tutor's eye for sympathy, Ancient handed me the following lines

ON A FAIR CRIPPLE.

"When Venus wanton steals her spouse's pace,
His tortuous step she trains to such a grace,
That, admiration drowning all compassion,
We deem the halt the height of Paphian fashion."

A burst of laughter issued clouded with beer-foam from the toby which was resting at Latterday's lips, when I finished reading the couplets. "Well," said he, "Ancient, who is the beautiful hobbler? I trust it is not that moon-eyed Mongolienne to whom you called my attention the other day, as she stilted herself over Dupont street. 'Paphia' is good. I shall see to it that hereafter we call by that name the Asiatic quarters." "It is nobody," meekly lied Ancient; "I was just turning over the epigram of Gnatho,

"DE GRATIA CLAUDICANTE
"Jam pede claudo nunc incedere Paphia mos fit,
"Cypride Vulcani incerto titubante gradu."
"Gnathon. Opuscul."

"Gnatho?" said Latterday, "I never heard of him." "Probably not," responded Ancient, "he was a loafer of the time of the elder Cato. He was not much of a poet, being about as clear as mud, (luteum non est lutulentius) but was gulosissimus, the best man in free lunch achievements to be found in the city of Rome. He has left us nothing worthy of being treasured, and his style is a little stilted." "Well," said Latterday, ruthlessly tossing the tender infant of Ancient's reveries upon the bayonet of slashing criticism, "if you were only a cotemporary of La Valliere, or were writing for the amusement of Madame du Deffant, your epigram would be the thing. As it is, in this age of hasty literature, when the author must have voluminous ideas ready at any moment for delivery, epigrams properly sharpened down to a point are absurdities. Write a song. Don't mind the accuracies of metre or the demands of rhyme, get it set to a stolen tune, and you will reach the popular heart instanter. Who cares about the bummers who used to ask Cato for two bits and didn't get it? It is enough to see the modern parasite gorging himself in the restaurants. Your trifling bit of effervescent classicism might be understood by a faculty of Latin pedants, but it is hardly the taste of the American people of to-day, as we meet them in California." Ancient sighed, as men sigh when in foreign lands and unable to make their ideas known, and muttering that it was but a "mere nuga, not seriously intended," turned to a torn copy of Tibullus and became absorbed therein.

I went to my room, and delving into a heap of yellow-leaved time-stained works, found all sorts of efforts by men of wit, whose fame in fashion was a thing of a hundred years of age. There were compliments to ladies, whose bright eyes, about which so much was said, had been tarnished with tears and woe long before they closed wearily forever; there were sparkling sarcasms that had led to fierce duels between men whose tongues were sharper than their swords, and men whose blades usurped the duties of wit; there were dedications by poets who cringingly harnessed their genius to help drag along the heavy chariots of ladies of fashion; there were compliments to men in power, rank indeed, and fulsome, but turned with a grace that almost defied criticism. You would search in vain the literature of to-day for the same sort of effusions. Yet the ladies now have eyes as bright, men say ugly things of each other as freely, and political patronage is sought as much through the channel of flattery as when the Lovelaces, the Dorsets, and Walpoles wrote, and the St. Johns and Temples held the reins of government. But carelessness has crept into even this questionable portion of literature, and newspaper praise barely ventures beyond an ill-constructed letter or a local puff. The man of fashion now finds his position easily retainable without the dilettante accomplishments of verse-capping and apt classical quotation. The parasite, who once won his way to the dinner tables of the great by his wit, still uses his mighty jaws with dexterity, but regards more the quantity than the quality of his flatteries.

Latterday was right. Ancient's awkward wit and ungainly compliments look as badly to the eye of the modern snips in literature, as his own seedy garb would, hung up in a fashionable slop-shop. The day for classical ornamentation in letters has gone by. The judge's opinion, the priest's sermon, and the political speech must not bear the least stain of polite learning, or it will be popularly ridiculous. Billy Birch and Charley Backus are now drawn upon for illustration by the young bucks about town, just as Horace and Juvenal were of yore by men of fashion.

The transformation may be good for us in the end. It may stir up a vein of originality in letters, which will have a brilliant effect upon the efforts of this generation. Perhaps our successors in the literary public may thank us for the flippancy with which we treat the classics and such absurd children of their old age as my friend Ancient, who stray purposeless among us; but in their pursuit of what is excellent in their predecessors, is there not a fearful chance that passing by contemptuously our labors and going back to earlier writers, impartial and critical Posterity may designate our materialistic days as a Dark Age, just as do we those centuries when monks made palimpsests of Horace and Catullus, to replace them with legends of mythical saints.

Vago.

Civilization.—A Chinaman named Lee Kan has petitioned the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco, for permission to keep an "intelligence office" in that city. The Board will decide, at its next meeting, as to whether Lee Kan keep one or not.—Marysville Express.

Strange Burial Customs in Sicily.—In Sicily churchyards are unknown. The corpses are placed in layers in the vaults of churches, without a coffin, and when decomposition performs its work, the remains of the poor are piled together in a corner, and sometimes walled in; but those who can afford it have their remains placed in a niche in a special apartment, called the Chamber of Death, where for a long time the hideous relics of humanity may be seen by the curious. It is a large hall on the ground-floor, lighted by a large window, like that of an artist's studio. All round there are niches like sentry-boxes let into the wall; they are about six feet high, and the bottom is level with the floor. The corpses, blackened by decomposition, are frightful to look at; they are kept generally in a standing-position by a rope round their necks, and their naked, fleshless feet rest on the floor; but, as the ropes are not uniformly tightened, the attitudes are all different; some leaning forward with their heads outside the niche, as though about to advance into the centre of the room. All have a paper label fastened on their breast, couched thus: "I am so-and-so; have a mass said for me, for mercy's sake." In one of the niches is the corpse of a young man, in a Zouave's uniform; he is fastened round the waist, so that the body is bent in two, the head down and the hands forward, which gives him the appearance of looking for something on the floor. There are also a few, only a very few, glass coffins; in one of them is a gentleman wearing a chimney-pot hat, much too large for what is left of his head. A few wooden coffins form a strange contrast with the ghastly exhibition all around. They contain the remains of ladies, this barbarous fashion at poste mortem display stopping short of the fair sex.

The Dear Babies.—Conventionally, infancy is only another name for innocence. Practically, they are often as wide as the poles asunder. Mothers, of course, will dispute this proposition; yet they know, in the depths of their affectionate hearts, that it is too true. Produce your philanthropic baby. Show us a sample of the race that will not fight. Do they not seize us by the hair, and tug thereat, with exulting war-whoops, as if they longed to scalp us? Is it not necessary to keep their nails short, in order to avoid scarification? Has any baby ever been known to exhibit the slightest emotion of gratitude? Do they not murder our sleep, compelling parents to rise at the dead hour of night, and walk marches against time until daylight? Is it not a common thing to see them become partially apoplectic with unbridled passion? And then, look at their hypocrisy! Do they not indulge in blood-curdling shrieks of seeming agony, and, when undressed in consequence of suspicion of pins, do they not kick up their heels and crow at the thought of having hoaxed their mothers? It is all very well to say that "Heaven is near us in our infancy," but it is the opinion of observant persons, who have studied babies from a philosophical stand-point, that if their capacity for mischief were equal to their ferocity, they would soon exterminate the adults of the human family.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

Target Excursions.—The annual target excursions of two of our crack military organizations—the City Guard, Capt. W. C. Little, and Company F, Franklin Light Infantry, Capt. McComb—came off during the present week, with all the pomp and circumstance befitting the occasion, and with all the extensive feasting and drinking necessary to render the same entirely agreeable. The Franklin's first prize—a pair of large gold-lined tankards, presented by F. MacCrellish & Co.—was won by Capt. McComb, and the City Guard's first prize—a beautiful medal, valued at $300—was won by private Wood. We thank both companies for their kind invitations, and regret that we were unable to go to the shooting, and carry off the prizes and champagne.

Railroad Extension.—The Sacramento Valley Railroad Company is now running regular trains to Shingle Springs, only nine miles this side of Placerville, and fifty miles west of Freeport. This company is extending its line with an energy and rapidity which well deserves the increased freight and passenger patronage bestowed upon it by the public. The line is being rapidly pushed toward Placerville, and is to be completed to Mud Springs November 1st. It will reach Placerville by the 1st of January next.

Educational.—Miss M. Lammond's College for Young Ladies, on Silver street, will commence its second half-yearly term for boarding and day pupils on the 6th of July next. Miss Lammond was formerly principal of the Young Ladies' Seminary at Benicia, and in experience, ability and energy is peculiarly adapted to assume the care of an educational institute.

Regatta.—There is to be a grand contest between the pilot yachts and pleasure sail-boats on the Bay, July 4th. Four pilot boats and nine Bay boats (two first-class, five second-class and two third-class) are already entered.

THE CHAMBERED NAUTILUS.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

THIS is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
Sails the unshadowed main,
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet Summer wind its purpled wings
In gulfs enchanted, where the siren sings,
And coral reefs lie bare,
Where the cold sea-maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl:
Wrecked is the ship of pearl!
And every chambered cell,
Where its dim dreaming life was wont to dwell,
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,
Before thee lies revealed—
Its irised ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed!

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil:
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more.

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by thee,
Child of the wandering sea,
Cast from her lap forlorn!
From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton blew from wreathed horn!
While on mine ear it rings,
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings:

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!

HOW WE TRAPPED THE BURGLARS.

WE lived in a Terrace at the time in which my tale is laid, in what we may term a sub-district of London, for we were within five miles of Charing Cross; and the dark month of December was upon us. Robberies had been frequent in our neighborhood, and no less than three houses out of the ten in the Terrace had been entered by burglars and robbed, and yet no discovery of the thieves had taken place. So ably, also, had the work of entry been accomplished, that in no case had the inmates been alarmed; and it was not until the servants descended in the morning that the discovery of a robbery was made.

In two of the three cases, an entrance had been effected through a pantry-window, by removing a pane of glass, and cutting a small hole in the shutter. This window was on the ground-floor, and could easily be reached, therefore, from outside. In the third robbery, an upper window was entered by means of a knife which forced back the fastening, and of course allowed the sash to be raised.

So rapidly had these robberies occurred, that the whole neighborhood was alarmed. The police shook their heads, and looked knowing, but did nothing; and what was much to be lamented, failed to find any clue to the robbers, who, they at the same time asserted, were evidently not regular cracksmen.

Affairs had reached such a stage, that we used to sleep with a revolver close to our bedside, when we happened to have a friend come to stay with us a few days. This friend, who was an old jungle-hunter, was au fait at every artifice by which the animal creation might be captured. He was delighted at the idea of having an adventure with burglars, and scorned the belief that they were more than a match in cunning for even the average bush hunter. It was in vain that we assured him it was an axiom that an accomplished robber could effect an entrance into any house; and that instruments were used of such a nature as to cut holes in doors without noise, and, in fact, that through roofs and sky-lights, down chimneys, and up water-spouts, an accomplished burglar could easily enter the best-defended house.

Our friend's argument was, that a burglar was a man on watch, who took advantage of the residents being asleep and unsuspecting; "but," said he, "let my suspicions be raised, and I will defy any burglar to enter my house without my my having due warning; because, though I may be asleep, still I shall hear his approach, and can then make my arrangements to welcome him."

Although we were not desirous of having our house robbed, yet we wished much that our friend's confidence should be taken out of him.

A few days after this conversation, the police informed us that several suspicious characters had been seen about, and recommended us to be on the alert. Here, then, was a good opportunity to test my friend's skill and wakefulness; so, having informed him of the policeman's warning, I asked him if he felt confident to undertake the defence of the house.

"Certainly," he replied; "I only demand a dark lantern, and stipulate that you have a pair of slippers beside your bed. I also must go to bed last, and no servant is to go down stairs before me in the morning; nor is any one to walk about during the night: then I will defy the burglars."

Thus it was agreed that my friend was to act the part of guardian, and was to commence his charge on the ensuing night.

Three nights had passed, and no alarms had occurred, and no robberies taken place; we began to think our alarms had been groundless; but our friend said that now was the very time to be most guarded, for that no wise burglar would rob when he was expected; besides, he said, we have not had a windy night yet; it is when doors and windows rattle, and the chimney rumbles, that robberies are best effected, not when every strange noise is audible—thus, he said, he did not give up hopes of yet having something to say to the robbers before his visit terminated.

I usually sleep very lightly, and therefore awoke readily upon hearing a tap at my bedroom door during the fourth night of our watch. It was my friend's voice that answered me, and we were requested to come out at once.

"As soon as I strike a match," I replied.

"Nonsense, man; a light will spoil the whole thing. Come in the dark; put on a dressing-gown and your slippers, and come at once."

I was soon provided as he wished, and ready to descend the stairs in the dark

"Now, remember," said my friend, "there are seven steps to the first landing, twelve others afterwards, and the fourth step creaks abominably, so be careful to descend without noise."

The night was boisterous, and many a window and door shook and rattled, so that the slight noise we made in descending the stairs was not sufficient to have alarmed even he most keen-eared listener. We descended to the ground floor, entered the pantry, and then standing perfectly still, devoted ourselves to listening.

In a very few seconds we heard a grating noise on the shutter, then an interval of quiet, and again a noise; presently the window was gently raised, and again all was quiet. The noise of a heavy vehicle passing the house seemed to afford an opportunity for a more decided effort, for while the rattle of the wheels was loudest, a crack sounded from the shutter, and we could hear that the bolt was forced, for the shutter was gently moved.

"Don't stir till I do, and hold your breath if possible," whispered my friend in my ear.

I found the latter a difficult request to comply with, for my heart was beating with rapidity, and thumping against my ribs in the most excited way; still I stood quiet and trusted to my friend.

Nothing could be more cautious than the proceedings of the robbers; the shutter was pushed back in the most slow and steady manner; had there been even a bell fastened to it, I doubt whether it would have been made to ring. At intervals there was a rest from work, evidently for the purpose of listening, and then one of the robbers placed his leg across the window-sill, and lightly descended into the pantry.

The night, even out of doors, was very dark, and in the corner where we stood it was black as Erebus; our forms, therefore, were quite undistinguishable, and the only chance of discovering us was by touching or hearing us.

The first burglar was soon followed by a second, whilst we could hear that a third, who was outside, was to remain there on watch.

"Now, let's light up," said number two.

"Not yet, till you push the shutter to," replied the other, "or the glim 'll be seen; then you come and hold the box."

The shutter was quietly pushed to, and both robbers moved away a few paces from the window by which they had entered By the quiet way in which they walked, it was evident that they were either without shoes or had on India-rubber coverings. Of their size or weapons, we could see nothing, and I began to doubt whether our position was an agreeable one, as I was armed only with a sword, a weapon, however, I knew how to use, whilst of my friend's means of offence or defence I knew nothing.

I had not long to wait, for a lucifer was struck by one of the men immediately, and the room consequently lighted up; at the same instant my friend drew up the slide of the dark lantern and flashed the light on the faces of the two men, at the same time showing the muzzle of a revolver pointed towards them.

"If either of you move, I'll put a couple of bullets in him," said my friend, as he placed his back against the window by twhich the men had entered. "Now drop that crowbar," he continued, in a voice of authority; "down with it, and you," he said to me, "pull open the shutter and shout for the police."

The idea that is usually entertained of a burglar is, that he is a man of great size, strength and daring, and that he would in an encounter annihilate any moderate man. When, then, the light revealed the faces and forms of the men we had captured, our humble self, although no great pugilist, yet felt able to defeat either of them if it came to a matter of fists, and I must own that the pale and astonished faces of the men were not indicative of any great courage.

Our shout for the police was shortly answered, and the burglars having been subdued by the sight of the revolver, the muzzle of which pointed first at one and then at the other, were captured by the police, three of whom were speedily on the spot, and conveyed to the lock-up, whilst we and a detective who had been brought down from London some days previously, examined the details by which the men had effected an entrance.

"You were very lucky to hear them, especially on such a night," said the detective; "when once they're in, they move like mice. We know them, and I expect they'll get seven years."

The man was about correct, for one, the older offender, was sentenced to six, the other to five years penal servitude.

"It will, I suppose, be of no use trying to sleep again to-night, for it is three o'clock," said my friend.

"I cannot sleep," was my reply; "and I am dying to hear how you found out that these men were approaching the house."

Being then of one mind, we partly robed ourselves, lighted a fire in the kitchen, and soon being provided with cigars and grog, got very comfortable and satisfied with our work. My friend then began his account, which he gave much in the following words:

"The burglar, as I told you, has usually the advantage of surprise; he can select the time at which he makes his attack, and if his proceedings are carried on cautiously, he enters a house before he is heard. Few men would, however, venture to do so, unless they previously had good information as to the interior arrangements of the house; this they obtain either from servants, tradesmen, or some one who visits the locality, or they come themselves as tramps, or with some trifle to sell. Thus, if there are bells attached to doors or windows, they find it out; and they know tolerably well the domestic arrangements of the locality they purpose trying their skill upon. There are, too, conventional methods of protecting a house, such as bolts, bars, chains, locks, etc., all of which require merely time and proper instruments to overcome. It therefore occurred to me that novelty and simplicity combined would be more than a match for the coarse intellect of a burglar, and thus I made my plans, which, you see, answered very well."

"No doubt about that," we replied.

"Well now, come to my room," he continued, "and see the apparatus."

We entered his room, and there, close beside his pillow, was a tin box, in the bottom of which was a key.

"This is nearly all the apparatus," he said; "but you notice some thread fastened to the key: trace that thread, and you will find it passes through that small hole in the sash; from there it goes down to the back-yard; and now you will comprehend my plan. I knew that no man could approach the back-part of the house without walking up the back-yard, which is only four yards wide. I therefore tied across the back-yard, and about two feet from the ground, some fine black thread; this was made fast on one side, but slipped through a loop, and led up to my window on the other. The thread then passed through the hole I had bored in the window-sash, and was then made fast to this key. Under the key I placed the tin box, you see; and over the key was a bar, to prevent it from being dragged up more than six inches. Each night, before I went to bed, I just drew the string tight, and fastened it in the yard, taking care to free it before morning, so as to keep the plan a secret. If, then, a man, or anything above two feet high, walked up the yard, the string was pressed against, the key was drawn up sharply against the bar, and the string broken, when the key, of course, fell into the tin box, making quite noise enough to wake me. Immediately the string or thread broke, it would fall to the ground; and the person who had done all this would not have felt anything, the resistance being so slight. I must own I should have preferred horse-hair to thread, but as it was, the latter answered very well. I was fast asleep when the key fell, but immediately awoke, and taking my lantern outside my door, lighted it, and came to you, for I knew that a man only in the back-yard could have dropped my key. So now you see how the burglars were trapped, for you know all the rest."

"Certainly, you succeeded, and so we ought not to be critical," we replied. "But suppose they had entered by the front window, instead of by the back, how then?"

"You see this thread," he said, grasping one that was near the door: "pull it."

I did so, and immediately a tin cup dropped into the hand-basin.

"That thread goes down stairs, and is fastened across the front window; but I broke that off as I went out of my room, so that it should not impede my journey down stairs. Thus I could at once know whether a man was approaching the back-door or had entered by the front window, and in either case, I think I could have captured him."

Simplicity had certainly been adopted in the present case, but the means had shown themselves to be efficient.

"People are usually very silly," continued our friend, "when they hear, or think they hear, suspicious noises of a night. The first thing they usually do is to light a candle, which proclaims to the robber that he has been heard, and must escape; then they go about the house with this candle, and make a great noise, so that a man may have plenty of time to get away, or to hide himself. Instead of this, if a person were to listen intently, he would be able to hear any suspicious noises distinctly, and decide upon their cause: then, as he must know his own house better than a robber, he is best off of the two in the dark; and when, having armed himself, he has quietly opened his door, he may wait and listen until the robbers are heard moving about, when he may take such steps as may seem necessary. If every person were merely to plan what was to be done in case of robbers entering his house, and then were to carry out this if the occasion required it, burglary would be too dangerous and unsuccessful a proceeding to be popular or profitable, and thus might be given up for a more honest means of obtaining a livelihood; so that really we may consider ourselves to have done the community at large a benefit, when we capture one of these gentry; whilst those who allow their houses to be robbed with impunity, jeopardize their neighbors' property."

STORY OF ITALIAN BRIGANDAGE.

LIEUTENANT GERARD was stationed at Serra, on the sides of Aspromonte. His wife, who was one of the most beautiful women of her time, undertook to join him while brigandage was at its height. She was accompanied by a file of troops. After having been exhausted by frequent and sudden assaults of the brigands of Castrovillari, the troops were at last taken in a disadvantageous position, and all shot down. The unfortunate woman suffered every indignity, and was finally killed. Not long after, the brigands of Serra and Mongiana informed the municipal authorities of the former place that they desired to surrender according to the orders of General Manhes. They stipulated that, to save them from public indignity, the rendition should take place at night, and in a house agreed upon. Gerard and the civil authorities accepted the conditions, kept the appointment, and were all murdered. Manhes heard of the atrocious crime, and resolved upon a summary punishment. With an escort of fifty lances he set out for Serra, moving by the shortest roads, and arrived so suddenly that the blare of his trumpets gave the first notice of his approach. He rode into the public square, and the first objects that his eyes encountered were some bloody human heads. Turning to some persons near him, he inquired—

"What horrible thing is this?"

"General, we are the friends of the civil authorities killed in that night. We have taken vengeance upon some of our neighbors who had part in the treachery. Ask anybody. You will find that these were killed by our hands."

The general turned away, sickened at the spectacle, and still more at the fierce barbarity of these avengers of blood. He spent the night in a painful study upon the problem which this case presented. Should he take vengeance for the murder of Gerard, as these mountaineers had avenged their friends? But to what purpose? Sights of blood did not appal people bred in the presence of assassination. Private revenge, then and now the curse of the Neapolitan provinces, had been taken, perhaps upon the innocent, but, at all events, this work only tended to imbrute still more the violent character of those men. Manhes resolved to extend the principle of his proclamation to the inhabitants of Serra. He would outlaw them, cut them off from society, reduce them to the level of brutes. There was one, and only one way to accomplish this. Manhes was not the man to shrink from any means to a desirable end. He, a layman, excommunicated the town. No one who does not understand the nature of these men, can comprehend what is meant in that sentence. Their tender place was and is their intense religious superstition. The next morning Manhes collected the inhabitants upon the public square, and addressed them. They expected a sack of the village, with, perhaps, a dozen executions, and had spent the night in removing their effects to the woods. Manhes, from long service in Italy, not only spoke Italian fluently but is said to have had great facility in the dialects of the Neapolitan provinces. The substance of his address, as preserved in his memoirs, was as follows:

"The sack of your village and the death of you all would be small punishment for your want of faith and humanity. I decree a greater punishment than this. From now forward I condemn you to be no longer a part of human society. I exclude you from all part or lot in the Church or the State. I order and decree that your churches be closed, and your priests, without one exception, be shut up in the prison at Maida. The communes around you will have orders to draw a cordon about you, and to shoot whoever, without my orders, shall attempt to cross the line. Your children shall be born without baptism; your old men shall die without the sacraments; young men and women shall have no magistrate to unite them, no priest to bless them. And this is my inexorable, implacable sentence. I abandon you to your infamous destiny."

This singular address was delivered with indescribable fervor and emphasis, adorned with every figure of speech that could strike these vivid imaginations. The fright of the people was terrible, but the priests endeavored to subdue the popular fear by assurances that the sentence never could be, never would be carried out. They did not know Manhes. He gave orders to the militia of the communes around Serra to shoulder their muskets on a given day, and draw a cordon around the condemned district. Then he ordered the priests to be conducted to Maida. When the priests had disappeared, Manhes set out to leave the town. Outside of it he encountered a procession of spectres, "filling the air with sighs and woes." It was the entire population kneeling by the roadside, beating their breasts with stones, and imploring pardon, or any other fate than this.

"Kill us at once, but do not torment us with eternal pains."

The inexorable Manhes put spurs to his horse, and was soon out of sight, leaving universal dejection behind him. One of the proprietors in the city said to the people:

"There is only one way of escape. You know the brigands who murdered Gerard. Capture or kill them, and Manhes will pardon you."

Inspired with this hope, the whole population gave chase on a given day, and did not rest until every one of the assassins had been killed or captured. The general, informed of this proceeding, revoked his sentence, and Serra was thoroughly cured of the brigandage disease.

JOHN LEECH.

LEECH possessed the finest eye for all objects of natural beauty. A keen sense of the beautiful distinguishes him from almost all other caricaturists. It is to be found occasionally, though rarely, in the earlier works of Gilray, and more frequently in those of Rowlandson, but disappears almost entirely from the later productions of both. In Cruikshauk it finds its chief manifestation when he disports himself amongst the creations of fairyland; and it is well worthy of remark, that, unlike his predecessors, this sense of beauty seems to have strengthened instead of diminishing as time has mellowed the genius of that great master. Over Leech it has from the first exercised an abiding influence, and there is hardly a production of his pencil in which some touch does not appear to bear testimony to his devotion. His power of expressing beauty by a few lines strengthened with years, but with increasing facility of hand came in some degree the defect of mannerism. One type of beauty took possession of his heart, and he too often contented himself with reproducing it. There are other artists of kindred genius to whose works we might refer as examples of a similar habit; and when it is remembered how rapid and unceasing the call upon his creative power was, that, week after week, for a period of twenty years, he produced designs which, for the amount of thought and invention they required, were equal to pictures, our surprise will be at the variety which he introduced in the character and expression of the actors in the scenes of his comedy. Leech's type of beauty is thoroughly English and domestic—the gay, modest, good-tempered girl who is the sunbeam on her father's hearth, the beloved of her brothers and sisters, the adored of her cousins, who passes by natural transition into the faithful wife and fond mother, who bears around her through life a halo of purity and innocence, is the muse that inspires his pencil. This purity is a constant characteristic of Leech's beauties. Constance, who drives her private hansom—Miss Selina Hardman, who asks poor Robinson to "give her a lead" over a five-barred gate—Diana, who slips off at an ugly fence, leaving the skirt of her habit on the pommel of her saddle—have not the most remote affinity to the objectionable young ladies of the present day who ape the graces of Anonyma as she flaunts in the Park, are rather proud to be taken for "pretty horsebreakers," and expose themselves to the ridicule and contempt of their partners by talking of persons and places of the mere knowledge of whose names they ought to be ashamed. It is difficult to say whether the hunting-field, the park, the croquet-lawn, the ball-room or the seaside has furnished the richer field for the display of this phase of the genius of Leech; but we are disposed to think that all these must yield to indoor scenes of domestic life. He revels in the society of children. Baby is a constant source of delight to him; the sports, the loves, the joys and the sorrows of childhood awaken his warmest sympathy. We know of nothing more perfect than some of his representations of children's parties—with what kindly satire he smiles at the affectation of the little premature men and women; and when he takes them out to dabble on the seashore, or mounts the boys on rough ponies and starts them for a ride over the downs, how the joyous shout and laugh ring in our ears.—Blackwood.

A BATH that everybody gets into once a week. The Sabbath.

ON THE SEA-SHORE.

A WRECKER.

THERE was not a sail in sight, and we saw none that day, for they had all sought harbors in the late storm, and had not been able to get out again; and the only human beings whom we saw on the beach for several days, were one or two wreckers looking for drift-wood and fragments of wrecked vessels. After an easterly storm in the Spring, this beach is sometimes strewn with eastern wood from one end to the other, which, as it belongs to him who saves it, and the Cape is nearly destitute of wood, is a godsend to the inhabitants. We soon met one of these wreckers—a regular Cape Cod man, with whom we parleyed, with a bleached and weather-beaten face, within whose wrinkles I distinguished no particular feature. It was like an old sail endowed with life—a hanging-cliff of weather-beaten flesh—like one of the clay bowlders which occurred in that sand-bank. He had on a hat which had seen salt water, and a coat of many pieces and colors, though it was mainly the color of the beach, as if it had been sanded. His variegated back—for his coat had many patches, even between the shoulders—was a rich study to us, when we had passed him and looked round. It might have been dishonorable for him to have so many scars behind, it is true, if he had not had many more and more serious ones in front. He looked as if he sometimes saw a doughnut, but never descended to comfort; too grave to laugh, too tough to cry; as indifferent as a clam—like a sea-clam with hat on and legs, that was out walking the strand. He may have been one of the Pilgrims—Peregrine White, at least—who has kept on the back side of the Cape, and let the centuries go by. He was looking for wrecks, old logs, water-logged and covered with barnacles, or bits of boards and joists, even chips, which he drew out of the reach of the tide and stacked up to dry. When the log was too large to carry far, he cut it up where the last wave had left it, or rolling it a few feet, appropriated it by sticking two stieks into the ground crosswise above it. Some rotten trunk, which in Maine cumbers the ground, and is, perchance, thrown into the water on purpose, is here thus carefully picked up, split and dried, and husbanded. Before winter the wrecker painfully carries these things up the bank on his shoulders by a long diagonal, slanting path made with a hoe in the sand, if there is no hollow at hand. You may see his hooked pike-staff always laying on the bank ready for use. He is the true monarch of the beach, whose "right there is none to dispute," and he is as much identified with it as a beach bird.

CAST ASHORE.

Objects on the beach, whether men or inanimate things, look not only exceedingly grotesque, but much larger and more wonderful than they actually are. Lately, when approaching the sea-shore several degrees south of this, I saw before me, seemingly half a mile distant, what appeared like bold and rugged cliffs on the beach, fifteen feet high, and whitened by the sun and waves; but after a few steps it proved to be low heaps of rags—part of the cargo of a wrecked vessel—scarcely more than a foot in height. Once, also it was my business to go in search of the relics of a human body, mangled by sharks, which had just been cast up, a week after a wreck, having got the direction from a lighthouse keeper: I should find it a mile or two distant over the sand, a dozen rods from the water, covered with a cloth, by a stick stuck up. I expected that I must look very narrowly to find so small an object, but the sandy beach, half a mile wide, and stretching farther than the eye could reach, was so perfectly smooth and bare, and the mirage toward the sea so magnifying, that when I was half a mile distant the insignificant sliver which marked the spot looked like a bleached spar, and the relics were as conspicuous as if they lay in state on that sandy plain, or a generation had labored to pile up their cairn there. Close at hand they were simply some bones with a little flesh adhering to them, in fact, only a slight inequality in the sweep of the shore. There was nothing at all remarkable about them, and they were singularly inoffensive both to the senses and the imagination. But as I stood there they grew more and more imposing. They were alone with the beach and the sea, whose hollow roar seemed addressed to them, and I was impressed as if there was an understanding between them and the ocean which necessarily left me out, with my snivelling sympathies. That dead body had taken possession of the shore, and reigned over it as no living one could, in the name of a certain majesty which belonged to it.—Thoreau's Cape Cod.

"ALWAYS buy your chestnuts boiled," said Mrs. Snow to Abemlech, who was about investing a penny in that little brown commodity, "cause the raw ones want looking after, and the wormy ones you have to throw away; but with the biled ones it don't make no difference—worms can't hurt nobody when they're biled."

IN Italy and Germany the satires and burlesques on the French Emperor's Life of Cæsar sell more readily than the work itself, and are vastly more popular.

NOTICE

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lob, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1865.

TO BE SERIOUSLY CONSIDERED.

[Mrs. Extra Billy Smith is accused of appropriating to her private use the spoons and other silver belonging to the gubernatorial mansion at Richmond, and the property of the State of Virginia.—Exchange.]

THEFT, considered as an accompaniment of refinement, always attracts the attention of the ethical student. When a gorgeous dame whose connections give her position in society, is caught hiding beneath her mantle of respectability so eccentric a sin as shoplifting, we whisper and wonder over the fact with ludicrous earnestness. It is not theft that she was guilty of: it cannot be the same vulgar sin that sends a penniless culprit to the house of correction. There gathers straightway about the furtive transaction, a halo of romance which dignifies a felony into insanity. We tap our skulls with significant leniency and hunt through the family history for hereditary substantiation of our theory. We turn to medical ethics for an apology for the social disturbance: we do anything rather than believe that high-minded wealth can ever stoop to miserly peculations. Mrs. Smith did not steal spoons after the same dull, stupid fashion attributed to the "Maid and the Magpie." She was merely under the unfortunate influence of a mental aberration, which, for the nonce, destroyed the exact equilibrium there ordinarily exists in the intellectual perceptions of the propriety of a just regard for the laws of property. How could she, a lady who had occupied high social rank, who had wielded feminine political power, who had been the dispenser of the gifts of fortune, who was above the ordinary fears of poverty—how could she —steal? The vulgar attorney who might have the audacity to harbor the charge, the grand jury that could have the heartlessness to indict her, would receive a scorching rebuke from her counsel for the raid upon well-digested ideas of medical jurisprudence.

We deem the subject well worthy the attention of the public at this time, when so many eminent kleptomaniacs have fallen into our hands. Let us have our prisoners ably counselled. There is room for the advocate of Howell Cobb to develop a branch of legal defences which has so far been tolerably neglected. Cobb never stole. Why should we use expressions grating to social feeling? For the past four years the afflicted patient has been laboring under a strange malady having its root in a weakness about public property, and his medico-legal adviser might hazard the opinion that he was as yet only doubtfully convalescent. The disease has been epidemic among Southern Senators; and though a filthy representative from a Northern State might possibly be indicted for so vulgar a peccadillo, the chivalrous South, when in its palmy days, would never have sent to Washington so humiliating a specimen of its greatness.

Why, too, could not some of our disgraced generals employ the same reasonings to wash away their peculations? Banks lies under heavy suspicions; let him demonstrate to the military commission which investigates his conduct, that whatever dubious facts there may be in his record are attributable to this aristocratic infirmity. Why should Blenker's famous hot-stove-stealing corps tarry under public impeachment? The disease of "cramping" had taken hold of them with the violence of a pest, and was no more to be blamed morally than the famous dysentery of Sterling Price. Then, too, the whole character of the rebellion might be made to > "Suffer a sea change

> Into something rich and strange,"

And the conduct of the Confederate navy, the Canadian arson-lovers—even the Salvador pirates would be covered affectionately with the cloak of medical and judicial learning. We here express our regret that Mr. Pixley had not seen fit to introduce the matter as a sound point in the case of his clients.

Our modesty refuses us the power to elaborate the ideas which we have hastily suggested. We commend them to the attention of the bar, both of the East and West, and we trust that those who have the defence of the illustrious Southern criminality may seriously study the interesting annals of Kleptomania.

(For the Californian.)

ADVOCACY.

EVERY now and then a community is attacked with some moral epidemic, just as at times appear in various countries pestilential diseases which rage violently for a while and then disappear, to be heard of again perhaps not for a century. About every three years we become outrageously good, as if to atone for having during that period been generally bad.—Now it is the Sunday law, then it is the temperence question, and yet again it is the "social evil," whatever that euphemism may mean. The virtuous cholera which is now raging on this coast is to be attributed to an awful contemplation of the evils of advocacy, and Frank Pixley, Esq., not having been kept in conscientious quarantine, seems to be the individual who has infected the body politic. In defending, as a professional advocate, certain persons charged with an attempt to capture the American steamer Salvador, and turn the same into a Confederate privateer, it appears to be thought that he has broken all the commandments at once. And though he has done nothing but what hundreds in his profession have been doing, are now doing, and will in future continue to do, in the opinion of a large class of people he is to be looked upon as a legal leper, to be "utterly cast out and trodden under foot of men."

The radical error that lies at the foundation of most that has been said or written upon this subject, is the enormous assumption that an innocent man before a legal tribunal has any more rights than a guilty man—in the concession that "on trial" a man innocent of a crime is to be regarded as any better than a man guilty of a crime. We assert that there is no more sanction for defending a man known to be innocent than there is for defending a man known to be guilty. That an advocate has the right, and that it is his duty to do for the one just exactly what he has the right, and what it is his duty to do for the other. That guilt and innocence, to an advocate in the performance of his task, must of necessity be the same.

Every man charged with crime has the right to be tried by the laws of the land. Admitting for the sake of the argument that the advocate called upon to defend the prisoner knows perfectly well that he has done the deed—murder, if you please—how does that affect the question, has he not the right to be tried by the laws of the land? The advocate enters the Court and demands a fair trial. The fact that the prisoner is known to the counsel to be guilty, would not justify that counsel in sacrificing any one of his client's rights. It would not justify him in permitting the prisoner to be tried by six jurors instead of twelve, in letting in hearsay testimony against the defendant, in allowing witnesses to be examined not in presence of the criminal, in assenting to the Judge's expressing in his charge an opinion as to the facts of the case. Why? Because all this would be illegal, and the guilty man, standing upon his rights, claims through his counsel that nothing illegal shall be done against him. We presume no one contends that because a counsel knows the prisoner to be guilty, therefore such counsel has the right to execute such prisoner. Nor has any one that right until, in accordance with the laws of the State, he has been convicted of the crime with which he stands charged. That he shall be convicted in such manner, if at all, and in such manner only, it is at once the right and the duty of every advocate to see enforced. Whether in fact guilty, and known to be so to the advocate, cannot and does not enter into the matter at all. For how does it stand with the prisoner known to the counsel to be innocent. What more can be done for the innocent than for the guilty. The prisoner who is innocent, and known to be so by his counsel, cannot demand to be tried by sixteen jurors instead of twelve, nor ask that hearsay testimony be given in his favor, nor that depositions taken out of Court be read in evidence, nor that the Judge in his charge shall express an opinion as to the facts of the case. Why? Because all this is illegal, and he cannot claim that anything illegal shall be done to acquit him. The innocent man may object to anything illegal being done. So may the guilty man. The guilty man cannot claim that anything illegal shall be done to acquit him, neither can the innocent man. If a man innocent and known to be so to his counsel is possessed of a single right which is not shared to the full by the man guilty and known to be so to his counsel, we should like to see it pointed out. In fact it seems to be forgotten that lawyers are not priests; that it is no part of their business to rebuke men for their immorality, or praise them for their morality.

"In judicial proceedings the rights of suitors are dealt with according to the law of the country, and by their compliance with or departure from the rules of that law are they to be judged. It may be that by applying the law a criminal escapes punishment, or a just man meets injury. That is the fault of the law. But since men's legal rights are the creatures of municipal law, it is the duty of the advocate to see that his client obtains those rights to which by law he is entitled; and if, by rules of law, a man actually guilty in a moral point of view is not guilty in a legal point of view, it would be as gross an act of injustice in his counsel to abandon him, as it would be in his judges to condemn him. For since it is by the laws of his country, and not by the laws of God, that he is being judged, he has a right to have proper care taken that he is only found guilty according to those laws, by the standard of which he is judged."

We commend this quotation to a correspondent of the Sacramento Union, who has been writing quite at length on this subject, and giving it as his opinion that "there is much force" in views directly opposite to those here expressed, whereas there is neither force nor justice in his opinion, nor in the views to which he refers. If one would for a moment think that no man, if he choose to demand counsel, can be tried without counsel being allowed him; that it is in the power of the Court to appoint any member of the bar, no matter how distinguished, to defend any criminal, no matter how poor or how guilty, he would see that the counsel who in the first instance consents to be the advocate of a criminal, only does that which the law demands shall be done, and which, if he refuse to do, it can force him to perform. If all the members of the bar should refuse to defend a criminal when called upon, every one of them would violate that law which it is their duty to uphold, and would furnish a cure escape to the criminal, since he could never be tried or brought to punishment "in accordance with the law of the land."

But there is another question entirely distinct from that which we have just considered, which people always contrive to mix with the other. And that is, "Has the advocate, in defending a prisoner, the right to do more than see that the prisoner obtains the benefits of the laws of his country?" Has an advocate the right, and is it his duty to solemnly protest that black is white, or that white is black? Is it for him to charge the witnesses with perjury, when he knows such charge to be false; to destroy the complainant's character, when he has no reason to believe it bad; to fasten, or attempt to fasten suspicion on another, whom he does not know to be guilty, in order to shift the same from the shoulders of his client?

It is not necessary to answer this question point blank, to sustain the assertion we have made, that an advocate has no more right to do for the innocent than for the guilty. We can reply, and do reply: If the advocate may act thus for the innocent man, he may act thus for the guilty man, and if he may not act thus for the guilty, he may not for the innocent. If he know his client to be innocent, we cannot see how that gives the advocate a right to deceive others, or to perjure himself, or how it becomes his duty to acquit his client, whom he knows to be innocent, by endeavoring to fasten suspicion upon one whom he does not know to be guilty; provided, that to deceive, to perjure one's self, to bear false witness, is wrong, immoral, and not to be permitted to counsel more than to ordinary men. If, however, it is granted that this may be done for the innocent, then, we claim, it can be equally done for the guilty. If it is not wrong, but right, in the one case, it is also not wrong, but right, in the other case. It does not help the matter any to say that the innocent ought to be acquitted, and the guilty ought to be convicted. Everybody admits that. The question is, What may the advocate do to secure the acquittal of his innocent client? what may he not do to secure the escape of his guilty client. And if it is held that he cannot do that which is wrong, immoral or criminal in aid of the guilty, because of its being wrong, immoral or criminal, he cannot, for the same reason, act thus for the innocent. And therefore it is that we claim, so far as concerns the duties of an advocate, there is no conceivable thing which can be done for a man known to his counsel to be innocent which may not be done for him known to be guilty. We need consider further neither of these questions at this particular time. The first, notwithstanding the correspondent of the Sacramento Union, has been settled. The second—"Has a lawyer the right to do anything expedient to save his client?—while not settled, has been answered affirmatively by many noble and learned men. Lord Macaulay, with all his prejudice against Mr. Montague, and with all his bitterness toward Bacon, was forced to say, when writing on this very topic: "We will not at present inquire whether the doctrine held on this subject by English lawyers be or be not agreeable to reason and morality. * * * Whether it be right, that not merely believing, but knowing, a statement to be true, he should do all that can be done by sophistry, by rhetoric, by solemn asseveration * * * to cause a jury to think that statement false. The professional rules, be they good or bad, are rules to which many wise and virtuous men have conformed, and are daily conforming." And we are not aware of any reason why Frank Pixley, in defending the Salvador prisoners, should be denied the advantage of these rules, if Delos Lake, in defending the "Chapman pirates," is to be allowed their shelter.

We have said thus much to show how unjust have been the aspersions cast upon Mr. Pixley. Why he should be singled out as a scapegoat cannot be explained, except upon the hypothesis of the moral influenza which for a few days, and for a few days only, has been prevailing in our midst. We have not asked the question, yet to be determined, whether these prisoners are guilty, nor commented upon the disgraceful conduct of those newspapers that have passed sentence before there has been any conviction. Nor have we noticed the important fact that Mr. Pixley may not think—may not know—as seems everywhere to be assumed, that his clients are guilty.

In point of fact, the second question we have mentioned hardly touches him at all. We do not agree with all that he said, but in an argument which fills nearly six columns of the Flag there is not, all told, a sixth of a column which violates any known rule of advocacy. We know of many in French, English and American jurisprudence, whose very names make "law" respectable in all quarters of the civilized world, who would have said more—scarcely one who would have said less. * * *

(For the Californian.)

SIDEWALKINGS.

THE time occupied in walking to and from my business I have always found to yield me a certain mental enjoyment which no other part of the twenty-four hours could give. Perhaps the physical exercise may have acted as a gentle stimulant of the brain, but more probably the comfortable consciousness that I could not reasonably be expected to be doing anything else—to be studying or improving my mind, for instance—always gave a joyous liberty to my fancy. I once thought it necessary to employ this interval in doing sums in arithmetic—in which useful study I was and still am lamentably deficient—but after one or two attempts at peripatetic computation, I gave it up. I am satisfied that much enjoyment is lost to the world by this nervous anxiety to improve our leisure moments, which, like the "shining hours" of Dr. Watts, unfortunately offer the greatest facilities for idle pleasure. I feel a profound pity for those misguided beings who are still impelled to carry text-books with them in cars, omnibuses and ferry-boats, and who generally manage to defraud themselves of those intervals of rest they most require. Nature must have her fallow moments, when she covers her exhausted fields with flowers instead of grain. Deny her this, and the next crop suffers for it. I offer this axiom as some apology for obtruding upon the reader a few of the speculations which have engaged my mind during these daily perambulations.

Few Californians know how to lounge gracefully. Business habits and a deference to the custom, even with those who have no business, give an air of restless anxiety to every pedestrian. The exceptions to this rule are apt to go to the other extreme, and wear a defiant, obtrusive kind of indolence which suggests quite as much inward disquiet and unrest. The shiftless lassitude of a gambler can never be mistaken for the lounge of a gentleman. Even the brokers who loiter upon Montgomery street at high noon are not loungers. Look at them closely and you will see a feverishness and anxiety under the mask of listlessness. They do not lounge—they lie in wait. No surer sign, I imagine, of our peculiar civilization can be found than this lack of repose in its constituent elements. You cannot keep Californians quiet even in their amusements. They dodge in and out of the theatre, opera and lecture room; they prefer the street cars to walking because they think they get along faster. The difference of locomotion between Broadway, New York, and Montgomery street, San Francisco, is a comparative view of eastern and western civilization.

There is a habit peculiar to many walkers, which Punch, some years ago, touched upon satirically, but which seems to have survived the jester's ridicule. It is that custom of stopping friends in the street, to whom we have nothing whatever to communicate, but whom we embarrass, for no other purpose than simply to show our friendship. Jones meets his friend Smith, whom he has met in nearly the same locality but a few hours before. During that interval, it is highly probable that no event of any importance to Smith, nor indeed to Jones, which by a friendly construction Jones could imagine Smith to be interested in, has occurred, or is likely to occur. Yet both gentlemen stop and shake hands earnestly. "Well, how goes it?" remarks Smith with a vague hope that something may have happened. "So so," replies the eloquent Jones feeling intuitively the deep vacuity of his friend answering to his own. A pause ensues, in which both gentlemen regard each other with an imbecile smile and a fervent pressure of the hand. Smith draws a long breath and looks up the street; Jones sighs heavily and gazes down the street. Another pause, in which both gentlemen disengage their respective hands and glance anxiously around for some conventional avenue of escape. Finally, Smith (with a sudden assumption of having forgotten an important engagement,) ejaculates, "Well, I must be off,"—a remark instantly echoed by the voluble Jones, and these gentlemen separate, only to repeat their miserable formula next day. In the above example I have compassionately shortened the usual leave-taking which in skillful hands may be protracted to a length which I shudder to recall. I have sometimes, when an active participant in these atrocious transactions, lingered in the hope of saying something natural to my friend, (feeling that he too was groping in the mazy labyrinths of his mind for a like expression,) until I have felt that we ought to have been separated by a policeman. It is astonishing how far the most wretched joke will go in these emergencies, and how it will, as it were, convulsively detach the two cohering particles. I have laughed (albeit, hysterically,) at some witticism under cover of which I escaped, that five minutes afterward I could not perceive possessed a grain of humor. I would advise any person who may fall into this pitiable strait, that, next to getting in the way of a passing dray and being forcibly disconnected, a joke is the most efficacious. A foreign phrase often may be tried with success; I have sometimes known Au revoir pronounced "Oreveer," to have the effect (as it ought) of severing friends.

But this is a harmless habit compared to a certain reprehensible practice in which sundry feeble-minded young men indulge. I have been stopped in the street and enthusiastically accosted by some fashionable young man who has engaged me in animated conversation, until, (quite accidentally,) a certain young belle would pass, whom my friend, of course, saluted. As by a strange coincidence, this occurred several times in the course of the week, and as my young friend's conversational powers invariably flagged after the lady had passed, I am forced to believe that the deceitful young wretch actually used me as a conventional background to display the graces of his figure to the passing fair. When I detected the trick, of course I made a point of keeping my friend, by strategic movements, with his back toward the young lady while I bowed to her myself. Since then, I understand that it is a regular custom of these callow youths, to encounter each other, with simulated cordiality, some paces in front of the young lady they wish to recognize, so that she cannot possibly cut them. The corner of California and Montgomery street is their favorite haunt. They may be easily detected by their furtive expression of eye, which betrays them even in the height of their apparent enthusiasm.

Speaking of eyes, you can generally settle the average gentility and good breeding of the people you meet in the street by the manner in which they return or evade your glance. "A gentleman," as the Autocrat has wisely said, is always "calm-eyed." There is just enough abstraction in his look to denote his individual power and the capacity for self-contemplation, while he is, nevertheless, quietly and unobtrusively observant. He does not seek, neither does he evade your observation. Snobs and prigs do the first; bashful and mean people do the second. There are some men who, on meeting your eye, immediately assume an expression quite different from the one which they previously wore, which, whether an improvement or not, suggests a disagreeable self-consciousness. Perhaps they fancy they are betraying something. There are others who return your look with unnecessary defiance, which suggests a like concealment. The symptoms of the eye are generally borne out in the figure. A man is very apt to betray his character by the manner in which he appropriates his part of the sidewalk. The man who resolutely keeps the middle of the pavement, and deliberately brushes against you, you may be certain would take the last piece of pie at the hotel table, and empty the cream jug on its way to your cup. The man who sidles by you, keeping close to the houses, and selecting the easiest planks, manages to slip through life in some such way, and to evade its sternest duties. The awkward man, who gets in your way, and throws you back upon the man behind you, and so manages to derange the harmonious procession of an entire block, is very apt to do the same thing in political and social economy. The inquisitive man, who deliberately shortens his pace, so that he may participate in the confidence you impart to your companion, has an eye not unfamiliar to keyholes, and probably opens his wife's letters. The loud man, who talks with the intention of being overheard, is the same egotist elsewhere. If there was any justice in Iago's sneer, that there were some "so weak of soul that in their sleep they mutter their affairs," what shall be said of the walking reverie-babblers? I have met men who were evidently rolling over, "like a sweet morsel under the tongue," some speech they were about to make, and others whose lips were framing curses. I remember once that, while walking behind an apparently respectable old gentleman, he suddenly uttered the exclamation, "Well, I'm d—d!" and then quietly resumed his usual manner. Whether he had at that moment become impressed with a truly orthodox disbelief in his ultimate salvation, or whether he was simply indignant, I never could tell.

I have been hesitating for some time to speak—or if indeed to speak at all—of that lovely and critic-defying sex, whose bright eyes and voluble prattle have not been without effect in tempering the austerities of my peripatetic musing. I have been humbly thankful that I have been permitted to view their bright dresses and those charming bonnets which seem to have brought the birds and flowers of Spring within the dreary limits of the town, and—I trust I shall not be deemed unkind in saying it—my pleasure was not lessened by the reflection that the display, to me at least, was inexpensive. I have walked in—and I fear occasionally on—the train of the loveliest of her sex who has preceded me. If I have sometimes wondered why two young ladies always began to talk vivaciously on the approach of any good-looking fellow; if I have wondered whether the mirror-like qualities of all large show-windows at all influenced their curiosity regarding silks and calicos; if I have ever entertained the same ungentlemanly thought concerning daguerreotype show cases; if I have ever misinterpreted the eye-shot which has passed between two pretty women—more searching, exhaustive and sincere than any of our feeble ogles: if I have ever committed these or any other impertinences, it was only to retire beaten and discomfitted, and to confess that masculine philosophy, while it soars beyond Sirius and the ring of Saturn stops short at the steel periphery which encompasses the simplest school-girl. BRET.

A SECOND REVIEW OF THE GRAND ARMY.

I READ last night of the Grand Review
In Washington's chiefest avenue—
Two Hundred Thousand men in blue
I think they said was the number—
Till I seemed to hear their trampling feet,
The bugle blast and the drum's quick beat,
The clatter of hoofs in the stony street,
The cheers of people who came to greet,
And the thousand details that to repeat
Would only my verse encumber—
Till I fell in a reverie, sad and sweet,
And then to a fitful slumber.

When, lo! in a vision I seemed to stand
In the lonely Capitol—on each hand
Far stretched the portico, dim and grand
Its columns ranged like a martial band
Of sheeted spectres whom some command
Had called to a last reviewing;
And the streets of the city were white and bare,
No footfall echoed across the square,
But out of the misty midnight air
I heard in the distance a trumpet blare,
And the wandering night-winds seemed to bear
The sound of a far tattooing.

But I held my breath with fear and dread,
For into the square, with a brazen tread,
There rode a figure whose stately head
O'erlooked the review that morning,
That never bowed from its firm-set seat
When the living column passed its feet,
Yet now rode steadily up the street
To the phantom bugle's warning;

Till it reached the Capitol square and wheeled,
And there in the moonlight stood revealed
A well-known form that in State and field
Had led our patriot sires;
Whose face was turned to the sleeping camp,
Afar through the river's fog and dump
That showed no flicker nor waning lamp
Nor wasted bivouac fires.

And I saw a phantom army come
With never a sound of fife or drum
But keeping time to a throbbing hum
Of wailing and lamentation;
The martyred heroes of Malvern Hill,
Of Gettysburg and Chancellorville,
The men whose wasted figures fill
The patriot graves of the nation.

And there came the nameless dead—the men
Who perished in feverish swamp and fen,
The slowly-starved of the prison-pen;
And, marching beside the others,
Came the dusky martyrs of Pillow's fight,
With limbs enfranchised and bearing bright;
I thought—perhaps 'twas the pale moonlight—
They looked as white as their brothers!

And so all night marched the Nation's dead
With never a banner above them spread,
Nor a badge nor a motto brandished;
No mark—save the bare uncovered head
Of the silent bronze Reviewer—
With never an arch save the vaulted sky,
With never a flower save those that lie
On the distant graves—for love could buy
No gift that was purer or truer.

So all night long swept the strange array,
So all night long till the morning gray
I watched for one who had passed away,
With a reverent awe and wonder—
Till a blue cap waved in the lengthening line,
And I knew that one who was kin of mine
Had come, and I spake—and lo! that sign
Awakened me from my slumber.

BRET.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—A fire occurred on Sunday evening last, commencing in a hay warehouse between Sacramento and Market streets. The Fire Department never worked with more energy, but not withstanding the gallant efforts of the firemen, twenty-five buildings were destroyed; aggregate loss, about $65,000.

AN IMMORAL CONSIDERATION.

I READ in the journals that "an officer of rank" at Vienna has bequeathed the whole of his fortune to his nephew, on the condition that "he should never read a newspaper."

I believe our English law strictly prevents any testator from imposing an immoral condition on his heir; and I therefore am strongly disposed to think that such a bequest as this I have quoted should not be considered as binding.

Had the "officer of rank" declared by his last will that his nephew, in order to inherit, should be blinded or deprived of his hearing, he could not have more egregiously violated every sentiment of right feeling than by this cruel edict. In fact, he would virtually consign his unhappy heir to both of these calamities together.

Now, it may be fair enough to tolerate the eccentricities of the living man. It is not impossible that in his character there may be many traits which will compensate for all his oddities. The whim or caprice he may ride as his hobby may not indispose him to generous actions or kindly sentiments; and we may, besides, always indulge the hope that, with a wider experience of the world and its ways, he may live to get over the delusions which once haunted him, and act and behave like his fellows.

Death, however, excludes this charitable hope, and I think it very questionable policy to give the character of permanence to what every consideration of sound sense or true physiology would regard as an abnormal and mere passing condition.

That the man who made such a will as this was insane, I will not say; but I unhesitatingly declare that he imposed a condition repugnant to good sense, and totally opposed to every consideration of reason and judgment. First of all, he assumed—and of all tyrannies I know of none greater—to dictate to another, for the whole term of his life, a condition of moral blindness. Secondly, he presumed to judge not alone what all newspapers were in all lands, but what they might be in years long after his death.

That any man about to leave the world should like to declare to it before he went, "I have no sympathy with you; I don't care for you—for your wars, your struggles for liberty, your sufferings, or your triumphs. Nothing to me whether you be rich or poor, in sickness or in health: whether your homes be happy, or your fields be desolate; whether the crimes of your people decrease, or that new forms of vice call for new modes of repression. I don't want to know if education be spreading through your land, or to hear what results have followed such enlightenment. I am alike indifferent to the nature of your laws, and the mode in which they are administered. Uninterested in the great changes which affect States, I do not ask to be informed what the world thinks of them; of that public opinion which is the record of what condition humanity stands in at a given era, I have no desire to hear. Enclosed in the shell of my selfishness, I am satisfied to lead the life of an oyster. I compound for mere existence, and no more."

Now, I ask, is it such a nature as this that should be permitted to make a formal bequest of his bigotry and ignorance? Should the law lend itself to ratify a compact whereby this man's cross stupidity shall be perpetuated?

I am aware he was a German; and much may be forgiven him on the score of narrowness. I know, too, that his warning applied peculiarly to the journals of his own land. And it is but fair to own that a German "Blatt" is about the dreariest reading a man can fall upon. The torrent of rubbishy phraseology in which this beer-be-muddled people involve their commonest thoughts—the struggles they make at subtle distinctions through the mazes of their foggy intellects—the perpetual effort to regard everything under some fifteen or five-and-twenty different aspects, belaboring a theme, and kneading it as a baker kneads his dough—make up a mass of entanglement and confusion that would drive a practical, energetic people to the verge of distraction.

That a man should interdict such readings as these is no more strange than that he should forbid the use of some besotting narcotic, dreary in its effects and depressing in its consequences. Perhaps this testator had recognized in his own case some of the dire results of this dyspeptic literature. Still, with all its faults, its story was the world. It spoke of man in his works and ways with other men, how he bought and sold, made peace or war, built up or threw down; of the virtues he held high, of the vices he reprobated; what were the views he extended to the world at large, and what were the hopes that he cherished for those who were to come after him. Even through the labyrinth of German involution glimpses of these might be had; and why should not his heir be permitted to look at life, albeit through the smoked glass of his native language?

One of our most brilliant essayists and most accomplished thinkers has declared that he regards a number of the Times as the last report of what the world has achieved of progress; and I thoroughly agree with him. That broadsheet is the morning's "return" of Humanity, not alone recounting what it has accomplished in the preceding twenty-four hours, but how it feels after it. You have not alone the bulletin of the great battle the world is fighting, but you have an authentic report of the effective state of humanity on the next morning.

Take the most thorough man of the world of your acquaintance—the man most perfectly versed in what goes on in life, not in one class or section of society, but throughout all ranks and conditions of men—who knows where and for what the world is fighting in this quarter or in that—how it builds its ships—what it pays for gold—how it tills its fields, smelts its metals, cooks its food, and writes its novels—and I ask you, what would he be without his newspaper? By what possible machinery could he learn, as he sits at his breakfast, the last news from Shanghae, and the last ballet at Paris—the state of the funds at San Francisco—the winner at Newmarket—the pantomime at the Olympic—the encyclical of the Pope? Do not reply to me with a Cui bono?

For I say that it is with the actual passing, daily-arising incidents of life a man ought to be thoroughly acquainted, bringing to their consideration all the aid his reading and reflection can supply, so that he neither fall into a dogged incredulity on one side, or a fatal facility of belief on the other. In age so wildly speculative as the present—eager to inquire, and not over-given to scruple—such men as these are invaluable to society, and a whole corps of college professors would be less effective in dispelling error or asserting truth than these people trained in all the dialectics of the daily press.

If the testator, in the case before us—for I return to him now—was simply moved by a desire to conceal from his heir the late events occurring in Germany, I own a plea might without great difficulty be advanced in his behalf. It would be hard to condemn him if he wished to shroud in obscurity the ignominious subserviency of Austria, and the insolent pretension of her ancient rival Prussia. The lamentable part assigned to the Empire in this Danish conflict might well suggest to an officer in the Imperial service such an intention. Austrian wars have not been remarkable for success, but they have always been distinguished for the splendid valor of the troops, and the noble devotion of men who, however worsted, never regarded defeat as overthrow. In the terrible battles of the first Empire, this character of their courage displayed itself on every field. So also was it conspicuous in the last Lombard campaign. What an indignity, then, for such soldiers to be arrayed against the greatly inferior numbers of a nation unused to war—to a brave handful of men ready to sell their lives rather than surrender their native soil to the foot of the invader! The white-coated legions of the Empire had no need to inscribe Duppel or the Danewerk on their ensigns. And what inglorious companionship was that in which they found themselves! Dupes of M. Bismarck! I am not in the least surprised that an Austrian officer might desire to obliterate any memory of these things; but it is not so easily done. A codicil enjoining the condition that his heir should become a Trappist might possibly succeed; I know of nothing else.

I have to speak with diffidence as to how I should feel in any new or untried situation in life: I cannot, therefore, say what my feelings might be if I were to awake and discover that somebody had bequeathed to me something. I can no more answer for my conduct, than could the gentleman on being asked what he should do if he met a white bear. But so far as I can understand my own nature, I should reject a legacy coupled with such a condition as this. Without my newspaper, life would narrow itself to the small limits of my personal experiences, and humanity be compressed into the ten or fifteen people I mix with. Now I refuse to accept this. I have not a sixpence in consols, but I want to know how they stand. I was never—I never in all likelihood shall be—in Japan; but I have an intense curiosity to know what our troops did at Yokohama. I deplore the people who suffered by that railroad smash; and I sympathize with the newly-married couple so beautifully depicted in the Illustrated, as they drove off in a chaise and four, the bald old gent at the hall door waving them a last adieu. I like the letters of the correspondents, with their little grievances about unpunctual trains, or some unwarrantable omissions in the Liturgy. I even like the people who chronicle the rainfall, and record little facts about the mildness of the season.

As for the advertisements, I regard them as the glass and mirror of the age. Show me but one page of the "Wants" of any country, and I engage myself to give a sketch of the current civilization of the period. What glimpses of rare interiors do we gain by these brief paragraphs! How full of suggestiveness and of story are they! Think of the social circle at Clapham that advertise for a lodger who has a good tenor voice, and would appreciate the domestic life of a retired family devoted to music and the fine arts! Imagine the more exalted propriety of those who want "a footman in a serious family, where there are means of grace, and a kitchenmaid kept!" Here it is a shooting-box to be disposed of; here a widow in affluent circumstances announces her intention to re-marry; here a scientific naturalist professes his readiness to exchange bugs or caterpillars with another devotee; and here a more practical physiologist wants from three to four dozen lively rats for his bull-terrier. Are not those life-etchings? Do you want anything more plain or palpable to tell you where and how we live?

Now, I neither want shooting-box, beetles, rats, or widow, but I am not to be cut off from my sympathies with the people who do. On the contrary, in the very proportion that all these things do not enter into my requirements, do I desire to know who and what are the people who need them, why they need them, and what they do with them when they get them. Perhaps my nature may have its excess of this fellow-feeling—I cannot say; but I know I'd give more than I should like to say to be able to pass an evening with the musical circle, or even to have the privilege of a few sweet moments with the serious family. I am human to the very tips of my fingers, and there is not a mood in humanity without its interest for me. If, therefore, some admirer of these O'Dowderies, on learning that I am not a sleeping partner in Baring's, or a large shareholder in the Great Western, should desire to express his satisfaction in a testamentary form, let him not couple his bequest with such a condition as I have recorded. I may possibly be able to "rub on" without my legacy, but I couldn't exist without my paper.—Cornelius O'Dowd.

CHOOSING A PHYSICIAN.

THERE is an Eastern story of a certain prince who had received from a fairy the faculty of not only assuming whatever appearance he thought proper, but of discerning the wandering spirits of the departed. He had long labored under a painful chronic disease, that none of the court physicians, ordinary or extraordinary, could relieve; and he resolved to wander about the streets of his capital until he could find some one, regular or irregular, who could alleviate his sufferings. For this purpose he donned the garb and appearance of a dervish. As he was passing through one of the principal streets, he was surprised to see it so thronged with ghosts that, had they been still inhabitants of their former earthly tenements, they must have obstructed the thoroughfare. But what was his amazement and dismay when he saw that they were all grouped with anxious looks round the door of his father's physician, haunting, no doubt, the man to whom they attributed their untimely doom. Shocked with the sight, he hurried to another part of the city, where resided another physician of the court, holding the second rank in fashionable estimation. Alas! his gateway was surrounded with the ghosts of reproachful departed patients. Thunderstruck at such a discovery, and returning thanks to the Prophet that he was still in the flesh, despite the practice of these great men, he resolved to submit all the other renowned practitioners to a similar visit; and he was grieved to find that the scale of ghosts kept pace with the scale of their medical rank. Heart-broken and despairing of a cure, he was slowly sauntering back to the palace, when, in an obscure street, and on the door of a humble dwelling, he read a doctor's name. One single poor solitary ghost, leaning his despondent cheek upon his fleshless hand, was seated on the doctor's steps. "Alas!" exclaimed the prince, "it is, then, too true that humble merit withers in the shade, while ostentatious ignorance inhabits golden mansions. This poor neglected doctor, who has but one unlucky case to lament, is then the only man in whom I can place confidence."

He rapped; the door was opened by the doctor himself, a venerable old man, not rich enough, perhaps, to keep a domestic to answer his unfrequent calls. His white locks and flowing beard added to the confidence which his situation had inspired. The elated youth then related at full length all his complicated ailments, and the still more complicated treatment to which he had in vain been submitted. The sapient physician was not illiberal enough to say the prince's attendants had all been in error, since all mankind may err; but his sarcastic smile, the curl of his lips, and the dubious shake of his hoary head, most eloquently told the anxious patient that he considered his former physicians as an ignorant, murderous set of upstarts, only fit to depopulate a community. With a triumphant look he promised a cure, and gave his overjoyed patient a much-valued prescription, which he carefully confided to his bosom; after which he expressed his gratitude by pouring upon the doctor's table a purse of golden sequins, which made the old man's blinking eyes shine as brightly as the coin he beheld in wondrous delight. His joy gave suppleness to his rigid spine, and after bowing the prince out in the most obsequious manner, he ventured to ask him one humble question: "By what good luck, by what kind planet, had he been recommended to seek his advice?" The prince naturally asked for the reason of so strange a question; to which the worthy doctor replied, with eyes brimful with tears of gratitude: "Oh, sir, because I considered myself the most unfortunate man in Bagdad until this happy moment; for I have been settled in this noble and wealthy city for the last fifteen years and have only been able to obtain one single patient." "Ah!" cried the prince in despair, "then it must be that poor, solitary, unhappy-looking ghost that is now sitting on your steps!"

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL THE

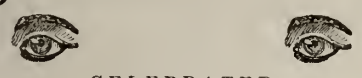
DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known. In curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of doubt, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
an27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'



CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lachrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
an27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Augustura Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root, Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Pleurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtue of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG, M. D.,
Sole Proprietor, New York.

Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE
COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
jn25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be ready for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th March, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM
OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - $660.000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29 3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25 3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10,000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co.
WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28- 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

W. H. BROOKS,

STATIONER AND NEWS-DEALER,
No. 51 THIRD STREET,

Near the corner of Mission, - - - San Francisco.

DEALER IN

PLAIN & FANCY STATIONERY,

SCHOOL BOOKS, POCKET CUTLERY, SONGS and SONG BOOKS,

Local and Eastern Newspapers and Periodicals,

And Standard and current light Literature.

A large and well-assorted CIRCULATING LIBRARY on the most liberal terms.

Country orders promptly and accurately attended to.
mh25 3m

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office.

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.
W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S
no26 San Francisco.

REMOVAL! REMOVAL!!

WONDERFUL TRIUMPH

IN AMERICAN DENTISTRY.

DR. BEERS & CO.,

Having removed from 617 Clay street

To 129 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

ARE NOW MANUFACTURING THE NEW style of ARTIFICIAL TEETH so highly approved at the East, and which to be appreciated only requires to be seen. The Teeth, Gums and Plate are made of one entire piece of Porcelain without seam or joint, combining great strength and beauty with absolute purity and freedom from any metallic taste, while the coloring of the gums and the interior of the mouth are so perfect as to almost defy detection. All interested in the progress of the Arts are invited to examine samples of this work.

Superior Gold and Vulcanite Work also manufactured as usual, but at greatly reduced price. jul8

DR. LIBBEY,

WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracted with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no charge.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. je10-1m

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, ETC.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

NEW WHOLESALE STORE!

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the best selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES!

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.
ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff; vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

AMALIE J. R. SCHAEBEN, Plaintiff; vs. AUGUSTE A. SCHAEBEN, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to AUGUSTE A SCHAEBEN, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney, office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap8-tuy8-inc

THEATRICAL TALK.

THIS week the engagement of Mr. Dan. Setchell at Maguire's Opera House terminates. Mr. Setchell has accomplished wonders. During the first five weeks of his engagement he filled the house nightly, in spite of the attractions of two opera troupes. A new comic drama entitled Artemus Ward, Showman, was produced on Monday to a fair audience. The Bulletin called this piece "only tolerable;" the public thought it intolerable. It is badly constructed, and filled with slang and weak attempts at wit. It took two "dramatic authors," Mr. Fred G. Maeder and Mr. Thos. B. Macdonough, to manufacture this larago of nonsense. Mr. Maeder has made a mess of his part, and it is evident that if "Mac" "dunno" how to make a play by himself, calling in Mr. Fred. G. Mueder will not prove much assistance to him. He had better next time "play it alone," or, better still, leave it alone altogether. I presume they thought it was "good enough for California. Artemus Ward, Showman, will remain on Mr. Setchell's hands as very dead stock. It may be good enough for the East, but it will not do for California. On Monday, Mr. Pauncefort, an actor who has achieved a good reputation as a careful and conscientious actor, in Boston, New York, and other Eastern cities, and who, it is to be hoped, will recompense the theatre-going public for the loss of their favorite actor, Mr. Mayo, will make his first appearauce on Monday in the comedy of the Bachelor of Arts. This afternoon Mr. Setchell will appear in John Jones and the Dutch Governor, two of his best, if not his two best, impersonations. In the evening the performance will consist of Ici on Parle Francais, A Regular Fix, and Toodles. As Spriggins in Ici on Parle Francais, Mr. Setchell displays more careful and finished acting than in any other of his characters. A full house will doubtless bid farewell to the comedian who, during seven wecks. has kept the theatre-goers of San Francisco in roars of laughing.

The reigu of comedy being over, after Mr. Pauncefort has appeared in his "specialities" there may be some chauce of the long-promised Enoch Arden and other original plays which have been accepted by the management, bcing produced, before another "star" gleams across the theatrical horizon.

The event of the week at the Eureka has been the production of the comedy of Taming a Butterfly. This was admirably put on the stage, and very well played. It is an extremely lively comedy. It depends more ou the briskness and vivacity with which ths parts are played, than upon any deep interest in the plot. It tested the capabilities of the Eureka Company severely, and the creditable manuer in which they stood the test. proved them equal to the produc tion of any of the comedies of the day in good style. The Eureka is fast establishing itself iu public favor. Taming a Butterfly has drawn a large audience every evening, and this alternoon and evening the house will no doubt be crowded.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.—Gencral Halleck has been ordered to the commaud of the Department of California, and General Ord to that of Oregon...The privateer Stonewall was still at Havana in possession ol the authorities...General Graut's congratulatory address to the armies of the Republic, complimenting them on their bravery, endurance, victories, patriotism, and devotion to their country, meets with general commendation...The total indebtedness of the Government, as exhibited May 3d, was $2,635,205,750 50...Some of our men-of-war and two first-class monitors had arrived at Havana, and were creating a great sensation...The U. S. Telegraph Company had contracted for two more lines of telegraph from St. Louis and Chicago to San Francisco, the whole to be completed in eighteen months...The rebel armies in Texas have accepted the usual "terms of surrender," and have disbanded and gone to their homes. Some of the fire-eating generals are reported us gone to Mexico...Recent developments show that the disastrous explosion at Mobile was caused by torpedoes placed between the buildings coutaining powder, on the night previous, by a rebel Major. Torpedoes were also found in the Custom House...The people of many of the Southern States are commencing the work of reconstruction, and establishing "home police" systems for the purpose of maintaining order...Lord Palmerston, in speaking of the Alabama indemnity claim by our Government, in the House of Commous, states that "the question will be discussed on the most friendly and amicable terms." The English press were opposed to the paying of indemnity...The trial of the assassins was nearly concluded, and preparations for summing up were being made. Frederick Seward's health was improving. Secretary Seward was convalescent and attending to his duties.

HAS A PREFERENCE.—Jeff. Davis thinks he would prefer Europe to our rope. Guess he'll have to patronize home manufacture first.—Esmeralda Union.

Instead of wearing his wife's mantilla about his shoulders he will have to wear a coil of Uncle Sam's Manila arouud his neck.—Sacramento Bee.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

THE attendance at the Academy of Music has improved within the past week, though not in proportion to the award which the performances justified. We are afraid the balance will again be on the wrong side of the sheet for the management. On Monday eveuing Un Ballo in Maschera was given, with its general excellence of rendition. On Wednesday Rossini's brilliaut Il Barbiere was produced for the first time by this troupe. It is almost superfluous to say that Miss Phillips' "Rosina" was excellent, both in singing and acting. Morelli, as "Figaro," surprised the audience by the ease, grace and vivacity of his impersonation. Sbriglia's "Count Almaviu." and Barili's "Doctor Bartolo," also won high commeudation. The opera was most smoothly rendered, and was especially effective in the concerted pieces which beautilully and appropriately closed each act. The priucipal characters were called before the curtain at the end ol each act. to receive the crowning chaplet which cume in the shape of unusually demonstrative applause. In the music lesson, Miss Phillips sang the sweet ballad of "Kathleen Mavourneeu," und a laughing song, with rare excellence, and modestly declined an encore. Last uight gave us Martha, which has been fully noticed before in our columns. To-night Un Ballo will be repeated, and on Monday Verdi's historical opera of Nabuco, will be produced.

EDMUND BASHAM.

[Died, in this city, June 19, Edmund Basham, late of the Army of the Potomac, aged 23 years and 9 months.]

THE patriot martyrs of the Republic are not only those who have fallen in battle. The continued struggle with hardship, the heavy marches, the fever-haunted camps, and the many exposures incidental to a soldier's life, if they do not leave him to a lingering death in hospitals, at least sow the seeds of fatal disease, from which even the comforts of home and peaceful retirement cannot protect him. It has been truly said that "our great struggle has been fought by boys," and it may as truly be said that the youth and immaturity of our volunteers have rendered them peculiarly sensitive to the hardships of a campaign. This is especially true of the young soldier whose name heads this article. Mr. Basham was a veteran at the age of twenty-three. At the age of nineteen he responded to the call to arms, and joined the first company which enlisted for three years—the Fourth Connecticut Volunteers. During this period he was at Alexandria, with Ellsworth, and under McClellan during the Peninsula campaign, participating in the buttle of Malvern Hills, Yorktown, Antietam and Fredericksburg—often in situations of great peril, and narrowly escaping with his life, although by exposure and hardship his constitution was gradually undermined. After an honorable discharge from the service, Mr. Basham came to this city, where his father resides, trusting that a change of climate and more peaceful avocations might restore his health. But in vain. Harrassed by disease, yet too ambitious to seek relief from labor, he tarried long enough with us to witness the final triumph of the cause he had so nobly served, and to win the esteem of his fellow laborers in that civil department of the Government service where he was employed to the day of his death. So perished another martyr to the cause of liberty and civilization. Yet he sleeps well who dies thus, and "nothing can touch him further."

EXQUISITE HUMOR.—The following able joke is from the Golden Era:

"Muzzlin' the Press—Giving some of the editors new shirts."

It will scarcely be credited that the editors called no attention whatever to this fine creation, while their columns teemed with glaring guide-boards pointing to productions of smaller consequences, such as—"Charles Dickens' 'Mutual Friend' on the first page!" "John Jones on third page!" "Bill Smith on second page." Now why couldn't they have also said, "See 'Entertaining Jack' in Editorial Department!"

SUICIDE.—Peter McDougal, a sailor, late of the English man-of-war Sutlej, committed suicide on Front street, near Washington, by cutting his throat. He applied the knife to his throat while on the sidewalk, but being observed, ran across the street, gashing his throat, severing some of the lesser veins and the windpipe. He lived a half-hour. The act was committed, it is supposed, while laboring uuder an attack of delirium tremens.

THIRD WEEK OF DR. BENTON'S LECTURES AT DASHAWAY HALL. Dr. Benton will continue his lectures every evening during the coming week, which will be interspersed with highly amusing as well as instructive evidences of his magnetic power over the mental and physical natures of those who are subject to his mesmeric influences. These lectures are awakening an increased curiosity in the public mind. At his last lecture, on Thursday last, the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. Tickets 25 cents each for adults; children 10 cents. On Wednesday and Friday afternoons, by particular request of the ladies, Dr. Benton will give especial lectures and experiments for ladies exclusively; admission, 25 cents.

BANKING IN CALIFORNIA.—A leading article in the Morning Call on the Banking System of California, is replied to us follows on the part of the California Building and Loan Society:

The Banking question is a large and complex subject; has two sides, and admits of many urgnments. Respecting the legislative restrictions which you suggest as necessary to the safety of the public, I shall only refer to one, which I agree with you is salutary. That is, the periodical publication of attested accounts. On the part of the California Building and Loan Society, which, as Secretary, I have the honor to manage, I supply at foot the Book-keeper's sworn statement, to which my own attestation is appeuded, as to the condition of the Company on the 31st of May in this year, from which you perceive that—

The total amonnt of loans out on mortgnge is	$176,909 96
The gold coin on hand	27,595 52
Total assets	$204,505 48
Due to depositors	158,827 25
Balance of assets over liabilities	$45,678 23

This latter balance consists of $40,678 23, paid in by the stockholders for fifty years, and $5,000, a reserve fund from acquired profits to cover unforseen losses, all which—any forty-five thousand dollars—must remain a pledge to the public that the whole of that sum must first be lost before any depositor with the Company can lose a cent. Moreover, not only must the forty-five thousand dollars now permanently invested in our stock be lost, but all the stock of the Company which may in future be sold. and also all the accumulating interests and profits. There yet remains $200,000 of this stock to be allotted to new members who shall hereafter join the Company. Every such one brings in an additional element of security to the public depositor.

Beyond all this, Mr. Editor, I wish to make it known that every stockholder in the California Building and Loan Society is liable, pro rata, on his stock, from his private property, to the public depositor for the full payment in gold coin, of his or her deposits. There are at present three hundred and twenty stockholders in the Company—some have ten shares, some five, some one; but all, as a corporate body, pledge their private property to pay in United States gold coin the depositor the last dollar due to him or her.

The foregoing forms that ultimate body of security on which, should all the property mortgaged to the Company prove worthless, the depositor can fall back upon; but, sir, I think all men of plain sense will see how distant the probability is of such a contingency, when they keep in view the principles on which our loans are given out and repaid back, as thus: Suppose a man owning a lot in any part of the city, asks us to assist him to erect thereon a dwelling or a store. Our Board of Directors approve; we take a mortgage on the lot, and we advance his builder, by installments, the sum required to erect the building; we insure it against the risk of fire; we have then pledged to us HIS GROUND, together with the improvements made thereon with OUR MONEY. He is bound by the mortgage to pay us a portion of the principal and interest every month. If he fail to do this, we can foreclose and sell him out. (a thing we never yet had any necessity to do.) As he pays up his installments month after month, he diminishes his liability to us, DIMINISHES OUR RISK, while the original property stands pledged to us for the still diminishing loan; and, as a general rule, improved property increases yearly in value. Now, sir, all our loans are made upon real estate in the city of San Francisco, upon the above principles; and unless we shall see this growing city melted away by civil war, floods, famines, or earthquakes, I contend IT IS THE VERY BEST BODY OF SECURITY offered in this State to the public depositor. I feel a natural pride in so saying, being one of those who first introduced the genuine principle of joint-stock banking to this community, through the California Building and Loan Society. Other banks in this city have latterly converted themselves into joint-stock banks, established a fixed capital and incorporating a body of bank proprietors, and therefore offer abundant security to their depositors. Those are totally different from the rotten banks of bygone years, to which you have alluded. The more joint-stock banks we have the better, for aiding the enterprise and industry, and employment of the people, for, strange as it may appear to distant peoples, while California is the parent of very much of the gold and silver that circulates in America and Europe, money is thrice dearer upon industry in this State than in any other part of the world. This is the great public question, sir, that calls for inquiry, and that interests every working man. It is required that money shall be cheapened here to legitimate industry, and that honest Labor shall be enabled to call capital to his assistance. The more joint-stock banks we have and the less Legislative restraints imposed on their action the better, for depend upon it, sir, if the "politicians" once get to control the banking companies, we get from the frying-pan into the fire. There are two sides to the question, sir, which will afford texts for future communications. Meantime, I remain your very obedient servant,

THOMAS MOONEY,
Secretary Cal. Building and Loan Society,
406 Montgomery street.

San Francisco, June 16, 1865.

STATEMENT FROM THE BOOKS OF THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY, OF ITS AFFAIRS AS THEY STOOD AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, ON THE 31ST DAY OF MAY, 1865.

Loans outstanding on real estate amounted to	$176,909 96
Cash on hand	27,595 52
Total assets	$204,505 48
Total due depositors	158,827 25
	$45,678 23

Leaving a remainder of forty-five thousand six hundred and seventy-eight dollars for Reserve Fund, to secure depositors from possibility of loss.

City and County of San Francisco, ss.—Patrick Murphy being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a book-keeper for the California Building and Loan Society of San Francisco; that the foregoing is a full, true and correct statement of the affairs of said Society, at the close of business, on the 31st day of May, 1865.

PATRICK MURPHY, Book-keeper.

Sworn and subscribed before me, this 17th day of June, 1865.

H. J. WELLS, Justice of the Peace.

[Internal Revenue Stamp.]

THE PIANOFORTE.—There is probably no article of utility or luxury in the purchase of which so much must be trusted to the honor and integrity of the manufacturer as the Pianoforte. The name of Wm. B. Bradbury is a musical household word, and is a sure guarantee to the purchaser that the instrument bearing his name is in all respects perfect. Mr. Bradbury has gained a world-wide celebrity; and having plenty of capital is determined that his instruments shall not be equaled by those of any other maker.—Christian Advocate and Journal.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL, SAN JOSE.—Travellers who have occasion to visit the city of San José, may be assured that they will find in Major Bromley of the "Continental," a gentleman whose urbanity and strict attention to their comfort will commend him to their warmest regard.

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET.

(OVER FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE DEPOT,)

INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest EXPANDERS,

For Expanding the Chest, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

—

This Supporter possesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who have used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishing to possess

GRACE OF FORM
AND
SYMMETRY OF PERSON.

It is comfortable to the frame, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of

GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of

BUST,

Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. READ also has a Supporter which she can confidently recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation; gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M. my27-tf

---

OVERSTOCKED!
AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS
—AT—
LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mb25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

LEECHES! LEECHES! LEECHES!

We are in receipt, per every steamer, of
FRESH SWEDISH LEECHES,
which we offer for sale at lower rates than ever before on this coast. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
je10 3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

☞ THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co. THOMAS MOONEY, Secretary.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning.
A. KOHLER, 424 Sansome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6,500,000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

COMMERCIAL STEAM PRINTING HOUSE.
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.,
517 CLAY and 514 COMMERCIAL STREETS.

Every description of BOOK, JOB and POSTER PRINTING done in the best style and at the lowest rates.
BOOK-BINDING and RULING done to order.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,
PRINTERS,
BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.
517
CLAY STREET, BET, SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY.
my27

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

PRINTING! PRINTING!!

H. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
NO. 522 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery, - - San Francisco.

All Descriptions of JOB PRINTING done cheaper and as good as anywhere else in the city.
fe4-tf

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25-tf

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched in the month of JULY, 1865:

JULY 3rd - - - - - - SACRAMENTO.
JULY 18th - - - - - - GOLDEN CITY.

From Folsom-street Wharf, at eleven o'clock, A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
je24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
JULY 13th!

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK!
VIA NICARAGUA!

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

SHORTEST AND QUICKEST ROUTE!!!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the commodious and favorite steamship
AMERICA.
FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, NICARAGUA,
ON TUESDAY, - - - - - JUNE 13TH.
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely,
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the new and splendid Steamship
GOLDEN RULE,
3,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

The transit of the Isthmus is a pleasant trip. Meals furnished free by the Company while crossing. A baggage-master will be sent through by each steamer. Insurance on Treasure at the lowest rates.

The steamer MOSES TAYLOR will succeed the AMERICA in August.

For information or passage, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, AGENT, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
my20 Up stairs, San Francisco.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
de17-5m NEW YORK.

FLOWERS! FLOWERS!!

The attention of the Public is invited to

The Floral Repository,

Of C. B. MILLER, Bush street, opposite Cosmopolitan Hotel.

Mr. MILLER keeps constantly on hand the rarest and choicest flowers that the season or the market affords, and will furnish parties or private houses with floral decorations at the shortest notice. Bouquets made to order, and sent to their destination with promptness. Mr. Miller would invite attention to some curious specimens of the Orchis family which his collection affords, and he would be pleased to have a call from all lovers of Flowers, whether they wish to purchase or not.

"HOME, SWEET HOME!"

No home of taste is complete without Aquaria, Gold Fish, Birds, Fern Cases, new and rare Plants, Bulbs and Seeds, Cut Flowers and Bouquets for Weddings, Hanging Baskets, Rustic Stands, Shells, Minerals, etc.

A long experience at the East justifies Mr. Miller in promising to please the patrons who may favor him with a trial. He will also be happy at all times to furnish those who take an interest in flowers with any information relative to their care and culture that may be desired.

MILLER'S 206 Bush street,
Opposite the Cosmopolitan, San Francisco.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
de31-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:

Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.
9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40
FROM THE CITY
10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.

Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.
my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY,
A CURE FOR EVERY FORM OF
Pulmonary Complaint!
COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH, SPITTING OF BLOOD, LIVER COMPLAINT, etc., etc.

Consumption,

Which carries off more victims than any other disease, and which baffles the skill of the Physician to a greater extent than any other malady, often

YIELDS TO THIS REMEDY,

when all others prove ineffectual.

AS A MEDICINE,

Rapid in relief, soothing in effect, safe in its operation, it is

UNSURPASSED!

while as a preparation, free from noxious ingredients, poisons or minerals; uniting skill, science and medical knowledge, combining all that is valuable in the vegetable kingdom for this class of disease, it is

INCOMPARABLE!

and is entitled, merits and receives the enviable appellation of the

INVALID'S FRIEND.

Sold by all druggist's and by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR
OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
TO BE HELD IN THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,
IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.

The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Executive Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.

No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.

A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.

Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 2d of August.

Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 2d of August.

The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.

The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.

The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.

The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.

No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.

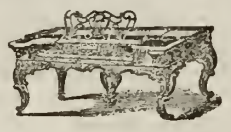
All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.

All communications to be addressed to C. S. HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hunscom, Edward Nunan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,

ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME !



WM. B. BRADBURY'S

New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimonials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.

A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29-tf

---

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers

—IN—

Fine Clothing

—AND—

GENTLEMEN'S

FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,

200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

M. HARKINS,

MANUFACTURER OF

LADIES', MISSES', AND CHILDRENS

Boots and Shoes.

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BOOTS, SHOES and SLIPPERS MADE TO ORDER.

No. 151 FOURTH STREET,
Second door above Howard, east side,
SAN FRANCISCO

☞ Repairing of all kinds neatly and promptly done.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS

—TO—

Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO

FOR RED BLUFF,

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

no5-tf J. WHITNEY, Jr., President.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

FURNITURE

Closing Out at any Price !

On account of the Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNdersell anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDST EDS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS,

BEDDING, Etc.,

At Your Own Prices !

ap22 3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, Etc.

WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS, mu4 3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND, & CO..

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

np22-tf

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.

sp22-tf

DR. H. A. BENTON,

Electro-Magnetic Physician,

OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Appliances and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:

Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Vinton, American Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.

Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.
ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE !

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other preparations

FOR THE CURE OF

Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,

AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE

is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

REGENERATING

Extract of Millefleurs !

THIS UNRIVALLED PREPARATION

CLEANSES

—AND—

BEAUTIFIES

THE HAIR!

Immediately rendering the coarsest Hair soft and pliable, prevents Disease of the Scalp, premature decay of the Hair, and BALDNESS!

It may be used upon CHILDREN and YOUNG PERSONS with the greatest satisfaction and cheerful assurance of permanent benefit—producing Luxuriance of Growth, removing all impurities from the surface of the Head—stimulating and preserving the HAIR to the latest period of life.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
Corner of Clay San Francisco.

A BAD BREATH!

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

DIABETES, INDIGESTION, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, STRANGUARY CALCULUS, GRAVEL, CATARRH AND OTHER AFFECTIONS OF THE BLADDER.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

---

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons we can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfaction. my27 3m

---

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

SAN JOSE.

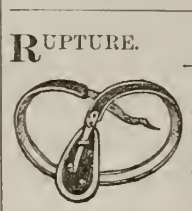
GEORGE T. BROMLEY.....Proprietor.

As a desirable place of resort for health or recreation, the above Hotel is not surpassed in the State.

Excellent accommodations for families, by the day, week, or month, on reasonable terms.

ju25

RUPTURE.



RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevulent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

FAMINE ABOARD.

WHEN I was a lad, stories of sea-life captivated me, and I ran away from a good home and went to sea. I came back to England many times, visited secretly my native place, saw my father and mother, and once even beard them speak; but they never saw me again, or knew where I had gone. How this was does not matter, for it is no part of my story. Nearly thirty years ago I sailed from Montreal for Liverpool aboard a vessel laden with timber. We had a crew of thirteen persons, including the captain, besides four passengers—a physician and his wife, and an old Canadian Frenchman and his niece. It was in the month of January, and we had a fair wind; but we soon came among the ice-fields and had bitter cold watches, which make men think of home and comfortable fires ashore. Many a time I went aloft, and holding on with hands or belly to the frozen yards, and fumbling with numbed fingers at the stiffened reefs, have thought that I must go off with every blast that cut me in the face. We kept among the ice a long time, and got far out of our course, so at last the captain told the passengers that, as he had not counted on the delay be must shorten the allowance of food for all.

This set me thinking. What if we should be many weeks in that situation? Our provisions must be all gone, and we must perish one by one of hunger and cold, or do something worse. I had read stories of drawing lots aboard ships in such a situation, and at night I dreamed about it. I do believe it was not so much the dread of death, as of coming to be one at that horrible kind of feast that frightened me. However, I devised a plan—a selfish plan it was—for escaping from such a horror. Our allowance of food was as yet very slightly diminished. Every day I saved some portion, and sometimes, on pretence of being more hungry than usual. I bought the ration of a man who was sickly and could not eat. Such of those hoardings as could be preserved, I put away in a box inside my chest, and now and then, when I went down to my hammock, and found myself alone, I used to open it and contemplate my store with a miserly sort of satisfaction, which it is horrible to me now to think of, for I knew that in my secret heart I looked forward to a time when the bottle of water which I hoarded there, would have become more costly than any wine that mortal lips ever tasted; when, if I had an opportunity, I meant to use my treasure slowly, to maintain my own life while my companions starved.

The Frenchman and his niece I knew well, for I had lodged in their house. He was a superannuated government clerk with a small pension, who was going to live in France for the benefit of his health. The niece was an intelligent and pretty young woman, who spoke English well, for her mother was an Englishwoman. They were cabin-passengers, but had taken a passage at an intermediate sum, which restricted them to plainer food than others got, but they fared no worse than the rest now. The rations were reduced again, and we all began to feel the pinch.

We had heavy snow-storms, succeeded by bright moonlight nights, awful in their silence, but at last the ice became rarer, and we began to sail clear. However, a worse trouble awaited us. From the moment that the last ice left our sides it was manifest that we were sinking rapidly, from some great injury to the vessel's bottom. It was in the night time when we discovered it, and in the hurry and confusion little was done to save stores until too late. One man, who volunteered to go below was killed by the floating timber. The water bilged up the hatches, and kept the vessel flooded amidships; but the upper deck was comparatively dry, for the timber aboard kept the vessel afloat, and there we all took refuge. We knew she could not sink, being merely waterlogged.

When the first alarm was given, I was below, and I thought at once of my box. It was heavy; but taking it on my shoulder, I crept on deck, and groped my way aft with it. On the way I ran against several persons coming forward; but, in the darkness they took no heed of me, and I deposited my treasure in a boat on the after deck, and covered it as well as I could with coils of rope. I knew they would not take to this boat while the vessel floated, and I hoped that no one would think of disturbing the ropes.

For four days I took the share of the rations, which the captain distributed to us all. The physician's wife, who was in ill-health, died, and was cast into the sea. This left us fifteen persons. The old Frenchman was also in weak health; but he held out, and his companion tended him constantly. Everybody took interest in them, wretched as they were, and it was a fine thing to see her bravery and constant care for her charge. I remember looking at them, and thinking that if there were no more than they, I would gladly give them a portion of my store; although, perhaps, I was then too selfish for that, and only flattered myself with the thought. I did not dare myself to go to the boat until the first dark night, when I pulled off my boots, and, groping along, found my box, and stealthily ate a portion of its contents; eating, however, in great fear, lest my secret shoud be discovered, in which case I knew my famished comrades would have killed me for my selfishness. I knew I could have relieved them to some degree, but I did not stir. I heard their murmurs, but I held my tongue; all of which I justified to myself, for, what, thought I, would be my little hoard amongst all these? Better that one should live, than that all should eat, merely to live another day.

Soon after this our case became dismal indeed. The ship sunk deeper, and even the after-deck became gradually immersed, so we all took refuge in the tops and rigging, where we lashed ourselves, and all day long, as shipwrecked men will do, reported a strange sail. As to my box, I had managed to fold its contents in a large sail-cloth, which I carried with me, and of which we all had plenty. And, now, seeing my companions' weakness, I took the devilish idea of feigning weakness equal to theirs, lest otherwise some suspicion might arise against me.

I had lashed myself in the main shrouds, having made a better place for myself with a swinging board and an old coat. Immediately above me, in the main top, were the Frenchman and his niece, but most of the crew were in the mizzen shrouds and top. I used to look up and exchange a few words with the Frenchman and his charge. They were better sheltered than I was, and the girl, who was of a cheerful temper, bore up well. We threw no more bodies in the sea, but several were dead, as I knew by the drooping of their heads, they being lashed to their places. One man, who had untied himself accidentally, fell with a splash in the deep water on the mid-deck, and no one offered to descend, or even spoke. There now began a dreadful silence among us, so that I began to doubt if many lived save I, the Frenchman and his niece, and an old sailor who was on one of the mizzen yards. This man, whose name was Ephraim, sat drooping and apparently very dejected for several days; but one day looking towards him, soon after daybreak, I found his eyes fixed upon me in a manner that perplexed me. He was a man of a hideous countenance, his face being furrowed with scars, as if burnt with gunpowder, and his upper lip slit in a way that showed all his front teeth. He had a low forehead and long black hair, like a Malay, and regarded me with a scowl that at such a time would have terrified the bravest. I could not see him unless I turned towards him, but I felt that his eyes were constantly upon me. He spoke no word, only uttering now and then a dismal cry, not like the sound of any human voice.

All this so fretted me, in my weakness and depression, that one night I did not creep to my box. When day dawned, it was a relief to me to find our ship enveloped in a mist, and just at that time I heard a moan from the top. Touched with sudden pity, I crept up the shrouds, and found what might have moved a stonier heart. The man lay back against the mast quite cold, but his companion was living still, and it was her moans that I had heard. She could not have eaten anything for some days, nor had they had any water for a longer time, save a few drops of rain which they might have collected in the sail-cloth. I crept down again to my box, where I still had some biscuits, a piece of raw pork, some grocer's plums, a bottle containing a little rum, and another small bottle of water. With some drops of the spirits and water I wetted her lips, and after a while revived her a little, though still insensible—a happy thing. For finding the Frenchman quite dead, I moved his body to the edge of the top, and then let it down into the sea.

She remained in this weak, half-senseless state for some days, during which the mist continued, and shrouded me from the terrible gaze of old Ephraim, but I heard him still. By what dreadful means he sustained his life, I only guessed. Sometimes he shouted out my name, and then again began to utter those cries that I had heard before. It was evident to me that he felt some spite against me; why, I knew not, for he could not have discovered my secret. If he had, he might have rifled my box long before. This, however, induced me to remove it by night into the top, where I finally withdrew myself, and now sought, in cherishing my poor companion, to find relief from the burden of evil thoughts. Once, when she opened her eyes, looking around, as if in quest of her former protector, she shuddered, and turned her face to me imploringly, as if she knew that I had power to save him yet; but at other times, even when conscious of my care—as when I wetted some biscuit to a paste and put it to her lips,—she seemed to have forgotten the horrors of the place.

"Hour by hour I felt an interest in the fate of this girl growing up within me, more deep than any feeling I had ever before known. I reduced my own share of food and water to the lowest point, that I might sustain her the longer. I watched her face as she lay sleeping, and it seemed to me so beautiful that sometimes I fancied that my sufferings had brought upon me a kind of delirium in which shipwrecked men see visions which mock their horrible and lonely state; but at most times I clung to her with no thought but that of saving her from death. It seemed to me as if in hiding my store of provisions I had but unconsciously prepared a means of rescuing her from that dreadful end which had befallen our companions. Sometimes, indeed, the idea would come upon me that if she should escape she would remember that I had had the power to prolong her uncle's life—that I had marked his sufferings, and had yet held my hand. Would this make her hate me? The thought was now more terrible even than death.

One night, worn out with tending her, I dropped asleep. I dreamed of warm and sheltered places; of walking in gardens in which the sunlight fell on an ancient red-bricked wall where fruits were ripening, and with me was my dear companion—she my wife, and I no longer a poor horny-handed seaman, but a gentleman, as I had thought to be before I ran from home. This and many such places I had dreamed of—she with me in them all, when I was suddenly awakened by a shriek, and, starting, found a hand at my throat. In an instant, I felt a wound as from a knife upon my arm, but I grappled with my antagonist in the darkness. A cry that he uttered told me in a moment that it was old Ephraim.

"To the devil!" he exclaimed, as he struck at me again with great force; "why should I eat vultures' food!"

He was a man of great strength. I had no weapon, and if I had not warded off his last blow, he had struck me deadf But the top was slippery with the misty night dews, and his foot tripped, and he staggered over the rope and sail-cloth in in which I had been wrapped. Following up my advantage quickly, I thrust him from me, and he fell. I heard a dull splash in the water below. I slipped down the shrouds some distance and listened, but could hear nothing. Old Ephraim had perished.

Gray light was dawning, and the mists had cleared away, when I hastened up again to my companion, calling her by the way, for her silence made me think that she had fallen in a swoon. She gave no answer, nor did she speak as I raised her, and found to my horror that there was blood upon her. My box, in which I had still some biscuits remaining, I had made a resting place for her head, but it had been pulled out, and the sail-cloth which covered her had been drawn aside. The madman or devil who had assailed me, had roused her in endeavoring to remove the box, and when she shrieked had stabbed her. She was still warm and gave some signs of breathing, but they grew fainter. I spoke to her by name, calling aloud, as I would call to some one at a distance; but she was already in the distance of eternity.

Of all that wretched band none now was living except I. Careless of all, and with a superstitious feeling that the box had somehow brought this fate upon me, I arose and cast its contents out into the wind, and sat down upon the edge of the top, with my feet hanging over, and with my head resting on my hand.

Loss of blood from my wound quickly made me feel a drowsiness in which it was strange that I did not fall from that height. Sometime after this—like a man neither asleep nor awake—I heard the noise of voices below, and rousing myself with an effort, I looked down and saw a boat alongside, and there, about a mile on our larboard side was a large brig brought to in a calm sea.

They nursed and brought me round, but did not like me. They thought that I had killed my companion and her protector, and that the wound I had got had been received in the struggle. They whispered together that I had done this to rob them of their stock of food; and when they got into a French port they would have me tried for murder, and hung or sent to the galleys. But they could make no case against me, and I was free. Ay, I was free; but the story has followed and come up against me many a time, forcing me sometimes to fly, and making me sullen and hated.

A PARCEL FROM THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA.—A young lady at school in Andover recently received a letter from friends in India announcing the despatch of a parcel containing half-a-sovereign and a little present. From the appearance of the letter, which was saturated apparently with the salt water, it was inferred that it with the parcel had been on board a ship recently wrecked. Accordingly, application was made to the postmaster of Andover, who, upon writing to headquarters, learned that there was a parcel lying at the office, but that the address was obliterated by its lying at the bottom of the sea for five weeks; the word "Andover" was the only thing legible. The parcel was forwarded to the postmaster, who opened it in the presence of the school-mistress, and its contents exactly corresponded with the description in the former letter. It contained, besides the half-sovereign, a purse elegantly mounted in silver and ivory, which was a good deal injured, and a brooch in gold and turquoise, which was entirely uninjured.—Hampshire Independent.

ÆS TRIPLEX.—Ladies are arming themselves with steel to an immense extent, steel waistbands and bright ribs of steel going round the entire body at about two inches' distance. They wear steel ornaments of all descriptions, even earrings of steel, and a necklace and head-dress of steel bells, which jingle something after the fashion of omnibus horses, but of course more poetically. Whether they are steel-clad like the vessels of war, and in the same direction, no one can tell, but it only concerns the gandins to know that all the hearts are not encased in that metal, and that hearts and heads are still soft in Paris.—Paris Letter.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY. JOHN COLLNER. J. P. BOGARDUS.

No effort will ho spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to tho Public for support, uot only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advauce; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must he addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No. 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

MEXICAN 10 PER CENT. LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO,

A LOAN OF

TEN MILLIONS OF DOLLARS!

Payable six years from July 1st, 1865,

Is offered for negotiation in the city of San Francisco, for which the honds of the said Government will he issued in sums of from $50 to $500, respectively, with interest at the rate of

TEN PER CENT. ANNUM,

Upon coupons attached thereto. Principal and interest payable in

UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

Interest Payuble Semi-Annually, at the PACIFIC BANK in the city of San Francisco.

Tbe said honds bearing date July 1st. 1865, and payable six years after date, are now offered for sale at the office of the undersigned,

NO. 430 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Tho payment and redemption of theso Bonds and Coupons are secnred by the transfer to Samuel Brannan, Esq., as Trustee, of one-half of the fiscal proceeds of

ALL THE REVENUES AND DUTIES

Derived from the Custom Houses of

MAZATLAN, GUAYMAS, MANZANILLO,

And all the Ports in the States of

SINALOA, SONORA AND COLIMA,

Aad from tbe Mines of said States,

Which Revenues and Duties, so soon as collected, are to he deposited and held in the PACIFIC BANK, San Fraacisco, and employed exclusively for the payment of said Bonds and Ioterest.

Tho great number of those desiring to aid, nnd hnving faith in the eventual triumph of

THE REPUBLIC OF MEXICO,

together with the abundance of the security offered, justify the belief that tbis Loan will be speedily taken up.

The Bonds issued will possess additional value from the facilities that will he offered to such of the holders as are engaged in

TRADING WITH THE PORTS SPECIFIED.

The Mexican Government reserves the right to redeem said Loan, or any part thereof, upon six months notice of said intention, published in a newspaper of the city of San Francisco and in a newspaper of the city of New York.

The undersigned has appointed SAMUEL BRANNAN, Esq., of the city of San Fraucisco, his Attorney, and given him authority to transact all business relative to these Bonds, in his name.

Subscription Books are opened at the rooms of the undersigned Office, Room No. 1, second floor, 420 Montgomery street.

For further particulars, including terms of loan, apply to

GASPAR SANCHEZ OCHOA,
Agent of the Republic of Mexico.

Office, No. 1, second floor, 420 Montgomery street,
ja24-tf San Fraucisco.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

Last night of the Celebrated Comedian,

MR. DAN SETCHELL,

SUPPORTED BY

THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Saturday Evening, June 24th, 1865,

ICI ON PARLE FRANCAIS!

After which,

REGULAR FIX,

To conclude with

TOODLES!

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, Juae 24th,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

DUTCH GOVERNOR

AND

JOHN JONES.

MONDAY EVENING, JUNE 26th,

First appearance of

MR. GEORGE PAUNCEFORT,

In the

Batchelor of Arts!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - 50 cents
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commeuce at 8 o'clock

DEWING & LAWS.

No. 511 Sacramento street, San Francisco.

GENERAL AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC STATES,

FOR THE SALE OF

New American Cyclopedia, 16 volumes; Annual Cyclopedia, first issued in 1861, 1 volume annually; Anecdotes, 2 volumes; History of the Civil War, 2 volumes; History of the World, by Philip Smith, B. A., 8 volumes; Gems from the Dusseldorf Gallery, issued in Parts; Burtou's Cyclopedia of Wit and Humor, issued in Parts; Devotional Family Bible, issued in Parts; Life of Christ, issued in Parts; Poetry and Incidents of the War, 1 volume.

The above meutioned Works are sold by our distributiag agents only.

Additions of New aod Standard Works are constantly bcing made to this list.

Young men of good character aad husiness habits are wanted to act as Agents. Agents wanted in every County in California, Oregon aud Nevada.

DEWING & LAWS,
511 Sacramento street,
jc24-tf San Fraucisco, Cal.

PROPOSALS

FOR PUBLISHING ON STEEL

A PORTRAIT OF

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND SON.

This Picture was photographed hy Brady in the White House at Washington, and is the last the President ever sat for.

It represents President Lincoln at home with his son reading the Bible, and is pronounced by the best judges to be superior to any other ever taken. We would recommend all who desire a first-class engraving—a life-like picture of President Lincoln—to subscribe now and receive their pictures from the first impressions of the plate. Early subscribers will receive proof-sheets. We propose to furnish to subscribers a fac-simile of the card engraved on steel 10 1-2x12 1-2 inches on plate paper 19x24 inches. Price in Rosewood or Gilt Frame, 14x18 inches, $5.

☞ Sold only by Subscription.

DEWING & LAWS, General Agents,
je24-tf 511 Sacramento Street.

FLAGS AND UNION BADGES

OF ALL SIZES,

ON HAND AND PRINTED TO ORDER, AT THE LOWEST RATES, BY

FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO,
517 CLAY STREET,
ja24-2t COMMERCIAL PRINTING OFFICE.

CALIFORNIA COLLEGIATE

INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG LADIES,

64, 66, 68, 70 Silver Street, San Francisco,

FOR BOARDING AND DAY PUPILS,

Will commeace its next Session THURSDAY, July 6th. A few vacancies remaining, early applicatiou will be necessary for those desiring admission. Further particulars may he obtained hy calling upon or addressing

MISS M. LAMMOND,
jc24 1m Principal.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS

FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use
For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets

WHEATLEIGH'S

EUREKA THEATRE,

Montgomery street between Pine and Californin.

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH.....Lessee and Manager.
JAMES DOWLING.....Stage Manager.
RALPH PHELPS.....Treasurer.
J. ALLEN.....Leader of Orchestra.
ANDREW TORNING.....Scenic Artist.

Saturday Afternoon and Evening, June 24th,

THE GREAT COMEDY
THE GREAT COMEDY
OF
OF
TAMING A BUTTERFLY,
TAMING A BUTTERFLY,
IN WHICH THE
IN WHICH THE
WHOLE COMPANY WILL APPEAR.
WHOLE COMPANY WILL APPEAR.
THE GREAT SUCCESS OF LAST SEASON
THE GREAT SUCCESS OF LAST SEASON
IN NEW YORK.
IN NEW YORK.

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
FOR FAMILIES?

Aumission, 50 cents. Children half-price.

Dress Circle, $1 00; Parquette, 50 and 25 cents; Private Boxes, $5 00.

Box Office open at 10 o'clock, when Seats can be secured.

DRY GOODS!

TAAFFE & CO.

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET.

HAVE ON EXHIBITION

NEW AND ELEGANT DRESS SILKS,

In Brocado, Moiro Antique, Plain Plaid, Striped and Chene, all of which they are offering at GREAT BARGAINS.

MOURNING GOODS,

In Boombazines, Alpaca, De Laines, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Foulard De Laines, Debages, Prints, Ginghams, etc., all at GREAT BARGAINS.

FAMILY AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS,

Barnesley Table Damasks, Table Cloths, Linen and Cotton Sheetiags and Shirtings, Towels, Napkins, Blankets, Quilts, Flannels, Lace and Muslin Curtains, Table and Piano Covers, etc., all at GREAT BARGAINS.

DRESS GOODS,

In Plaid, Striped, and Plain Poplins, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Debages, De Laines, Prints, Ginghams, Merinos, Valencias, Mobairs, etc., all at GREAT BARGAINS.

HOISERY,

Gentlemen's, Ladies' and Childreu's Under-Garments, Hose and Half Hose of every description, all at GREAT BARGBINS.

CLOAKS,

Mantillas, Sacques, Basques, of the Latest Paris Fashions, received by the last Steamer. Opera Cloaks and Sacques in great variety and in newest style. All at GREAT BARGAINS.

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
je24 Under the Lick House.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sole Agents,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

GUARDIAN'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 24th day of April, 1865, in the matter of the estate of Louis Conrad Meyer, a minor, the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said minor, will sell to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on the 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. & A. Barstow, No. 24 Montgomery Block, corner of Montgomery and Washington streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said Louis Conrad Meyer in and to that certain lot or parcel of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz.:

Commencing at the northwesterly corner of Octavia and Fulton streets, thence running south along the west line of Octavia street, 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, easterly 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, northerly 275 feet; and thence westerly along the north line of Fulton street 275 feet to the place of beginning; comprising a portion of Western Addition, Block No. 150, and surrounding streets.

And the said guardian will receive offers or bids therefor from this date to said 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 oclock noon at the place aforesaid.

JOHANNA MEYER, Guardian of the Estate
June 10, 1865.-5t of Louisa Conrad Meyer, a minor.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent, including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7-30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent.	per day on a $50 note.
Two cents	"	$100 "
Ten "	"	$500 "
20 "	"	$1,000 "
$1 "	"	$5,000 "

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.
March 25, 1865. ap29 3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency. JAY COOKE,
my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.

THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Braadreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.
☞ Sold by all Druggists.] de17 3m

THE CALIFORNIAN is published by A. A. Stickney, John Collner, and J. P. Bogardus.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No. 6.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 1, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES:

THE CALIFORNIAN'S Condensed Novelists —By "Bret."
Answers to Correspondents.—By "Mark Twain."
Rational Names.—By "Dionysius Vago."
Adornment of Homes —By "Iris."
The Pedlar's Doom; or, the Vision of Toulouse.
A Modest Outfit.
A New Phase of the Old Story.
Pepita, the Heroine.
The Opera of L'Africaine.
Ana of the "Autocrat."

EDITORIALS:

The Coming Holiday.
Perils of the Theater.
Musical Matters.
Editorial Paragraphs.

POETRY:

His Pen.—By "Bret."
Nursery Rhymes.
Going to Sleep.

THEATRICAL TALK:

The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.
Theatricals at the East.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:

Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Conclusion of Chapter XXXII.

THE WEEK'S DESPATCHES:

A Condensation of the Telegraphic News of the Week.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

(For the Californian.)

HIS PEN.

THIS is the reed the dead musician dropped,
With tuneful magic in its sheath still hidden;
The prompt allegro of its music stopped,
Its melodies—unbidden.

But who shall finish the unfinished strain,
Or wake the instrument to awe and wonder,
And bid the slender barrel breathe again—
An organ-pipe of thunder?

His pen! what humbler memories cling about
Its golden curves; what shapes and laughing graces
Slipped from its point when his full heart went out
In smiles and courtly phrases.

The truth half-jesting, half in earnest flung—
The word of cheer, with recognition in it;
The note of alms, whose golden speech outrung
The golden gift within it.

But all in vain the enchanter's wand we wave
No stroke of ours recalls his magic vision;
The incantation that its power gave
Sleeps with the dead magician.

BRET.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

THE musical event of the week was the production of "Nabuco" at the Academy of Music on Wednesday evening. The opera was well placed upon the stage, with new and appropriate scenery and costumes and a full chorus. Morelli, as Nabuco, showed the versatility of his dramatic powers and achieved a new lyric triumph. The efforts of Sconcia and Barilli, who renderrd their parts with considerable spirit and ability, were only second in excellence to the singing and acting of Morelli. The closing of the second act, where a thunderboldt of somewhat palpable significance, struck the crown from Nabuco's head, was very effectively given. The duo in the third act, between Morelli and Sconcia, was also excellently rendered. "Nabuco" was repeated last evening. We are glad to learn that "Faust" is reported to be in rehearsal at this house.

The complimentary benefit tendered to Signorina Brambilla at the Metropolitan on Thursday evening was not as well attended as the popularity and individual ability of the beneficiary should have warranted. The professional affairs of this talented artiste do not seem to have been well managed. There was evidently some unpleasant feeling existing, both among the musical public and the profession, in regard to this lady, and with the exception of Roncovieri and Schraubstaedter, as volunteers, and the necessary chorus and orchestra, Signorina Brambilla was left quite unaided in her efforts. Nevertheless, she was enthusiastically received. She was greeted with a shower of bouquets on entering, and the tribute was repeated with the warmest applause at the conclusion of Casta Diva and Una voce poco fa. We could have wished that her benefit had been so arranged that its success would have been equal to her general popularity, and consequently of greater material "benefit" to her.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"WE that have free souls, it touches us not."
HAMLET—Act III., Scene 2.

IF San Francisco does not, within a short space of time, become all that can be desired with regard to religious enlightenment, it will not be because vigorous efforts are not being made to effect regeneration. At the last regular monthly meeting of the City Tract Society, Mr. Woodworth, "the City Missionary," made a most encouraging report of his labors for the month. It may be wondered that one city missionary should be sufficient for a city of the size of San Francisco, but the following report will prove that "the City Missionary" is no ordinary man:

"About 35,000 pages of tracts were reported as distributed during the month. The City Missionary, the Rev. Mr. Woodworth, reported having made 394 business calls, 98 visits to families, 12 visits to the hospital, 26 religious meetings attended, 10 sermons and addresses by himself and others, 115 religious conversations, 27 Testaments, 1,234 papers and pamphlets and 3,690 pages of tracts distributed, besides writing several letters and articles for publication."

The preponderance of "business calls" may strike the reader as curious. The question arises, "What is a business call?" Doubtless a call for funds; dollars are of course the sinews of this holy war against the world, the flesh and the devil, equally as much as of any other war. 35,000 pages of tracts! Thickly as leaves in Vallambrosa, do pages of tracts lie scattered in this city. Does not the City Missionary indeed "do good and distribute"—tracts? He appears to shun the hospital. Can it be that the presence of infectious diseases renders that establishment an undesirable place to call at? Perish the thought! The statement of "10 sermons and addresses by himself and others," is culpably indefinite; it leads to a suspicion that the City Missionary's report of his labors includes the labors of other city missionaries; that he has not alone and unaided distributed 3,690 pages of tracts, that he has not himself engaged in "115 religious conversations." We cannot divest our mind of a suspicion that "the City Missionary" possesses an extraordinay faculty of making the most of what he does. What constitutes "a religious conversation?" Does he choose people who are already religious with whom to hold these religious conversations? These questions must be decided before a just estimate can be formed of the amount of labor accomplished by "the City Missionary" within the space of one month. It is to be presumed that he is faithful in the discharge of his duty, that he does not leave a pile of twenty or thirty tracts in a grocery store where they come to base uses, that he does not stop a small boy in the street, ask him if he is aware that he has a soul, and on the youthful sinner replying "You bet I do," pursue his inquiries no further, but make an entry in his book of "1 Religious Conversation." Then, again, were the "articles for publication" published or were they "declined with thanks?" On the whole, we consider the form in which "the City Missionary" presents his report ambiguous, and consequently unsatisfactory. It should be more full. If "the City Missionary" credits himself with "115 religious conversations," he should also be careful to enter on the Dr. side of his account any irreligious conversations he may have held. He must, in the course of his labors, be sometimes sorely tried, and it is not uncharitable, we trust, to suppose that he sometimes sins, that he may occasionally, in dealing with a vessel of wrath, express his conviction that the soul of said vessel is in a dangerous condition, in a temper and tone of voice which, if indulged in by an ungodly man instead of "the City Missionary," might lead the vessel of wrath to suppose that it was rather a malediction or an ex cathedra consignation of the immortal part of his being to eternal condemnation than a warning uttered for his good. These things, if ever such things do occur, should be entered in the monthly report, and, a balance being struck, it would appear to how much credit "the City Missionary" was entitled. The form in which the report is now presented may be very encouraging to the subscribers to the "City Tract Society," and may lead them to persist in investing in city tracts, trusting to realize from such investment in a future state of existence, when they "read their title clear," etc., but it certainly is not business. We have made the above remarks in no unkind spirit towards the "City Tract Society" or "the City Missionary," on the contrary, we hope that the former will regenerate society in this city, and the latter find the whole population tract-able.

WE notice constantly that in quoting paragraphs in which ungrammatical sentences occur, the word sic is appended to such passages. Why is not the k put in? No doubt the meaning of putting ("sic") against an ungrammatical sentence is to imply that, although the President's English may not be murdered in this instance it is "sick." For example—we observe in an interior paper: "He done the dirty work." (Sick.) There, that is our protest against the expression. Sick English, very sick English. The k ought certainly to be put in; it makes it so much more expressive. The Gold Hill News is requested to notice.

SENATOR CONNESS, in the speech which he made on the occasion of the presentation of the sword sent by Californians to General Hooker, is not happy in his similes and expressions. The closing sentence of his recapitulation of the victorious achievements of General Hooker is as follows:

"The Southern hosts were shattered, and thus the way was opened up for the great march of Sherman through the bowels of the Confederacy."

The image of Sherman marching through the bowels of the Confederacy is an unpleasant one. It is not comfortable to think of Sherman galloping the bowels of the Confederacy out. But let that pass; Mr. Conness is at liberty, if it seems fit to him, to ever institute comparisons between General Sherman and a medicinal preparation; we must, however, enter a protest against a reflection on the character of California. Mr. Conness continues:

"General Hooker, while these great deeds were being done, California, who claims you as her own, was an intent and charmed observer. She, upon whose beautiful neck the slave chain was sought to be hung, and upon whose virgin breast the libertine of the slave mart sported for awhile, early understood what was involved in the contest."

We object to the idea of "the libertine of the slave mart" sporting on the virgin breast of California; we should even object to Mr. Conness, being represented in such a position. Erotic similes such as this are in extremely bad taste, and we are surprised that Mr. Conness should condescend to employ them in connection with the State which choose him to represent her in the Council Halls of the Nation. An ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten Mr. Conness's imagination. In some future speech he will be talking of the pirate Semmes sporting for a time on the virgin breast of the Ocean, and Winslow avenging the insult to Oceana's honor by sinking the Alabama. We trust no hot-blooded Californian will think it incumbent upon him to call Senator Conness out for his language with reference to California and "the libertine of the slave mart."

WE read the other day that all persons in Richmond desiring to be married, had to take the oath of allegiance before the ceremony was allowed to take place. Here is something of the same kind which we clip from an exchange:

"Every member of a family in Savannah who has reached the age of eighteen is required to take the amnesty oath of allegiance to the United States before being allowed to make use of the mails."

This has reference of course to females. No Savannah belle can make use of a male, make him hold the baby, run errands for her, chop wood or put him to any other base uses to which males come after they have been subjugated by woman, until she has taken the oath of allegiance. We rather imagine that the "loyalizing" the Southern people will be a particularly unpleasant process, and they will be very glad when it is finished. President Johnson will probably make about as quick work of it as any other man. There must be considerable swearing down South just now, and the oaths uttered are not all amnesty oaths.

LONDON Fun defines a "Puseyite candle" as "a burning shame." A wicked shame would be as good and equally as new. That's very old, Fun. Why didn't you follow it up with a squib about Roman candles being bad fire-works for Protestant churches, and their making the congregation wax wroth. Then you might have said that it would be impossible to make any good Protestant swallow this innovation, he would always find the candles stick in his throat; that the Puseyite clergymen ought to alter their custom and remove the candles from the altar. Then again, what a good joke you might have made about the Baptists—saying that while the Puseyites and Catholics went in for wax candles, the Baptists went in for dips. Bah, Fun, don't be so stingy with your puns; punning ought to come as easy to the editor of a funny paper as lying to the proprietor of a political organ.

WE often wonder where those little moral sayings of a line or two, which are so convenient to fill out a column with, come from. For instance who wrote this:

"A bad cold, like a murderer's conscience, often comes upon us about midnight and vexes us for many hours."

What possible connection can there be between a murderer's conscience and a bad cold? There may be some between a murderer and a sore throat, but a murderer's sore throat does not vex him many hours; it only troubles him a few seconds.

THE Bulletin refers to an operation which is new to us, in the following words:

"We gave last evening an account of the developments which had been made in the Moses Frank forgery cases, showing that jurors had been packed and bribed."

We have heard of "packing a jury," but of packing a juror, never. Perhaps packing a juryman means "putting drinks into him." Jurymen are sometimes as obstinate as mules; when a juryman is a mule perhaps he is packed.

TREM.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

By the author of "Aurora Floyd," "Three Times Dead," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Doctor's Wife," "The Outcasts," etc.

SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS PUBLISHED.

Ensign Harcourt Lowther, a gentleman of culture, and Francis Tredethlyn, the hero, (the son of a Cornish farmer,) a soldier in the same regiment, who is detailed as a confidential servant to Ensign Lowther, have been stationed in Van Diemen's Land for five years. In boyhood Tredethlyn had fallen in love with his rich uncle's only child, "cousin Susy," and a secret engagement had taken place between them, which was afterwards broken off, and he enlisted. Although he had written frequently to his cousin he had received no response or any intelligence from home, until the story opens with the reception of information of the death of his miserly uncle and his inheritance of thirty thousand pounds a year. He departs for England to take possession of his inheritance.

Upon his arrival in England, his first action is a vain attempt to find his cousin Susan, who had been forbidden her father's house in a moment of stormy passion, to divide his fortune with her. His monied influence gains him an introduction into the family and social circle of Lionel Hillary, an apparently wealthy merchant, whose family consists of his only daughter, Maude, and her friend and companion, Miss Julia Desmond, both cultivated and prepossessing young ladies. Tredethlyn soon becomes enamored with Maude, though the consciousness of his social inferiority causes him to hide his passion and endeavor to subdue it. Dazzled and flattered by his new position, he is made an easy victim to the designs of Miss Desmond, who sees in his fortune an incentive to the exertion of all her arts with a view to a matrimonial alliance that will at once free her from her situation of dependency, and give her wealth and position. An avowal and declaration is forced from Tredethlyn at a designed interview, by the artful Miss Desmond, and they are engaged.

A panic now occurs in the mercantile affairs of Lionel Hillary, and ruin stares him in the face. His daughter, noticing his changed manners and sleepless nights, watches him, and prevents him from committing suicide; winning from him the avowal that twenty thousand pounds are immediately required to save him from failure, disgrace and poverty. She seeks the frank, good-hearted Tredethlyn, and, in an impassioned manner, appeals to him to rescue her father from his situation. This interview brings forth an equally impassioned declaration from Tredethlyn of his love for her, of his conscious unworthiness, and his willingness to bestow the whole of his fortune for her benefit, if necessary.

Miss Hillary is surprised, shocked and offended by this avowal, and is about retiring in anger, when Miss Desmond, who has overheard enough to obtain a clew to the purport of the interview, enters; charges Maude with mercenary motives in supplanting her, and Tredethlyn with infidelity, and declares all is cancelled between him and herself. Miss Desmond leaves the house early next morning without an explanation. Tredethlyn attempts an apology to Maude, who refuses to listen to him. He, disgusted by the troubles his fortune and new position have environed him with, determines to estrange himself from them and fly to London. The next day twenty thousand pounds are placed to the credit of Lionel Hillary at his banker's, from an anonymous source. The merchant is all gratitude; points to Tredethlyn as his benefactor, and speaks of him in the warmest terms to his daughter.

Tredethlyn seeks again in vain for his cousin Susan, though he learns she has been entrapped into a mock marriage by a villain, who deserted her, and that she then fled to London. Subsequently new meshes are thrown around our hero by the designing Lionel Hillary; ten thousand pounds more are obtained from him, and he is admitted a silent partner in the house of Hillary & Co. Maude, who was betrothed to Ensign Harcourt Lowther—Tredethlyn's old master—before he left England, is commanded by her father to break off all correspondence with him and to look with favor upon an alliance with Tredethlyn. A chance encounter occurs, and Maude's amiability paves the way for a new hope and a new declaration. Acceptance and marriage speedily follow.

Just previous to the marriage, Ensign Harcourt Lowther returns from Van Diemen's Land, and seeks an interview with Maude, only to learn from her own lips the story of her forced engagement. Learning the name of the affianced, he tells her of the old relation of master and man, and makes Maude pledge him not to reveal to Tredethlyn the secret of their earlier love and engagement. Nettled and stung by his jealousy and pride, he plans a cultured and villainous revenge. After the marriage occurs and Tredethlyn and wife have become engrafted into the fashionable circles of London, he seeks him out and instals himself into the graces of the young Cornishman, and becomes his inseperable companion and mentor, leading him gradually into (for Tredethlyn) the dangerous confines of vice and dissipation and widening more and more the gulf between him and Maude, who had become the "sensation," the leading fashionable wife of London, whose parties, receptions and dinners were notable for their extravagance.

Maude one day encountered Miss Julia Desmond, who is occupying the position of governess, seeks her forgiveness and tenders her a home. Julia, still rankling with jealous passion, refuses the offer, except as a hired companion. Maude humors her foible, but insists on her promising to come as a "friend." Envy and jealousy urging Julia to seek a proper opportunity to become avenged, she dissembles and accepts.

Tredethlyn, sickened by the constant round of gay and dissipated life, is withdrawn from the dangerous highways by the discovery of his cousin, whom he encounters one night as a supernumerary of one of the London theatres. He seeks an interview, with the determination of bestowing on her a portion of that fortune, which his innate convictions have always told him should have been hers.

Harcourt Lowther continues his daily visits to the house of Tredethlyn, and is constantly poisoning the wife's mind by noting the husband's absence and inventing excuses for him with the mock morality of a "Joseph Surface." Tredethlyn has a secret which calls him frequently from town during the day, which excites Lowther's curiosity, but his efforts to discover it are fruitless. The greater portion of Tredethlyn's time, however, is spent in the old way, with cards, at the race-track, and in dissipation, under Lowther's guidance.

Roderick Lowther, the elder brother of Harcourt Lowther, and much like him in appearance and character, prepossessing, cool, calculating and unscrupulous—a member of the corps diplomatique at Belgium—returns to England on a three months' leave of absence, and becomes domiciled with Harcourt. He announces his intention of seeking a good pecuniary match and marrying to secure the approval of an old maiden aunt, whose fortune he expects to inherit. He soon fathoms his brother's schemes, promises his assistance in their furtherance, and asks Harcourt to aid his own. He is introduced into the house of Mrs. Tredethlyn, and there meets Miss Grunderson, a young lady of ordinary appearance and intellect, but an heiress.

Roderick at once perceives that the most feasible way to make an impression upon Miss Grunderson, (who has frequently been courted for her wealth, and is somewhat suspicious of motives,) is to appear eminently disinterested, and rather skeptical, withal, relative to the desirableness of the matrimonial condition. Pursuing this line of policy, he is successful. He next visits his aunt to propitiate her favor. Harcourt Lowther finds Tredethlyn no longer a willing instrument in his hands, but discovers a clue to the mystery that so long has baffled him, in a tradesman's bill for goods and furniture supplied at Brook Cottage, Petersham, the bill having been carelessly left by Tredethlyn in his study.

A pleasure party, consisting of Harcourt Lowther, Mrs. Tredethlyn, Roderick Lowther, Rosa Grunderson and Julia Desmond visit Petersham; Harcourt contrives to give the party a view of Francis Tredethlyn in company with a woman seated very lovingly "under a mulberry tree" near a cottage; he intimates that he has made a discovery which causes him the worst apprehensions.

CHAPTER XXXVII.—Concluded.

Maude looked at Harcourt Lowther with a vague alarm in her face, which had grown almost as white as the umbrella that sheltered it. Harcourt's whisper had frightened her a hundredfold more than the sight of her husband, at home in that unknown garden with a woman she had never seen or heard of.

"Who is that lady?" she asked, when they had passed the gate. "Do you know her, Mr. Lowther? You know all my husband's associations much better than I do."

She tried to speak quite calmly, but failed miserably in the effort. Harcourt's whisper had expressed so much.

"No, I do not know the lady," he answered, gravely. "I think you had better make no inquiries about her. Mr. Tredethlyn did not tell you that he was to spend the day at Petersham?"

"No. He only said that he was going a little way out of town."

"Then in that case it will be better for you to leave him to finish his day as he pleases, since you have made no arrangement for meeting him here, and do not know the lady."

Maude did not answer him just then. She walked on a little faster than before; and Harcourt kept by her side, looking furtively every now and then at the pale profile, the tremulous lower lip. He could see that Mrs. Tredethlyn was profoundly agitated, and that she was trying to conceal her agitation. He could see this; and he was determined to make her speak, and speak freely.

"She is not the sort of woman to suffer in silence," he thought. "This kind of trouble is new to her, and she will cry out presently."

Mr. Lowther was not very much at fault in his estimate of Maude's heroism. She spoke to him when they were a few paces from Julia, whose face was lighted by a look of triumph under her gauzy veil.

"You say you do not know that lady. You must at least know who she is?"

This was said in a tone of almost piteous entreaty.

"Upon my honor, no," Harcourt answered, gravely.

There was a pause from some moments. They were in one of the meadows by this time, nearing the water's edge, Julia still in the rear, and Maude still walking very fast, as it is the habit of most people to walk under the influence of agitation. Perhaps in that unreasoning, unnecessary haste there lurks a vague fancy that we can hurry away from our trouble.

All at once Maude turned to Harcourt Lowther and laid her hand upon his arm.

"Tell me what it all means," she cried, "tell me the worst, however bad it is. I know that you are hiding something from me. I know by your manner just now that there is some horrible meaning in Frank's presence in that garden with that woman."

"My dear Mrs. Tredethlyn, you ask me to interfere in a matter which I have no right to approach. It may be everything to you where your husband goes—whom he associates with. I have been his friend—for your sake—and I have done my best to steer him clear of dangerous acquaintance and dangerous amusements—still for your sake. I may have found it a hard matter to keep him out of mischief, and may have regretted the natural tendencies of his character—always for your sake. Beyond this I can have nothing to do with him. I had good reason for being sorry when you married him—on my own account. Of late I have been even more sorry—on yours."

Maude looked at him, white and trembling. The schemer was pleased to see what deadly mischief had been done, and yet stung to the very heart to find that any falsehood of his victim's could wound so deeply. There are triumphs which have a shadow of humiliation upon their brightness, and this was one of them. Julia, seeing that her companions were loitering, seated herself on the lower step of a stile. She had no desire to interrupt this conversation.

"Speak to me plainly," Mrs. Tredethlyn cried, passionately, "or I will go back to that cottage and ask my husband himself for an explanation. Perhaps that would be best. He has a better right to explain his conduct than any one else."

She walked a few paces from her companion, but Harcourt Lowther followed her, and caught her gently by the arm.

"Will Francis Tredethlyn tell you the truth if you question him?" he asked. "My dear Mrs. Tredethlyn, how could you endure the esclandre of such a scene as must ensue if you go back to that house, and confront your husband in the presence of that woman?"

"Why should there be a scene, or any esclandre? The lady may be the wife or daughter of some friend of my husband's. Have I any right to imagine something horrible because I see Frank with a person who is a stranger to me? It was only your manner that frightened me."

"I am very sorry my manner was so foolish. Let us drop the subject. Only—take my advice—don't go back to that house."

"Why should I not, if my husband is innocent? as I am sure he is."

Mr. Lowther shrugged his shoulders.

"Because it is an unpleasant thing to intrude where one is not invited," he answered. "Whatever questions you wish to ask your husband can be reserved until you are both at home; and in the meantime pray let the matter drop. Believe me, it is not a fit subject for discussion between you and me."

There are lawyers who generally inaugurate a consultation by advising their clients not to go to law. They know it is a very safe display of magnanimity. It is only the old story of standing upon the shore to reason with a tempestuous ocean, or interfering with the appetite of a famished wolf in favor of the lamb on which he means to dine. To try to restrain a woman whose jealousy has once been roused from any investigation of her fancied wrongs, is no less wasted labor; and Harcourt Lowther knew quite enough of human nature to be very sure of this.

Mrs. Tredethlyn turned upon him fiercely. He had never seen the woman he loved in a passion until this moment; and though he had so much else to employ his thoughts just now, he could not help pausing for a moment to think how beautiful she looked with that new light in her eyes, that feverish glow so suddenly kindled in the cheeks that had been deadly pale.

"I will not let the matter drop," she cried. "You are keeping some hideous secret hidden from me. I know you are. I could not be mistaken in your tone just now when you saw Francis in that garden. If there were no harm in his being there, why should you express such amazement? Harcourt Lowther, we were friends once, and you affect to be my friend now. If you are what you pretend to be, tell me the meaning of my husband's conduct."

"You love him very much, Maude, to feel his conduct so deeply."

She was too agitated to notice that her old lover had called her by her Christian name. He had perhaps been scarcely aware of it himself. He loved her better at this moment than he had ever loved her in his life, now that she stood before him a beautiful, angry, passionate creature, appealing to him against the husband for whose sake he had been jilted.

"You must be very much in love with your husband," he repeated, bitterly; "and yet I should have scarcely thought it possible you could care for that sort of person."

"He is my husband," answered Maude, "and I have a right to be angry if he does me any wrong."

"I acknowledge your right to be as angry as you please, but I am sorry to see you so agitated. I am very sorry we happened to walk this way."

"Will you tell me the truth? I have appealed to you by our old friendship. I shall never again believe in you as a friend unless you speak plainly to-day."

"If you say that, you oblige me to speak. Will you take my arm, and walk up and down by the hedge yonder. I see people coming into the meadow, and we look rather conspicuous standing just here."

Mrs. Tredethlyn accepted the offered arm. Harcourt Lowther was silent for some moments while they strolled slowly under the shadow of a tall hawthorn hedge. He was waiting until Maude should have recovered some little calmness, and be in a condition to appreciate the full value of what he was going to say.

"It would be going over very old ground, and awakening very bitter recollections—on my part, at least," he began at last, in a subdued and pensive tone, "were I to tell you what I thought of your marriage with Francis Tredethlyn. When I thought of it most mildly, I believed it the maddest sacrifice that was ever made to the Moloch Wealth since this world began. You had your reasons, you told me, and they were very powerful reasons, but they were to be kept a secret. I had no more to say. All I could do was to hope that you might not be miserable with the man you married—to my mind, the man of all others least adapted to make you a happy wife. I should have done well had I been wise enough to keep aloof from you and your husband after that unhappy marriage. I was so mad as to hang about your house, and accept the friendship of my rival, in the belief that I might save the vessel wherein you had embarked from some of those rocks which I saw a little ahead of the calm bay whence you sailed, with all the stereotyped paraphernalia of pennants flying and guns firing. I have saved you from a good deal; but I have not been able to change your husband's nature, and he has taken his own way in spite of me."

"What do you mean?" Maude demanded, breathlessly.

"I cannot, and will not, enter into the details of Francis Tredethlyn's life for the last twelve months. No, Maude, not even your entreaties shall wring from me more than I have a right to tell, or you to hear. And if I spoke the plainest words that ever sullied a woman's ear, I should only be talking a strange language which would convey no meaning to your innocent mind. There are places in London whose names you have never heard in your life—places whose very existence might never be known to honest people if men did not write about them in the newspapers; and amongst the habitues of those places your husband has been conspicuous since the first week of his return from the village where you and he spent your honeymoon. There are dinners given, up at that hotel yonder, to women whose costume is an extravagant copy of yours. but who in everything except their dress differ from you as entirely as darkness differs from light; and Francis Tredethlyn has been foremost amongst the dinner-givers ever since he has had a fortune to squander. So long as he was amused by open follies and dissipations I cherished a lingering hope that custom would bring weariness. and that the very monotony of these poisonous pleasures would render them their own antidote. I made excuses for the man who had so newly succeeded to a fortune large enough to intoxicate a weak brain; and I fancied, when the novelty of his wealth had ceased to bewilder him, he would awake to a better sense of the degrading path in which he was treading. I thought this, Maude, and I believed also that your loveliness, your purity, rendered all the more obvious by contrast with the people amongst whom he wasted his life, must lure him back to your side. How could I think otherwise than this?—I, who had loved and lost you!"

It never occurred to Mrs. Tredethlyn that these were the very last words that Harcourt Lowther should have spoken to her, at this moment above all other moments. It seemed as if she scarcely heard this allusion to the past, any more than she had heard her old lover's frequent utterance of her Christian name.

"I think my husband loved me—once," she murmured, in a low, sorrowful voice. "He was so noble in his conduct—so generous to my father."

"My poor girl," exclaimed Harcourt, with supreme compassion, "how should you know the difference between a good man's generosity and a profligate's lavish bid for the fair young bride who happens to be the fancy of the moment? There are men who will give as exaggerated a price for a picture as ever Francis Tredethlyn offered when he won you for his wife; but you would scarcely call a man 'generous' because he bid extravagantly for a Raffaelle or a Murillo at Christie's. There is no creature in this world so selfish as a profligate."

Maude turned sick and cold to the very heart as Mr. Lowther said this.

A profligate! The horrible word wounded her like the stroke of a knife. In a moment this innocent girl, who until now had only known the existence of "profligacy" as an unspeakable noun substantive hidden away somewhere in the close columns of unexpurgated dictionaries, felt the veil rudely torn from the purity of her mind; and was told that her husband, that other part of herself united to her by the solemn service of the Church, was the obnoxious thing which until this hour no one had ever dared to name in her presence. The generosity she had believed in was a sham. The noble nature which had commanded her regard and esteem, even when it could not win her love, had never existed out of her own imagination. She had been wronged, betrayed, humiliated; while in her school-girl simplicity she had been lamenting her unworthiness of a devoted husband's love. She had been bought for money like a slave in some Oriental marketplace, when she had imagined herself a free sacrifice offered as the recompense of a sacred debt.

She did not speak; but looking at her face, Harcourt Lowther saw that his words had gone home. The breach between husband and wife yawned wide enough now. The undermining of the ground had been slow, laborious work, but the result repaid this social engineer for all his trouble. With what a crash the earth fell in when it was time for the convulsion! So some huge mass of Kentish chalk, which sappers and miners have been manipulating for a month or so, and at which a crowd of tired spectators have been staring hopelessly for two hours at a stretch, breaks away all at once from the bosom of the cliff with a thunderous noise, and crumbles into powder.

But Mr. Lowther had not finished yet.

"I thought I could win you back your husband, Maude, and restore him to you a better man," he said; "but I soon discovered how futile such a hope was. I have been by his side in scenes that were horribly repugnant to my own nature, in order that I might hold him back from the verge of deeper gulfs than those into which he had already fallen. Within the last few months I have known that he kept a secret from me, and I knew that it must be a disgraceful one. Only a few days ago it came to my knowledge that he had lately furnished a house somewhere in the suburbs. This gave me a clue to those mysterious absences, those journeys on business a little way out of town, about which your husband had been so reticent. Men of Francis Tredethlyn's calibre do not furnish houses from benevolent motives. I had no means of knowing where the house was—how little could I imagine that it was in this neighborhood, or that accident would lead our footsteps to its very threshold! Mrs. Tredethlyn, you shall not wring another word from me. I am sorry that you have tempted me to tell you so much," exclaimed Mr. Harcourt, who had said all he wanted to say.

It was a long time before Maude answered him; and then she said, very slowly, and with a painful effort—

"I thank you—for having told me the truth. It is always best to know the truth."

(To be continued.)

NURSERY RHYMES

ADAPTED TO THE TIMES.

BY J. G. SAXE.

THE WARRIORS.

BEAU and Lee
Went out, you see,
To do a little slaughter;
Beau fell down
And broke his crown,
And Lee came tumbling after!

THE CONSULTATION.

Goosey, goosey, gander,
Where shall I wander?
Said the rebel President
To his great commander.
Goosey, goosey, gander,
It's time to meander;
Out of here you'd better steer,
Said the great commander.

FLIGHT OF JEFF DAVIS.

There was a man in Richmond town,
And Yankees came to nab him;
He clomb up to the chimney-top,
And saw they meant to grab him.
So he got down on 'tother side,
And then they couldn't find him;
He rode as fast as he could ride,
And never looked behind him!

THE ARCH-TRAITOR.

Jeff was a cunning dog,
Jeff was a thief;
Of all the rogues in rebeldom,
Jeff was the chief.
But Weitzel went to Richmond,
And then Jeff fled;
Now the Yankees have him,
They'll chop off his head!

SONG OF THE CITIZENS.

We are all in the dumps,
For Yankees are trumps,
And chivalry 's gone to the wall;
Jeff Davis is bit,
And Lee 's in a fit,
And that is the end of us all!

FALL OF THE CONFEDERACY.

Trumpery-Dumpty sat on a wall,
Trumpery-Dumpty had a great fall;
All Jeff's horses and all Jeff's men
Can't put the trumpery together again!

SUMMARY.

Confedery Grundy
Was born on Monday,
Christened on Tuesday,
Sickened on Wednesday,
Very ill on Thursday,
Worse on Friday,
Died on Saturday,
Buried on Sunday,
And that is the end
Of Confedery Grundy.

[Flag of Our Union.

MOTHER GOOSE FOR INFANT REBELS.

I.

Little Jeff Etticoat
In his wife's petticoat
And a blue nose.
The longer he runs
How short his hoop shows!

II.

Three cavalry mice
Very neat and nice—
They all ran after Jeff and his wife,
They cut off his hoop with a sabre knife—
Three cavalry mice!

III.

Breckinridge, Davis and Slidell,
Three little boys who were idle:
They played with edged tools,
These three little fools,
And then they got whipped on their stools!

IV.

Secession would a wooing go,
A wooing go,
And made love everywhere;
By Vic and by Eugenia snubbed,
At length by Miss Columbia drubbed,
Secession does a Woe-ing go,
A wooing go.

[N. Y. Leader.

ALBERMARLE was the lover of Mdlle Graucher. As they were walking together one evening, he perceived her eyes fixed on a star, and said to her: "Do not look at it, my dear; I cannot give it to you." "Never," says Marmontel, "did love express itself more delicately."

ANA OF THE AUTOCRAT.

[We make the following selections from the latest edition of the "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table."

"FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE."

DO I think that the particular form of lying often seen in newspapers, under the title, "From our Foreign Correspondent," does any harm? Why, no. I don t know that it does. I supose it doesn't really deceive people any more than the Arabian Nights or Gulliver's Travels do. Sometimes the writers compile too carelessly, though. and mix up facts out of geographies, and stories out of the penny papers, so as to mislead those who are desirous of information. I cut a piece out of one of the papers, the other day, which contains a number of improbabilities, and, I suspect, misstatements. I will send up and get it for you, if you would like to hear it. Ah, this is it; it is headed

"OUR SUMATRA CORRESPONDENCE.

"This island is now the property of the Stamford family—having been won. it is said, in a raffle, by Sir — Stamford, during the stock-gambling mania of the South Sea Scheme. The history of this gentleman may be found in an interesting series of questions (unfortunately not yet answered) contained in the Notes and Queries. This island is entirely surrounded by the ocean, which here contains a large amount of saline substance, crystallizing in cubes remarkable for their symmetry, and frequently displays on its surface, during calm weather, the rainbow tints of the celebrated South Sea bubbles. The Summers are oppressively hot, and the Winters very probably cold; but this fact cannot be ascertained precisely, as, for some peculiar reason, the mercury in these latitudes never shrinks, as in more northern regions, and thus the thermometer is rendered useless in Winter.

"The principal vegetable productions of the island are the pepper-tree and the bread-fruit tree. Pepper being very abundantly produced, a benevolent society was organized in London during the last century for supplying the natives with vinegar and oysters, as an addition to that delightful condiment. [Note received from Dr. D. P.] It is said, however, that, as the oysters were of the kind called natives in England, the natives of Sumatra, in obedience to a natural instinct, refused to touch them, and confined themselves entirely to the crew of the vessel in which they were brought over. This information was received from one of the oldest inhabitants, a native himself, and exceedingly fond of missionaries. He is said also to be very skilful in the cuisine peculiar to the island.

"During the season of gathering the pepper, the persons employed are subject to various incommodities, the chief of which is violent and long-continued sternutation, or sneezing. Such is the vehemence of these attacks, that the unfortunate subjects of them are often driven backward for great distances at immense speed, on the well-known principle of the æolipile. Not being able to see where they are going, these poor creatures dash themselves to pieces against the rocks or are precipitated over the cliffs, and thus many valuable lives are lost annually. As, during the whole pepper-harvest, they feed exclusively on this stimulant, they become exceedingly irritable. The smallest injury is resented with ungovernable rage. A young man suffering from the pepper-fever, as it is called, cudgelled another most severely for appropriating a superannuated relative of trifling value, and was only pacified by having a present made him of a pig of that peculiar species of swine called the "Pecavi" by the Catholic Jews, who it is well known, abstain from swine's flesh in imitation of the Mahometan Buddhists.

"The bread-tree grows abundantly. Its branches are well known to Europe and America under the familiar name of maccaroni. The smaller twigs are called vermicelli. They have a decided animal flavor, as may be observed in the soups containing them. Maccaroni, being tubular, is the favorite habitat of a very dangerous insect, which is rendered peculiarly ferociously by being boiled. The Government of the island, therefore, never allows a stick of it to be exported without being accompanied by a piston with which its cavity may at any time be thoroughly swept out. These are commonly lost or stolen before the maccaroni arrives among us. It therefore always contains many of these insects, which, however, generally die of old age in the shops, so that accidents from this source are comparatively rare.

"The fruit of the bread-tree consists principally of hot rolls. The buttered-muffin variety is supposed to be a hybrid with the cocoa-nut palm, the cream found on the milk of the cocoa-nut exuding from the hybrid in the shape of butter, just as the ripe fruit is splitting, so as to fit it for the tea-table."

THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS.

I LOVE the damask rose best of all. The flowers our mothers and sisters used to love and cherish, those which grow beneath our eaves and by our doorstep, are the ones we always love best. If the Houynhnms should ever catch me, and, finding me particularly vicious and unmanageable, send a man-tamer to Rareyfy me, I'll tell you what drugs he would have to take and how he would have to use them. Imagine yourself reading a number of the Houyhnhnm Gazette, giving an account of such an experiment:

"Man-Taming Extraordinary. — The soft-hoofed semi-quadruped recently captured was subjected to the art of our distinguished man-tamer in presence of a numerous assembly. The animal was led in by two stout ponies, closely confined by straps to prevent his sudden and dangerous tricks of shoulder-hitting and foot-striking. His countenance expressed the utmost degree of ferocity and cunning.

"The operator took a handful of budding lilac leaves, and crushing them slightly between his hoofs, so as to bring out their peculiar fragrance, fastened them to the end of a long pole and held them toward the creature. Its expression changed in an instant—it drew in their fragrance eagerly, and attempted to seize them with its soft split hoofs. Having thus quieted his suspicious subject, the operator proceeded to tie a blue hyacinth to the end of the pole and held it out towards the wild animal. The effect was magical. Its eyes filled as with rain-drops, and its lips trembled as it pressed them to the flower. After this it was perfectly quiet, and brought a measure of corn to the man-tamer, without showing the least disposition to strike with the feet or hit from the shoulder."

That will do for the Houyhnhnm Gazette.

Do you ever wonder why poets talk so much about flowers? Did you ever hear of a poet who did not talk about them? Don't you think a poem which for the sake of being original should leave them out, would be like those verses where the letter a or e or some other is omitted? No—they will bloom over and over again in poems as in the Summer fields, to the end of time, always old and always new. Why should we be more shy of repeating ourselves than the Spring be tired of blossoms or the night of stars? Look at Nature. She never wearies of saying over her floral pater-noster. In the crevices of Cyclopean walls—in the dust where men lie, dust also—on the mounds that bury huge cities, the wreck of Nineveh and the Babel-heap—still that same sweet prayer and benediction. The Amen of Nature is always a flower.

—

HOW A POEM IS WRITTEN.

Lyric conception—my friend, the Poet, said—hits me like a bullet in the forehead. I have often had the blood drop from my cheeks when it struck, and felt that I turned as white as death. Then comes a creeping as of centipedes running down the spine—then a gasp and a great jump of the heart—then a long sigh—and the poem is written.

It is an impromptu, I suppose, if you write it so suddenly, I replied.

No, said he; far from it. I said written, but I did not say copied. Every such poem has a soul and a body, and it is the body of it, or the copy, that men read and publishers pay for. The soul of it is born in an instant in the poet's soul. It comes to him a thought, tangled in the meshes of a few sweet words—words that have loved each other from the cradle of the language, but have never been wedded until now. Whether it will ever fully embody itself in a bridal train of a dozen stanzas or not is uncertain; but it exists potentially from the instant that the poet turns pale with it. It is enough to stun and scare anybody, to have a hot thought come crashing into his brain, and ploughing up those parallel ruts where the wagon trains of common ideas were jogging along in their regular sequences of association.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

—

[All letters for this department should be addressed to Mr. Mark Twain, who has been detailed from the editorial staff to conduct it. Courting Etiquette, Distressed Lovers, of either sex, and Struggling Young Authors, as yet "unbeknown" to Fame, will receive especial attention]

—

Young Actor.—This gentleman writes as follows: "I am desperate. Will you tell me how I can possibly please the newspaper critics? I have labored conscientiously to achieve this, ever since I made my début upon the stage, and I have never yet entirely succeeded in a single instance. Listen: The first night I played after I came among you, I judged by the hearty applause that was frequently showered upon me, that I had made a 'hit'—that my audience were satisfied with me—and I was happy accordingly. I only longed to know if I had been as successful with the critics. The first thing I did in the morning was to send for the papers. I read this: 'Mr. King Lear Macbeth made his first appearance last night, before a large and fashionable audience, as 'Lord Blucher,' in Bilgewater's great tragedy of Blood, Hair and the Ground Tore Up. In the main, his effort may be set down as a success—a very gratifying success. His voice is good, his manner easy and graceful, and his enunciation clear and distinct; his conception of the character he personated was good, and his rendition of it almost perfect. This talented young actor will infallibly climb to a dizzy elevation upon the ladder of histrionic fame, but it rests with himself to say whether this shall be accomplished at an early day or years hence. If the former, then he must at once correct his one great fault—we refer to his habit of throwing extraordinary spirit into passages which do not require it—his habit of ranting, to speak plainly. It was this same unfortunate habit which caused him to spoil the noble scene between 'Lord Blucher' and 'Viscount Cranberry,' last night, in that portion of the third act where the latter unjustly accuses the former of attempting to seduce his pure and honored grandmother. His rendition of 'Lord Blucher's' observation—was uttered with undue excitement and unseemly asperity—there was too much rant about it. We trust Mr. Macbeth will consider the hint we have given him.' That extract, Mr. Twain, was from the Morning Thunderbolt. The Daily Battering-Ram gave me many complimenta, but said that in the great scene referred to above, I gesticulated too wildly and too much—and advised me to be more circumspect in future, in these matters. I played the same piece that night, and toned myself down considerably in the matter of ranting and gesticulation. The next morning neither the Thunderbolt or the Battering-Ram gave me credit for it, but the one said my 'Lord Blucher' overdid the pathetic in the scene where his sister died, and the other said I laughed too boisterously in the one where my servant fell in the dyer's vat and came out as green as a meadow in Spring-time. The Daily American Earthquake said I was too tame in the great scene with the 'Viscount.' I felt a little discouraged, but I made a note of these suggestions and fell to studying harder than ever. That night I toned down my grief and my mirth, and worked up my passionate anger and my gesticulation just the least in the world. I may remark here that I began to perceive a moderation, both in quantity and quality, of the applause vouchsafed me by the audience. The next morning the papers gave me no credit for my efforts at improvement, but the Thunderbolt said I was too loving in the scene with my new bride, the Battering-Ram said I was not loving enough, and the Earthquake said it was a masterly performance and never surpassed upon these boards. I was check-mated. I sat down and considered how I was going to engineer that love-scene to suit all the critics, until at last I became stupefied with perplexity. I then went down town, much dejected, and got drunk. The next day the Battering-Ram said I was too spiritless in the scene with the 'Viscount,' and remarked sarcastically that I threatened the 'Viscount's' life with a subdued voice and manner eminently suited to conversation in a funeral procession. The Thunderbolt said my mirth was too mild in the dyer's vat scene, and observed that instead of laughing heartily, as it was my place to do, I smiled as blandly—and as gnardedly, apparently—as an undertaker in the cholera season. These mortuary comparisons had a very depressing effect upon my spirits, and I turned to the Earthquake for comfort. That authority said 'Lord Blucher' seemed to take the death of his idolized sister uncommonly easy, and suggested with exquisite irony that if I would use a toothpick, or pretend to pare my nails, in the death-bed scene, my attractive indifference would be the perfection of acting. I was almost desperate, but I went to work earnestly again to apply the newspaper hints to my 'Lord Blucher.' I ranted in the 'Viscount' scene (this at home in my private apartments) to suit the Battering-Ram, and then toned down considerably, to approach the Earthquake's standard; I worked my grief up strong in the death-bed scene to suit the latter paper, and then modified it a good deal to comply with the Thunderbolt's hint; I laughed boisterously in the dyer's vat scene, in accordance with the suggestion of the Thunderbolt, and then toned down toward the Battering-Ram's notion of excellence. That night my audience did not seem to know whether to applaud or not, and the result was that they came as near doing neither one thing nor the other as was possible. The next morning the Semi-Monthly Literary Bosh said my rendition of the character of 'Lord Blucher' was faultless—that it was stamped with the seal of inspiration; the Thunderbolt said I was an industrious, earnest and aspiring young dramatic student, but I was possessed of only ordinary merit, and could not hope to achieve more than a very moderate degree of success in my profession—and added that my engagement was at an end for the present; the Battering-Ram said I was a tolerably good stock-actor, but that the practice of managers in imposing such people as me upon the public as stars, was very reprehensible—and added that my engagement was at an end for the present; the Earthquake critic said he had seen worse actors, but not much worse—and added that my engagement was at an end for the present. So much for newspapers. The Monthly Magazine of Literature and Art (high authority,) remarked as follows: 'Mr. King Lear Macbeth commenced well, but the longer he played, the worse he played. His first performance of 'Lord Blucher' in Blood, Hair and the Ground Tore Up, may be entered upon the record as a remarkably fine piece of acting—but toward the last he got to making it the most extraordinary exhibition of theatrical lunacy we ever witnessed. In the scene with the 'Viscount,' which calls for sustained, vigorous, fiery declamation, his manner was an incomprehensible mixture of 'fever-heat' and 'zero'—to borrow the terms of the thermometer; in the dyer's vat scene he was alternately torn by spasms of mirth and oppressed by melancholy; in the death-bed scene his countenance exhibited profound grief one moment and blank vacancy in the next; in the love scene with his bride—but why particularize? throughout the play he was a mixture—a conglomeration—a miracle of indecision—an aimless, purposeless dramatic lunatic. In a word, his concluding performances of the part of 'Lord Blucher' were execrable. We simply assert this, but do not attempt to account for it—we know his first performance was excellence itself, but how that excellence so soon degenerated into the pitiable exhibition of last night, is beyond our ability to determine.' Now, Mr. Twain, you have the facts in this melancholy case—and any suggestion from you as to how I can please these critics will be gratefully received."

'Speak but another syllable, vile, hell-spawned miscreant, and thou diest the death of a ter-r-raitor!'

I can offer no suggestion, "Young Actor," except that the ordinary run of newspaper criticism will not do to depend upon. If you keep on trying to shape yourself by such models, you will go mad, eventually. Several of the critics you mention probably never saw you play an entire act through in their lives, and it is possible that the balance were no more competent to decide upon the merits of a dramatic performance than of a sermon. Do you note how unconcernedly and how pitilessly they lash you as soon as your engagement is ended? Sometimes those "criticisms" are written and in type before the curtain rises. Don't you remember that the New York Herald once came out with a column of criticism upon Edwin Forest's "Hamlet," when unfortunately the bill had been changed at the last moment, and Mr. Forrest played "Othello" instead of the play criticised? And only lately didn't the same paper publish an elaborate imaginary description of the funeral ceremonies of the late Jacob Little, unaware that the obsequies had been postponed for twenty-four hours? It is vastly funny, your "working yourself up" to suit the Thunderbolt, and "toning yourself down" to suit the Battering-Ram, and doing all sorts of similarly absurd things to please a lot of "critics" who had probably never seen you play at all, but who threw in a pinch of instruction or censure among their praise merely to give their "notices" a candid, impartial air. Don't bother yourself any more in that way. Pay no attention to the papers, but watch the audience. A silent crowd is damning censure—good, hearty, enthusiastic applause is a sure sign of able acting. It seems you played well at first—I think you had better go back and start over again at the point where you began to instruct yourself from the newspapers. I have often wondered, myself, when reading critiques in the papers, what would become of an actor if he tried to follow all the fearfully conflicting advice they contained.

Mary, Rincon School.—Sends a dainty little note, the contents whereof I take pleasure in printing, as follows, (suppressing, of course, certain expressions of kindness and encouragement which she intended for my eye alone): "Please spell and define geewhilikins for me."

Geewhillikins is an ejaculation or exclamation, and expresses surprise, astonishment, amazement, delight, admiration, disappointment, deprecation, disgust, sudden conviction, incredulity, joy, sorrow—well, it is capable of expressing pretty nearly any abrupt emotion that flashes through one's heart. For instance, I say to Jones. "Old Grimes is dead!" Jones knowing old Grimes was in good health the last time he heard from him, is surprised, and he naturally exclaims, "Geewhillikins! is that so?" In this case the word simply expresses surprise, mixed with either joy or sorrow, Grimes' affairs being nothing to Jones. I meet Morgan, and I say, "Well, I saw Johnson, and he refuses to pay that bill." Johnson exclaims, "Geewhillikins! is that so?" In this case the word expresses astonishment and disappointment, together with a considerable degree of irritation. I meet young Yank, and I observe, "The country is safe now—peace is declared!" Yank swings his hat and shouts, "Geewhillikins! is that so?"—which expresses surprise and extreme delight. I stumble on Thompson, and remark. "There was a tornado in Washoe yesterday which picked up a church in Virginia and blew it to Reed's Station, on the Carson river, eighteen miles away!" Thompson says, "Gee-e-e-whillikins!" with a falling inflection and strong emphasis on that portion of the word which I have italicized—thus, with discriminating judgment, imbuing the phrase with the nicest shades of amazement, wonder, and mild incredulity. Stephens, who is carrying home some eggs in his "hind-coat pocket," sits down on them and mashes them—exclaiming, as he rises, gingerly exploring the lacilaginous locality of his misfortune with his hand, "Gee-whillikins!"—with strong emphasis and falling inflection on the first syllable, and falling inflection on the last syllable also—thus expressing an extremity of grief and unmitigated disgust which no other word in our whole language is capable of conveying. That will do, I suppose—you cannot help understanding my definition, now, and neither will you fail to appreciate the extraordinary comprehensiveness of the word. We will now consider its orthography. You perceive that I spell it with two e's and two l's which I think is the proper method, though I confess the matter is open to argument. Different people spell it in different ways. Let us give a few examples:

"The horse 'raired' up with a furious neigh,
And over the hills he scoured away!
Mazeppa closed his despairing eye,
And murmured, 'Alas! and must I die!
'GEE-WHILIKINS!'"

[Byron's Mazeppa.

"Sir Hilary charged at Agincourt—!
Sooth 'twas an awful day!
And though in that old age of sport
The ruffiers of the camp and court
Had little time to pray,
'Tis said Sir Hilary muttered there
Four syllables by way of prayer:
'GEE-WHILLIKINS!'"

[Winthrop Mackworth Praed.

If the Gold Hill News or the American Flag say the above excerpts are misquotations, pay no attention to them—they are anything but good authority in matters of this kind. The Flag does not spell the word we are speaking of properly, either, in my opinion. I have in my mind a communication which I remember having seen in that paper the morning the result of the presidential election was made known. It possessed something of an exulting tone, and was addressed to a heavy gun among the Copperheads—the editor of the late Democratic Press, I think—and read as follows:

"BERIAH BROWN, ESQ.—Dear Sir: How are you now?
"Yours, truly, G. WHILLIKINS."

You will have to accept my definition, Mary, for want of a better. As far as the spelling is concerned, you must choose between Mr. Praed and myself on the one hand, and Lord Byron and the American Flag on the other, bearing in mind that the two last named authorities disagree, and that neither of them ever knew much about the matter in dispute, anyhow.

ANXIETY, S. F.—Need have no fear of General Halleck. There is no truth in the report that he will compel approaching maternity to take the oath of allegiance.—Golden Era.

Another impenetrable conundrum—or, to speak more properly, another fathomless riddle. I shall have to refer to Webster:

"APPROACHING, ppr. Drawing nearer; advancing toward."
"MATERNITY, n. The character or relation of a mother."

Consequently, "approaching maternity" means the condition of being about to become a mother. And according to the profound, the deep, the bottomless expounder who instructs "Anxiety" in my text, General Halleck "will not compel" that condition to "take the oath of allegiance." Any numscull could have told that—because how can an insensible, impalpable, invisible condition take an oath? That expounder comes as near being a "condition" as anybody, no doubt, but still he cannot take an oath in his character as a "condition;" he must take it simply in his character as a man. None but human beings can take the oath of allegiance under our constitution. But didn't you mean that women in the said condition would not be required to take the oath merely because they happened to be in that condition?—or didn't you mean that the woman wouldn't have to take it on behalf of her forthcoming progeny?—or didn't you mean that the forthcoming progeny wouldn't be required to take it itself, either before or immediately after it was born? Or, what in the very mischief did you mean?—what were you driving at?—what were you trying to ferry across the trackless ocean of your intellect? Now you had better stop this sort of thing, because it is becoming a very serious matter. If you keep it up, you will eventually get some of your subscribers so tangled up that they will seek relief from their troubles and perplexities in the grave of the suicide.

MARK TWAIN.—'Twas a burning shame to misquote Burns. The wretch who deliberately substituted italic for the original would, we believe, enjoy martyrdom. Previous thereto his eyes should be stuck full of exclamation points!—Golden Era.

Are you wool-gathering, or is it I? I have read that paragraph fourteen or fifteen times, very slowly and carefully, but I can't see that it means anything. Does the point lie in a darkly suggested pun upon "original would" (original wood?)—or in the "exclamation points?"—or in the bad grammar of the last sentence?—or in— Come, now—explain your ingenious little riddle, and don't go on badgering and bullyragging people in this mysterious way.

GOLD HILL NEWS.—This old scoundrel calls me an "old humbug from Dutch Nick's." Now this is not fair. It is highly improper for gentlemen of the press to descend to personalities, and I never permit myself to do it. However, as this abandoned outcast evidently meant his remark as complimentary, I take pleasure in so receiving it, in consideration of the fact that the fervent cordiality of his language fully makes up for its want of elegance.

GEN. SUTTER'S HOUSE BURNED.—A fire broke out at Hock Farm, the residence of General Sutter, June 21st, and destroyed the old pioneer's homestead, with all its contents and historical relics.

McKean Buchanan and daughter were the "stars" at the Kansas Theatre, Leavenworth, May 22d.

(For the Californian.)

ADORNMENT OF HOMES.

ORNAMENTAL plant-houses may be made of every size, from the little plant-cabinet to the large conservatory, their principal use, in this climate, being to protect the more tender varieties from the cold, chilling winds which prevail most of the year. Plant-cabinets may be constructed of any size and form, having a glazed roof and sides. As they are intended chiefly for preserving and exhibiting plants which have been grown elsewhere, they should be made as ornamental as consistent with the buildings adjoining. It matters but little what the aspect is, as plants suitable for the location can be selected, so as to form an interesting collection, and add to the interest and beauty of the place. Wherever such a structure is situated, and in whatever manner it may communicate with the house, one point in its construction should be always attended to, and that is, it should be as lofty from the floor to the roof of glass as are the rooms adjoining, or it will have an appearance of meanness. The form of the ground-plan must, of course, be determined in a great measure by situation. The roof should always be of glass, and the sides, also, when possible. Plants will thrive with all the sides opaque, if the house is as wide as the side walls are high, and the plants are so placed that the light may fall in direct lines on the upper surface of their leaves.

The sides, when of gluss, may be framed and glazed in any mode considered as in character with the windows of the house. Some of the sashes should be made moveable, so as to allow for ventilation. A plant-cabinet may be formed on the roof of some attached building, such as a kitchen, porch or piazza, or a porch or piazza may be arranged for such a purpose. In fact there is no situation where there is a door or window in the house, and where perpendicular light is attainable, in which a plant cabinet may not be formed.

However irregular the plan may be in point of outline, and however uneven the roof which is to form the floor, the situation is still eligible for a place of this kind, on the same principle that an irregular piece of ground is for laying out a flower garden in a picturesque manner. In the plant-cabinet, as in the flower-garden, the whole depends on the contrivances for displaying the flowers. The great art in arranging a plant-cabinet or conservatory consists in the disposition of wires and rods in the form of trelliswork, arches and arcades for climbers, and imitation of rockwork, banks or benches of stone for receiving bushy plants. The smallest, the most irregular, and apparently the most unfit situation for a plant-cabinet, may be rendered interesting by means of climbers on perpendicular props, no matter how irregularly placed, plants rising from groups of rockwork on the floor, and trailing plants suspended in pots or hanging baskets from the ceilings. In some cases the effect of a picturesque grove of climbers may be heightened by the introduction of a little stained glass in the roof; but this ought to be used most sparingly—no larger portion in one place than a star of a couple of inches in diameter, half a dozen of which will suffice for a roof containing upwards of one hundred square feet of glass. In the evenings, on particular occasions, three or four colored lamps may be introduced; but these should also be used very sparingly. Gas must never be admitted, as it is death to the plants. If it is desired to light up at night, so that the plants may be seen to advantage, gas or other lights may be arranged in the rooms adjoining, with strong reflectors, which will illuminate the whole place.

The size, form, style and manner of fitting up, and the collection of plants, may be entirely governed by the wants and tastes of the owner. They may be had by the occupant of the most humble cottage with a double glazed window, to the most magnificent structure which can be erected by the taste and means of the wealthiest. In this climate, where no fire heat is required to keep a collection in perfect health, it is a matter of surprise that more attention is not bestowed on such a means of indoor pleasure. There is scarcely a house but has a piazza, or porch, or an odd corner, but could be arranged for a plant-cabinet, by the expenditure of a small amount of money, and there is no addition to a dwelling which would afford the means of so much real pleasure and true enjoyment as this. The view from a dining-room and parlor window, of a collection of plants, with their bright green foliage and flowers, will suggest thousands of pleasant associations, and form a never-ending subject of contemplation, tempting us to study their habits and history and providing for their wants. The following is a description of a plant-cabinet, fitted up for a gentleman of London for the growth of ferns and orchids, which will give some idea of what may be accomplished by means and taste. The house is on a small scale, but it is a fairy scene, and attests the love with which the proprietor patronizes the delightful science of horticulture. Here there is no similarity to be traced with the erections which are generally seen, and on entering it the eye is at once relieved from that monotony which is so generally apparent. There is no class of plants with which a more marked effect could have been produced than those which were selected; one group growing naturally, for the most part, on the branches and trunks of trees, or attached to stones; the other clothing the cavernous recesses of the rocks with the tenderest and most graceful of vegetable drapery. The first glance of the interior is obtained through a doorway of colored glass that connects with a cavern which is very striking and beautiful: the walls are entirely rugged and irregular, and formed of vitrified brick and cement, built up so as to represent natural rock; on the projecting parts of these rugged walls and also in little hollow places formed for their reception, the plants are fixed, ferns being chiefly placed in these positions. In the centre is a group of rock-work forming an irregular arch over a pool of water. This rock-work is covered with plants much in the same way as the walls. The pool of water referred to is continued beneath the pathway on one side and carried onward into one of the deepest recesses. Gold-fish as well as aquatic plants are introduced into the water. The pathway—or at least the space left for walking—is as informal as the walls, rising and falling in connection with adjoining rock-work, thus affording each plant a suitable location for light and moisture. Much of the beauty and interest of plants are destroyed by the improper arrangement of them when cultivated under glass. Some are placed too high, so that only the under side of the foliage is seen instead of the upper surface; others are too far from the eye to exhibit their delicate beauty.

No one who may devote a little time and care to fitting up and stocking such a place will ever regret it, and the exercise of but ordinary judgment will insure success. Then you will have a scene that will repay you for your attentions, and that will every day suggest something green and sunny to the mind, and give to many a page of poetry a new and higher meaning than it ever presented before to your view. You will certainly read "The Daisy" of Burns, the "Wild Flowers" of Campbell, the "Woodside Sketches" of Bryant and Brainard with a new pleasure, and you will mark many a page in Spenser, Thomson, Clare and Carrington that had before escaped your observation.

"Look on this beautiful world, and read the truths
In her fair page; see, every season brings
New changes to her; with joyous living things
Swarms the wide air, 'tis full of joyous wings,
And myriads still are happy in the sleep
Of ocean's azure gulfs, and where he flings
The restless surge. Eternal love doth keep
In His complacent arms the earth, the air, the deep."
—Bryant.

IRIS.

THEATRICALS AT THE EAST.

THE New York Clipper of June 3d, announces the death of Harry Chapman, the celebrated low comedian, on Tuesday evening, May 23d, of dropsy. The evening before he died, he performed at the Old Bowery, taking the character of "Roberto," in Gale Breezeley. He leaves a wife and one child.

At Niblo's Garden, Fanchon was withdrawn on the 3d of June, after a long and successful run. It was succeeded by the drama of the Pearl of Savoy, exhibiting Maggie Mitchell in a new character.

Fanny Herring and her dogs are still the rage at the Old Bowery. Fair houses greet her performances with great applause.

The Seven Daughters of Satan was the piece announced at the Broadway Theatre, May 29th. The grand Zouave Drill, performed by twenty blooming and blushing damsels; singing, dancing and the brilliant scene of the "Birth of the Butterfly," constitute the principal attractions in the play.

At Wood's Minstrels, a new play entitled Greenbakina, has succeeded Petroliamania. It is said to be a greater success than the latter. W. D. Corrister, formerly of San Francisco is engaged here.

Miss Lucie Deane appeared for the first time at Mrs. John Wood's Olympic, in the petite comedy of Perfection. A fair house greeted her debut.

The San Francisco Minstrels, consisting of Birch, Backus, Wambold, Bernard and Shattuck, are meeting with great success in New York. Birch's acting in the "Police Court," and Backus' imitations, are applauded nightly by delighted and crowded audiences. May they continue "to draw" from the music-loving public of New York, as they did in California.

At Grover's Theatre, Washington, D. C., Uncle Tom's Cabin was being played with a change of "Uncle Tom" every week. On Monday evening, May 22d, Little Katie Bakor took a benefit, performing "Eva" in Uncle Tom's Cabin. At the end of the piece she was brought before the curtain and received a shower of bouquets; she was also presented with a silver salver. May 29th was announced as the benefit of the Lincoln Monument Fund.

At the old Washington Theatre, Washington, D. C., Mrs. Major Pauline Cushman and Mr. James M. Ward, have met with a decided success. They have been performing a variety of plays. The Union Scout, or, Pauline of the Cumberland, a drama founded on Mrs. C.'s military career, is their principal card.

GOING TO SLEEP.

I.

THE light is fading down the sky,
The shadows grow and multiply,
I hear the thrush's evening song,
But I have borne with toil and wrong,
So late, so late!
Grim dreams my drowsy senses charm—
So, darling, kiss my eyelids down!

II.

My life's brief Spring went wretchedly,
My Summer ended fruitlessly;
I learned to hunger, strive, and wait,
I found you, love, oh, happy fate!
So late, so late!
Now all my fields are turning brown,
So, darling, kiss my eyelids down!

III.

Oh, blessed sleep! oh, perfect rest!
Thus pillowed on your faithful breast;
Nor life nor death is wholly drear,
O tender heart, since you are here,
So dear, so dear.
Sweet love, my soul's sufficient crown!
Now, darling, kiss my eyelids down!

[Miss Atkins (Florence Percy.)

A NEW PHASE OF THE OLD STORY.

WE have it on such high authority that "there is nothing new under the sun," that unless the subject was one on which I had thought a great deal, I should hesitate to own my conviction that the saying—if not utterly unfounded—is only to be interpreted in the most general way. Indeed, it has been a melancholy satisfaction to me in my very severe trial, to think that my own case is probably quite without a precedent; and though it was at first an additional thorn that none, even of my most sympathizing friends, ever listened to my story without smiling, yet now I can watch their polite attempt to keep their features straight with a grin of satisfaction, for I read in every curve of the mouth an additional evidence that I have not grieved as men grieve commonly, and that my love, like others in never running smooth, has at least chosen a new country, and led me along a rough road, which no one, perhaps, has ever explored before me.

My grandfather was an old-fashioned country squire, whose first wife had died at the birth of their second child—my mother. In his old age he took it into his head to marry a second time; and my cousin—of whom I knew little more than that he had been put into the Guards as heir to the property, and used to snub me when we met as boys—took upon himself to express so decided an opinion on the whole affair, that hardly a year afterward a formal letter which I received in India, announcing my grandfather's death, went on to say that, in virtue of a will made immediately after an interview with his elder grandson, I was the owner of Surneaux Hall and all his property, subject only to a few trifling deductions, including a legacy of £100 for my cousin, and a jointure of £500 a year to his young widow of twenty-two. When the news reached me I was at one of the best pig-sticking stations in Bengal; and as there was no immediate necessity for my return, I determined not to hurry, but enjoy as much as possible the change in my fortunes. The tiger skin on which my feet are resting as I write, and the stuffed birds which stand on the top of the book case opposite me, are some of the trophies which remind me of the many pleasant days I spent in the next six months. I did not leave India for more than six months after I had received the news of the old squire's death, when I joined a friend from England on a hunting expedition to the Carpathians, which proved a failure; for we saw nothing larger than a stray deer, and were more than once nearly starved. I left him as soon as we got into inhabited regions again, and after a very leisurely journey through Greece and Italy, stopping a week at one place and a month at another, found myself sitting one fine evening in October, 1858, in an easy chair on the balcony at the Hotel Biron, Ville Neuve, looking out on the still waters of the lake of Geneva. I had had knocking about enough of late. Five days in the Carpathians, with nothing but a measly pig for the whole party to eat, had been a sickener, and beneath the soft influences of the setting sun, and gentle breeze from the lake, I was getting very sentimental, and found myself painting charming pictures of peaceful domestic evenings in the old drawing-room at Surneaux, with a graceful wife on the opposite side of the fire, and model babies up-stairs, and my old school friend, with the poor girl he had been hopelessly engaged to for the last six years in the snug rectory at the bottom of the park. There are, if what doctors tell us is true, certain conditions of the body which render a person more than usually liable to catch any infectious disorder which may be flying about, and there are seasons in every man's life when he is even more helplessly predisposed to fall in love on the slightest provocation. A general benevolence and unwonted appreciation of the beauties of nature are probably two of the earliest symptoms of the state, and I can now see that my perfect enjoyment as I watched the changing colors on the mountains, as the sun set that evening, and the unusual anxiety I felt for the happiness and welfare of the world at large, would, had I been wise, have been enough to warn me that my frame of mind was very dangerous. I remember everything that night now, as if it were only yesterday—the very order in which the stars came out, as the darkness closed in. The blazing comet, curving almost from the Alps, on the left, to the distant mountains on the other side of the lake and the perfect reflections in the still black water below. If I shut my eyes, I can still see it all just as it was. I got up and wandered down to the pier, and as I leant over the railing, the third symptom, a longing melancholy, began to creep over me. It was a heavenly night. Presently the quiet reflection of the comet broke up, and spread into two broad dancing lines of light, as the red and green lamp of a steamer came in sight, and soon the vessel splashing up, woke me from my reverie.

There were not many passengers so late in the season. Three tourists in dirty coats with the regulation knapsacks and alpenstocks, a dozen working men carrying their own atmosphere of garlic with them, a few poor women, and a sprightly French maid, in bustling anxiety for a pile of boxes, and last, her slight young English mistress, dressed in black. One might as well try to paint the scent of a violet as to convey in words any notion of the charms of the sweet face I gazed into, as she stepped out of the boat. Comet, lake, mountains, all were forgotten in an instant in the presence of her higher beauty; and I slept that night—if sleep it were—with the "thank you" which rewarded me as I stooped to pick up her shawl still sounding in my ears, and every nerve fluttering from the contact with her small hand.

It would be sacrilegious to tell all the incidents of the next few days. We met and talked at the table d'hote. She was going to Old Chillon; I had been there twice, but could not leave without another visit. She was curious to explore the salt-mines at Bex; but could not go alone. Acquaintances formed under such circumstances soon ripen into friendships; and friendships easily grow into something more. She was a young widow (Mrs. Smith was her name;) that was all I knew, or cared to know; but long before I left the dear hotel, there was no concealing it, I was over head and ears in love. But what of that? I was twenty-five (a year at least older than she,) the owner of a fine estate; and with all my diffidence felt sure that my presence and attentions were not unpleasant to her.

Never was lover more happy than I, as I said "Good by!" and started off to meet a friend on business in Paris, with a warm invitation to call on her in the Rue ——, where she hoped to arrive very soon after me, on her way home.

* * * * * * * * *

Madame was fatigued with the journey, and was lying down, I learned from Suzette when the tedious days were over, and the time had come for me to know my fate. The absence had decided me, and my mind was quite made up, that life without her would be worthless.

"Would monsieur sit down on the sofa, and madame should know who had called?" said the little woman, as she frisked out of the room, with an arch look over her shoulder, which made me feel hot.

The door opened, and she came softly in. I jumped up and kicked my hat over, blushed, and felt my hand get hot and damp as I held it out.

"Oh, Mr. Jones, it is very good of you to call. I thought you would have been sure to have gone to England, or forgotten all about us. Sit down here, and let me tell you all about those horrid railway people."

I sympathized with her, and wished I had been there, of course as I listened to the story of a trunk which was nearly being put on the wrong train; and as the conversation flagged, felt my forehead getting hotter still (Paris was so close!) I think she guessed why I twiddled my hat and brushed it the wrong way; for she looked shy too, but more beautiful than ever. It was getting painful; I twiddled my hat harder than ever. I don't believe I should ever have spoken another word, but she recovered her presence of mind first, and began again.

"Oh! you must let me show you my photographs; they are so lovely; I got them in Geneva. Here is dear old Dent de Midi. There is one somewhere of the funny old convent we went together to see on the other side of the Rhone, on your last day. You remember my slipping as we were clambering up on to the marble rock behind the garden, to peep at the nuns? You don't know how bad my ankle was afterwards. I did not get out at all the day you went, and could not even come down to dinner. It is so horrid and lonely being laid up in an inn, with no one to care for you. I did get so low-spirited. I did not know a bit how lame I was, till I tried to go up stairs again after you had gone."

I turned over the photogrphs, and stared blindly at them wrong way upwards, as she paused. It must come sooner or later, I thought. She dropped her eyes, and looked frightened, as I got up, and blurted out, "Perhaps we may never see one another again."

Her breath came quickly, and she looked up timidly, and smiled. I was reckless now, and ran on.

"I can't go to England without telling you what I—I—I * * * No, no! don't say anything yet. I never told you I could not all that happy time—that I am on my way home to take possession of my place in Shropshire. I want—I—I—"

I could not say another word; all my courage was gone, and I stood there more sheepish than ever. She had come to the rescue again, and, looking up at me with her big eyes, said:

"You come from Shropshire? How extraordinary that I should never have found that out before! I'm Shropshire, too. I wonder whether you are anywhere near my dear old home, Surneaux?"

* * * * * * * * *

"Oh dear, oh dear! what is the matter?—Are you ill?—Shall I ring? Oh, do speak! Don't look so!—for my sake. Oh!"

* * * * * * * * *

What was the matter? Only my chest had been bulged in, and driven up into my mouth—that was all. What was the matter?

Her dear old home Surneaux! Good heavens! Yes, my mother's name—my grandfather's—was Smith!

Her dear old home Surneaux! Then my angel was the old man's baby wife I had heard so much of!

Her dear old home Surneaux! Good heavens! And a man may not marry his grandmother! We were both calmer soon, and I said, "Let me kiss you, grandmamma."

I doubt whether grandmother was ever more touched at a grandson's affection than she was as I threw my arms round her; and (must it be told?) cried like a baby. It was not manly I dare say; but no one saw it but she and Suzette, who came in without knocking, and was going to throw a jug of water over us; but I saw her in time.

My old tried friend has the rectory at the bottom of the park, and I go there every day; for it does me good to see his rosy wife, and romp with his little girl.

There is no nursery at Surneaux.

I am a deputy-lieutenant, and man of note in the country; but the chair opposite mine in the old drawing-room is never used except when grandmamma is with me.

She often comes; but we never speak of the happy days in Switzerland, and neither of us has been there since.

[P. S. Since writing this, grandmamma has come down with her younger sister. She is very agreeable; and, barring the weeds, reminds me much of what G. M. was when we first met.]

LIFE is indeed the strangest tragedy that can be found. A proof of it is the following account of the career of a singer whose name was Hammermeister. He was the first tenor of the then celebrated opera at Leipzig, at the time when Marschner's opera, The Templar and the Jewess, was first performed, in 1830. Marschner owed a great deal of the success of his work to the splendid performance of the part of the "Templar" by Hammermeister. The young and handsome tenor was almost worshiped by the ladies of the city, and it was not astonishing that at every performance in which he appeared, the house was crammed. It even went so far that a jealous man and husband, in a daily paper, warned his fellow beings not to allow their wives to go to the opera, when Hammermeister sang in the above-named opera. Hammermeister disappeared from Leipzig, where he had a high salary. He was not very much liked by his colleagues, because he possessed a proud and domineering character, and hardly condescended to speak to any of them. He wasted a great deal of money in gloves and perfumery, smoked the best cigars and was a kind of dandy. Having lost his voice, and full of shame and false pride, he crossed the ocean and came to America. In New York he lived and supported himself by selling cheap cigars in bar-rooms and in the streets. A gentleman who was sitting in a hotel, was accosted by a haggard and poor old man, who tried to sell some of his wares. The gentleman recognized Hammermeister, and involuntarily uttered his name. The old man covered his face with his hand, commenced to cry and ran out. He had been often with the gentleman to the opera balls in Leipzig, where champagne was his only drink. Hammermeister died in 1860 in a tenement house in New York, nursed by a poor mechanic. He had lost his hearing and was paralyzed. His pride never left him, and he refused every kind of help which was offered to him.

VOLTAIRE said: "The reputation of Dante will be continually greater and greater, because there is nobody now that reads him. This sentiment must be a source of great consolation to many of our modern poets, who have already lived to see themselves arrive at this point of greatness.

THEODORE HOOK once said to a man at whose table a publisher got very drunk: "Why, you appear to have emptied your wine cellar into our bookseller."

PEPITA, THE HEROINE.

IN the autumn of 1832, the Marquis de Bevenuecho, his daughter Franeisea, Don Cæsar, his intended son-in-law, Pepita, Franeisea's maid, and two male servants, occupied one of those huge coaches drawn by ten mules which are frequently to be met with on the road from Mexico to Vera Cruz. The destination of the party was Paris; the marquis was a widower, and Francisea was his only child. While the lumbering vehicle in which they started on their journey was deseending one of the roughest defiles of the Pinol, a violent jerk put its construction to so severe a test as to threaten its entire ruin, unless repairs were immediately made. What was to be done? The coachman informed the travellers that they could reach, at a short distance from the spot, a posada, which, though not much frequented, and greatly dilapidated, was still habitable, and a place where they could pass the night. This plan was accordingly adopted, and the party, bemoaning their misfortune, reached the posada at the moment of sunset. It was a desolate habitation, surrounded by broken walls, ruined towers, and gloomy pines, which gave it the air of a chateau of romance. The marquis and his family took possession of a large chamber, Pepita rested as well as she could in a closet, and the servants, wrapped up in their cloaks, slept just where sleep happened to overtake them.

The heroine of our tale, Pepita, had some suspicions that all was not right. In passing before a grated window, which opened upon the court, she fancied she had caught a glimpse of two flashing eyes, which instantly disappeared: and this incident was sufficient to excite her apprehensions. She retired, however, into her cell, and placing her mantle under her head for a pillow, was about to close her eyes, when, casting them to the ceiling of her little dormitory, she remarked a ray of light glimmering through the chinks of the wooden shutter. Using the utmost precaution, she raised herself upon a table, and half withdrawing a curtain which hung before a window, she saw two men sitting near a table, their faces turned from her, and lighted by a lamp which burned in the corner of the apartment. Pepita had enough of Spanish blood in her veins to give her great pretensions amongst her compatriots. She was intelligent, faithful, courageous, and as resolute as the maid of Saragossa.

With a glance she took note of all things in the chamber. It was impossible to mistake the profession of the men, for Pepita saw before them an open chest, which she recognized as belonging to the marquis, and from which the bandits had drawn out the provisions and plate it contained. Both appeared to have done honor to the marquis' wine, and were so much intoxicated that she felt no apprehension of being detected by them. Continuing to observe their movements with anxiety, she arranged the plan of operations which she determined to pursue. For a moment she felt herself chilled by terror, when the words which she heard informed her that the elder of the two was the famous Capador himself. She remembered at once that he was generally described as richly clothed, and carrying an axe; and the man before her had an axe resting between his legs, and wore a magnificently embroidered silk dress.

Pepita learned, or rather half guessed, from their broken conversation, that the band of which they were the leaders awaited in the forest for the signal which was to recall them; that this signal was to be given by a hunting-horn which she noticed in the apartment: and that, upon their junction, the travellers were to be attacked. With joy she saw the wine of the marquis was gradually gaining the mastery over them; and, soon after, observing them buried in profound slumber, she quitted her cell, descended into the court, found out the door of the robbers' chamber, and opening it softly, made good her entry with admirable courage and presence of mind. She gained possession of the cloak, hat, and well-known hatchet of the chief, and also of the hunting-horn, and contrived to effect her retreat without accident. She now fastened the doors of the bandits' apartment with the bolts which are often placed outside of the doors of Mexican houses, then flung over her the cloak of the brigand, placed his hat upon her head, and with the hatchet and hunting-horn in her hands, sallied from the court. The night was utterly dark. She reached the border of the pine-wood, and drawing a few low tones from the horn, was immediately answered by a prolonged whistle. A band of ten men issued from the woods; she retreated before them toward the house, contriving, with much address, to let herself be seen no more distinctly than was necessary to enable the robbers to follow her. When they were sufficiently near, she contrived to exhibit the glare of the axe; and enjoining silence with the motion of her hand, led the band into the court. In obedience to her sign, they entered silently into a large chamber, and closing the door upon them, she drew the bolts so gently that the bandits had no suspicion that they were imprisoned.

Then, without a moment's delay, the intrepid Pepita ran to the apartment of the marquis, and related to him the whole of her proceedings. Guided by the advice of Pepita, the marquis awakened Don Cæsar, who, mounted on one of the best mules, set off instantly for Acayete, to procure the assistance of a detachment of cavalry stationed in that village.

The marquis armed the two domestics, and, listening at the door of the apartment where the two chiefs were confined, ascertained that they had awakened, and were endeavoring to effect their escape. The scene now became one of intense anxiety. Shortly, all in the building were roused, and a confusion of voices arose on all sides. Gomez (the chief) and his lieutenant, uttered shouts of rage, and their appeals were answered by their companions as they exerted themselves to break the doors of their prison. The marquis, Pepita, and the servants, shouted likewise in every tone they could assume, threatening with death the first who should offer himself to their aim, and affecting to present a force far beyond their actual number. But we must leave the posada and its inhabitants for a moment to follow the track of Don Cæsar.

This young man, one of the most brilliant among the cavaliers of Mexico, although skilful in the management of a well-trained steed, was but little accustomed to the government of a mule. He was in despair at the slowness of his progress, and overwhelmed with the most fearful presages. What would become of his friends—above all, of his betrothed, the pretty Franeisea—if the brigands should escape from their confinement before his return? The day began to break before he could gain the environs of Acayete, but great was his joy when his ears were assailed by the bells of a conducta. Don Cæsar presented himself immediately before the commanding officer, told his story in a few words, and implored assistance. The officer and his men set off with him towards the hills, with all the rapidity the wild road would permit. Their expedition was not a little increased by the hope of capturing Gomez, on whose head a price was set, and who had hitherto baffled all the schemes laid to surprise him.

During this time, affairs at the posada had reached their most critical point. The robbers had succeeded in shattering the door of the prison so far that it was scarcely held by its hinges. Gomez and his lieutenant had taken the same course, and there was every prospect that the brigands would overcome all the obstacles which had opposed their liberation, when Pepita, armed with a pistol, and concealed behind a pillar in the court, took successful aim at the head of a brigand which showed through the opening. This incident daunted the robbers. It was evident that one of their leaders had fallen, from the deep silence that prevailed. Convinced, however, that they had no time to lose, they once more returned to their attack. The door was on the point of yielding to their blows, when Pepita caught the sound of the galloping of horses on the road from Acayete. Deliverance was now sure. The noise of horses and arms resounded soon in front of the posada, and before Don Cæsar had embraced Franeisea, the soldiers had made themselves unresisted masters of the band of robbers.

But it remained to secure Gomez and his lieutenant. From the desperate character of the man, it was not supposed he would allow himself to be taken without resistance. It was proposed by some to force the door and enter in a body, while others desired to try the effect of a parley. This latter advice was followed, it being wished, above all things, to deliver him into the hands of the Mexican authorities.

"Open the door to a lieutenant of the republic," cried the commanding officer; for it was found on withdrawing the outer bolts, that the door was fastened within.

No answer was given.

At this moment the discharge of a pistol resounded from the interior. It was follwed by the faint cry of a woman, which seemed to issue from the apartment where the marquis had passed the night. All hastened in an instant in that direction, and in her closet they found the intrepid Pepita bathed in her own blood. But when they approached her, she had strength to point with her finger to the little window. The officer raised his eyes, and perceived there Gomez and his lieutenant, the former armed with a sword, and the latter reloading his pistol. In an instant he fired on the lieutenant, who fell; and, regaining the corridor with his soldiers, the door of the chamber was at once forced. Gomez fought with savage desperation, but was at length secured.

All eyes were now turned towards the intrepid Pepita, and they learned from herself the cause of the event which had nearly proved fatal to her. Luckily her wound was slight, though it had bled profusely; nor was it long before she was able to resume her accustomed duties.

The journey of the marquis was postponed for a time, and the party returned to Mexico. The reward offered for the capture of Gomez was unanimously adjudged to Pepita, who became the object of universal interest. Her intrepidity had so strongly excited the imagination of the young officer commanding the guard, that she became his bride before the end of the year; and the marquis, considering her as the savior of his family, secured to her a considerable pension during life.

THE VALUE OF A CHEER.—During the fierce struggle in the Pyrenees in 1813, General Picton, in command of a large British and Spanish force, yielding before Marshal Soult and much superior numbers, fell back to Huerta.

Wellington, who was with Hill's division, some dozen miles away, was no sooner made aware of Picton's retreat than he mounted his horse, and accompanied only by Lord Fitzroy Somerset (the late Lord Raglan) rode swiftly towards Huerta. Hill's division was to follow with all possible speed. Arrived at the bridge of Sonneras, the Duke's eagle glance instantly detecting Picton's faulty dispositions, saw that if time could not be gained a terrible disaster would ensue. Dismounting, he wrote, on the parapet of the bridge, exact directions, changing the direction of Hill's approach, with which order Fitzroy Somerset galloped off at utmost speed.

So far so well. But time—time! is the essential condition of success; and how to prevent Soult from attacking till that time is gained, the vital problem—which was solved by a device unmentioned in any book that treats of strategy or tactics. The French and Anglo-Spanish armies, the reader will understand, were in immediate presence of each other; the French columns of attack were formed, and only awaiting the signal to advance in overwhelming numbers against Picton's loosely formed army. Wellington, through his field-glass, could see Soult himself, amidst a brilliant staff, overlooking and controling the movements of his troops, and knew perfectly well that in the eyes of that formidable soldier there was glittering the fire of prophetic triumph. That prophetic aspiration, Duke of Dalmatia, will not be realized, and the reason why it will not is, that a slight, pale man, wearing a glazed cocked hat, whom you and your brilliant staff do not notice, is galloping up in front of the Thirty-Sixth English regiment. The slight, pale horseman waves the the glazed cocked hat; the waver is recognized by the Thirty-Sixth, and instantly bursts forth the stern, triumphant cheer with which the British soldier hails battle and proclaims victory. Those exultant shouts are taken up and reverberate along the whole extent of Picton's line. Wellington, first ordering an English regiment to the support of a Spanish corps already smartly engaged, says, musingly, as if addressing himself, but in the hearing of several officers—"Soult yonder is a skilful but cautious commander, and will not attack in force till he has ascertained the meaning of these cheers. This will give time for the sixth division to come up, and I shall beat him." Soult, naturally supposing those thundering cheers announced the arrival of large additional forces, did not attack till too late. The sixth division had joined; and the French marshal, instead of an assured victory, met with a bloody repulse. Much virtue is in a fierce multitudinous hurrah! well-timed.

THE following incident copied from the New York World, May 22d, offers some suggestions that are suited to this latitude:

"The damage occasioned by the fire at Niblo's Garden on Sunday evening, did not occasion a cessation of the regular performances, although all the scenery and wardrobe of the establishment, except that which is employed in the production of Fanchon every night, was destroyed. Had the fire occurred on any night other than that of Sunday, we fear that a record of terrible accidents would have resulted. The authorities ought, without further delay, to take measures to prevent the blockading of the aisles of theatres during performances. It is the custom at Niblo's, as well as at other play-houses, to fill the passages of the parquet and dress circle with camp-stools, which are placed at the disposal of late comers for a specific fee. Should an alarm of fire occur at any time when the theatre is so packed with spectators, nothing could prevent the killing or maiming of some persons present. It is especially fortunate for Mr. Wheatley that the late fire took place on the only evening of the week when the establishment is not open to the public. Perhaps so narrow an escape will occasion an alteration in the customs of theatrical managers; if so, well and good. If not, let the police be authorized to regulate the matter.

THE NEGRO.—In an editorial upon the negro the New York Herald says: "It is wise to impress upon the negro, very distinctly, that he cannot live in idleness, and it is good for all to agree that he must depend upon his labor. But it is not enough to do this. We do not believe that the negro appreciates the necessity that he should labor, or that he can be induced very easily to go on with the same life that he has hitherto led, seeing practically but little difference between the slavery he hated and the liberty he longed for. It will not do to tell him that he must. It will need the calmest judgment and the nicest discretion to devise a system of labor or apprenticeship that shall encourage the negro to labor and the white man to employ him. Upon the wisdom with which such system is adapted to the wants of the case, it will entirely depend whether or not the South shall become a desolate wilderness and the negro race a great national difficulty. The absolute natural extermination of the race, too, depends upon this; and this, therefore, is the real field of labor for all those philanthropists who have cried out for justice to the negro."

NOTICE

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lob, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1865.

THE COMING HOLIDAY.

BEFORE our next issue, that anniversary familiarly known as "the Fourth," will have passed. Although the occasion is doubly endeared to us by victory, and the triumphant close of our second struggle for liberty on this continent, we can reasonably predict the details, ceremonies and customs, which, having marked this day in times past, will inevitably distinguish the coming anniversary. For twenty-four hours a roar of cannon and small arms will be kept up on that portion of the American continent over which our mythical eagle is supposed to hover, and that part of the earth's surface will probably present a smoky and remarkably blurred appearance to the astronomers of distant planets. The bird of freedom will be apostrophized in every conceivable form that opportunity may offer, and the old flag which we have borne so nobly through battle and siege, will be placed in rhetorical situations of even greater peril and perplexity. A great many vapidities will be uttered, a great many of those political phrases and formulas which, in the history of all countries, gradually come to take the place of ideas, will be promulgated with an air of surpassing freshness and novelty. Orators will rise to remarkable altitudes like sky-rockets, solely by the "fiery gushing" of what Mr. Tupper has practically termed the "vexed bowels of their souls." It is, perhaps, in obedience to some unknown law of compensation that intervals like these must inevitably recur in the history of all nations, when enthusiasm takes precedence of reason, and expression is confined to crackers, small arms, cannon and huzzaing. We cannot be sufficiently grateful that Mr. John Counese is not, as far as we are aware, called upon to speak on this occasion. Judging from his recent efforts at a sword presentation to General Hooker, we might look for alarming results. If he can on such slight provocation as the mere suggestion of a peril encountered by California from the slave power, portray her as a virgin struggling in the arms of a libertine, we may reasonably shrink from encountering his peculiar imagery excited by a more extended review of the rebellion.

Yet there is much reason for quiet and rational satisfaction, for intelligent and well-founded gratulation in the reflections excited by this year's anniversary. It is assuredly something to hear the Declaration of Independence read without feeling its rhetorical flourishes, in regard to freedom and equality for all men, to be a mere trick of the pen and utterly ignored by the laws of our country. It is pleasant to learn from that same remarkable document that the right, "accorded all men, to the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness" does not now also extend to the "pursuit" of fugitive slaves. We can pardon the enthusiasm of the unfledged orator who somewhere or other is predestined to declare on the coming anniversary that "we are the greatest people on the face of the earth," when we reflect upon the crisis through which we have passed during the last five years and yet preserved our national unity, integrity and honor. With genuine Yankee conceit we can excuse the statement that "we can whip all creation" when we remember that we have triumphed over ourselves. In the light of this consideration the glory of the principles evolved through the rebellion is greater than the glory of those, the anniversary of whose enunciation we are soon to celebrate. In the colonial struggle we stood apart by sympathy, locality and interest from our enemies. It was to some extent a foreign war. Our latest civil war, in proportion as it approached so nearly that terrible prophecy of holy writ, when brother is to be armed against brother, and son against father, has involved infinitely more sacrifice, and has been followed by sublimer results. That this is in some way recognized by the people, and that an extraordinary importance is given to the coming anniversary, we have certain testimony in the magnitude of the preparations for its proper celebration.

We do not believe in dwelling too much upon the sacrifices of the past, but as there will be no place in the impressive pageant and long procession of Tuesday next, for those who have fallen in the strife, it will be well for us to make good the omission by keeping them in mind, even if the reflection somewhat tempers and subdues our enthusiasm. We have passed not unscathed through a fiery ordeal, and the whole country is undulating with the graves of its patriot children. If these serve us mementos of our unyielding faith, through sore trial, in freedom and the right; if they shall prove sacred altars over which the hands of North and South can be struck again in fraternal fellowship, we shall find in their mute eloquence something that surpasses the highest flight of the orator of the day—in their humble presence a more suggestive spectacle than the grandest pageant.

PERILS OF THE THEATRE.

WE are of those who strive to think the Present is better than the Past, and that we have made great progress in all that relates to the welfare and happiness of man. Nevertheless, at times we receive decided set-backs. The Pope's Encyclical, the Assassination of the President, Alison's Pamphlet, Southern ideas—these, and such as these are cruel buffets which cause us even in our sanguine mood to feel somewhat disheartened. But the most blinding, staggering blow dealt us for many a long year comes from the fist of the Rev. W. C. Huntingdon, of Rochester, New York. This godly man has shot out his left with such tremendous, crashing force as to knock us clean out of the nineteenth and into the ninth century.

In reading his sermon we feel that Huntingdon is but a corruption for "Hunt-them-Down," a race directly related to "Put-them-to-the-Sword" and "Smite-them Hip-and-Thigh." These latter were burning and shining lights in the Scotch kirk centuries ago, and "Hunt-them-Down" cannot but be a great gas-light of grace in the Rochester synagogue of to-day.

When not only America, but the entire civilized world was plunged into the deepest grief at the loss of so noble and good a man as President Lincoln—grief only equaled by the indignation felt everywhere at a crime so atrocious as that which bereft him of life—the Rev. W. C. Huntingdon, of Rochester, New York, comes forward and takes the following comprehensive view of the whole melancholy, terrible affair. To use the Calvinistic style, he seeks to "improve the occasion," by uttering the most bigoted sentiment we have ever had the misfortune to meet with, as the following extract will show:

"True, there is one item in this history over which we wish a veil of secrecy could have been drawn. Our lamented chief magistrate was shot in a theatre. It is inexpressibly to be regretted that he was at a theatre. A theatre is a place in which no one would wish to die. He might have been murdered that night if he had not been at a theatre, but if he had not saved his life by being elsewhere, he would have saved the Christian public the double shock of not only knowing that their President was dead, but that he fell where they would have wept to have seen their sons alive. He was the head of the nation; the eyes of the civilized world were upon him; thousand of our youth were looking upon him as their exemplar. and he should not have gone to the theatre. We will admit that he may have never raised the question of duty in his mind upon that point; we know that, wise and experienced as he was, he was a "young convert" in religion. But we should be unjust to truth if we did not say that our chief magistrate had no possible business in a theatre. He was the "minister of God." What a place is a theatre for God's ministers? That he went there consciously sinning we do not believe, and no man has a right to say but that his presence there was a lamentable infraction of the proprieties, and a perversion of the influence of his high position, we judge to be quite certain.

If proof was needed it is intimated in the fact that his murderer was a vagabond tragedian, whose preparation for crime had been his education in the theatre. There are many villainous men in the country who had hated the President and wished him dead, but when the agent was found who could plan and execute the deed of blood, to express the guilt of which no language will ever furnish a phraseology, the volunteer was a theatrical performer. It took John Wilkes Booth to murder President Abraham Lincoln. An imagination educated to tragedy can put its scenes in practice with but a short step in advance. All crimes are first committed in thought, and he whose thoughts are continually fed with criminal scenes belies himself if he does not commit the deeds. Towards this, every lesson in the contemptible hypocrisies of stage-playing tends, and the crime of Booth, by which he outranks the most infamous regicide of history, is but the fruits of his theatrical life."

Of course we do not propose to do battle against this massive saint. In an encounter with this gigantic "Great Heart" we feel confident that we should be worsted—as it were, ground 'twixt the upper and nether millstone. We could advance no reasoning which would serve to convince his divinely-illumined mind that he was wrong in the slightest degree. We could not ask him to take a common sense view of the matter, since, as has been well said, common sense is very properly banished from all discussions of this character. We might urge that notwithstanding the theatre was but an indifferent place to die in, it was, on the whole, tolerable enough to live in. We could say, if no places were to be entered except such as would prove particularly choice to die in, we should be driven out of the counting house, the court room, the rail car, the ferry boat, the street. All this would aid nothing with those who take this graveyard survey of the world and all that is therein. Somehow or other the ministerial argument against the theatre, the ball room, etc., always gets round to "these are not places to die in." This triumphant answer is supposed to settle the controversy beyond dispute, and it is deemed impious to attempt even to reply to it.

So, too, we might fairly argue that history and statistics do not bear out the assertion that stage-players are assassins, either by nature or by nurture. That lawyers, merchants, bankers figure in a greater degree in the annals of crime than do players. In short, that an actor in a theatre is no more to be feared than a clerk in a silk shop, or a waiter in an ice cream saloon. Yet history, statistics, every day experience, would be quietly ignored by this grim theologian as unworthy of mention or thought, save by those in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity. Under such circumstances it is the part of wisdom to remain silent. Mr. Huntingdon, with a different application, will very probably echo our words: "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone."

It were worth while, however, if this voice crying from a Rochester wilderness be that of a true prophet, to seriously consider in what peril we stand. The San Francisco public is decidedly a play-going public. We fear it must be admitted that Maguire does not pipe unto us and we not dance, nor Bianchi mourn and we not lament. We all remember how we rushed to the Kenns. Considering the many years they had been engaged in a profession, "every lesson" of which tends to assassination; considering, too, the antecedents and surroundings of the troupe, the fathers of some, stage-players before them, as the children of others will doubtless be after them, it is surprising, in the language of the honest Irishman, that we did not awake some fine morning and find ourselves murdered in our beds. What risk we now run from the elegant and versatile Wheatleigh, what danger we brave in hearing Sconcia or Brambilla, it is impossible with exactness to state, though something fearful beyond doubt. Barilli is "Mephistopheles," not only in Faust, but in fact; and the rich notes of the great contralto now in our midst are perhaps, after all, the hoarse croakings of the raven 'neath the battlements of Zion.

It may somewhat calm our fears to remember that men of the Huntingdon stamp often threaten when they cannot convince, and seek to alarm when they fail to persuade. It is quite as orthodox in America as in China, to kindle some lurid flame and to pound some dreadful gong, to frighten us from evil and save us from sin. This scare-crow, which our preacher has created, may recall the footsteps of the Rochester flock, which perhaps of late have too often strayed into these Temples of Death.

But to all this there is more than that which is ludicrous; there is that which is inexpressibly sad. And while with justice we may be wroth at such abominable denunciation of theatrical art, we ought not to fail in compassion for those who indulge in such sombre belief. It is bad enough to know that a man like Huntingdon—with mind so narrow and culture so mean—exists; but far worse to acknowledge that there are those over whom he exerts his baleful influence. Doubtless the Rev. W. C. Huntingdon is a man of mark in Rochester city. In all probability he is possessed of a church and numbers followers not a few. In his congregation, as in all congregations, we believe there are many men of generous hands and many women of loving hearts. It is hard to think that so many of the good and true should be encrusted, as inevitably they must be, with ethics so corrosive of much that is profitable, of more that is pleasant in this—to most—not overjoyous life. Hard, indeed, to know that the kindly natures of man and boy, matron and maid, are so sicklied o'er with the dark cast of Calvinistic thought. Given Huntingdon and his sermon, and any one can work out the result. The slogan that is weekly sounded against the theatre, the opera, the novel, dancing, card-playing and all carnal things, is only outvoiced by praise of such fascinating dogmas as total depravity, and such blessed hopes as everlasting damnation.

We have in our city quite enough of this class of apostles, but as yet we have been spared the last disgrace of hearing any one reproach President Lincoln for dying in a place "where the Christian public would have wept to have seen their sons alive." In condemning Booth no one as yet has ventured to assert that every lesson of the stage tends to assassination, nor that the worst of recorded crimes is but "the fruits of a theatrical life." This brilliant discovery of vulgar piety is to be ascribed to the Rev. W. C. Huntingdon, of Rochester, New York, and thankful are we that thus far no one has sought, by imitating his example, to dim for a moment the exceeding brightness of his glory.

THE New York Leader complains that an article is mentioned in THE CALIFORNIAN'S "Table of Contents" which does not appear in the paper. Referring to our file we find that the accidental retention of a line in the "standing" position it had of right occupied called forth the paragraph. A small matter, one would think, to be discovered at such a distance. We notice that the Leader copies "Jeff. Davis' Vendue," a poem which originally appeared in THE CALIFORNIAN, inadvertently omitting to give this paper credit therefor.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELISTS.

[Anxious to keep up the literary standard of The Californian, its proprietors have, at an enormous expense, recently engaged the principal novelists of Europe and America to contribute to its columns. In view of the objections sometimes offered to "Only a Clod" and other continued tales, arrangements have been made with the different authors to condense their stories into a space that shall not exceed two columns of our paper. By this means The Californian will be enabled to offer its readers a three volumed novel in a single issue, or so to speak, a seventy-five cent book for ten cents. By the last steamer, we have received our first installment from the pen of a well-known moral and instructive writer, which we give below:]

JOHN JENKINS;

OR, THE SMOKER REFORMED.

BY T. S. A-TH-R.

CHAPTER I.

"ONE cigar a day!" said Judge Boompointer.

"One cigar a day," repeated John Jenkins, as with trepidation he dropped his half-consumed cigar under his work-bench.

"One cigar a day is three cents a day," remarked Judge Boompointer, gravely, "and do you know, sir, what one cigar a day, or three cents a day, amounts to in the course of four years?'

John Jenkins, in his boyhood, had attended the village school, and possessed considerable arithmetical ability. Taking up a shingle which lay upon his work-bench, and producing a piece of chalk, with a feeling of conscious pride he made an exhaustive calculation:

"Exactly forty-three dollars and eighty cents," he replied, wiping the perspiration from his heated brow, while his face flushed with honest enthusiasm.

"Well, sir, if you saved three cents a day, instead of wasting it, you would now be the possessor of a new suit of clothes, an illustrated Family Bible, a pew in the church, a complete set of Patent Office Reports, a hymn-book, and a paid subscription to Arthur's Home Magazine, which could be purchased for exactly forty-three dollars and eighty cents—and," added the Judge, with increasing sternness, "if you calculate leap-year, which you seem to have strangely omitted—you have three cents more, sir; three cents more!" What would that buy you, sir?"

"A cigar," suggested John Jenkins; but, coloring again deeply, he hid his face.

"No, sir," said the Judge, with a sweet smile of benevolence stealing over his stern features; "properly invested, it would buy you that which passeth all price. Dropped into the missionary box, who can tell what heathen, now idly and joyously wantoning in nakedness and sin, might be brought to a sense of his miserable condition, and made, through that three cents, to feel the torments of the wicked."

With these words the Judge retired, leaving John Jenkins buried in profound thought. "Three cents a day," he muttered. "In forty years I might be worth four hundred and thirty-eight dollars and ten cents—and then I might marry Mary. Ah, Mary!" The young carpenter sighed, and drawing a twenty-five cent daguerreotype from his vest pocket, gazed long and fervidly upon the features of a young girl in book muslin and a coral necklace. Then, with a resolute expression, he carefully locked the door of his workshop and departed.

Alas! his good resolutions were too late. We trifle with the tide of fortune which too often nips us in the bud and casts the dark shadow of misfortune over the bright lexicon of youth! That night the half-consumed fragment of John Jenkins' cigar set fire to his work-shop and burned it up, together with all his tools and materials. There was no insurance.

CHAPTER II.

THE DOWNWARD PATH.

"Then you still persist in marrying John Jenkins?" queried Judge Boompointer, as he playfully, with paternal familiarity, lifted the golden curls of the village belle, Mary Jones.

"I do," replied the fair young girl, in a low voice, that resembled rock candy in its saccharine firmness; "I do. He has promised to reform. Since he lost all his property by fire—"

"The result of his pernicious habit, though he illogically persists in charging it to me," interrupted the Judge.

"Since then," continued the young girl, "he has endeavored to break himself of the habit. He tells me that he has substituted the stalks of the Indian ratan, the outer pod of a leguminous plant called the smoking-bean, and the fragmentary and unconsumed remainder of cigars which occur at rare and uncertain intervals along the road, which, as he informs me, though deficient in quality and strength, are comparatively inexpensive." And, blushing at her own eloquence, the young girl hid her curls on the Judge's arm.

"Poor thing," muttered Judge Boompointer. "Dare I tell her all? Yet I must."

"I shall cling to him," continued the young girl, rising with her theme, "as the young vine clings to some hoary ruin. Nay, nay, chide me not, Judge Boompointer. I will marry John Jenkins!"

The Judge was evidently affected. Seating himself at the table, he wrote a few lines hurriedly upon a piece of paper, which he folded and placed in the fingers of the destined bride of John Jenkins.

"Mary Jones," said the Judge, with impressive earnestness, "take this trifle as a wedding-gift from one who respects your fidelity and truthfulness. At the altar let it be a reminder of me." And covering his face hastily with a handkerchief, the stern and iron-willed man left the room. As the door closed. Mary unfolded the paper. It was an order on the corner groeery for three yards of flannel, a paper of needles, four pounds of soap, one pound of starch, and two boxes of matches!

"Noble and thoughtful man!" was all Mary Jones could exclaim, as she hid her face in her hands and burst into a flood of tears.

* * * * * * * * * *

The bells of Cloverdale are ringing merrily. It is a wedding. "How beautiful they look!" is the exclamation that passes from lip to lip, as Mary Jones, leaning timidly on the arm of John Jenkins, enters the church. But the bride is agitated, and the bridegroom betrays a feverish nervousness. As they stand in the vestibule, John Jenkins fumbles earnestly in his vest pocket. Can it be the ring he is anxious about? No. He draws a small brown substance from his pocket, and biting off a piece, hastily replaces the fragment and gazes furtively around. Surely no one saw him? Alas! the eyes of two of that wedding party saw the fatal act. Judge Boompointer shook his head sternly. Mary Jones sighed and breathed a silent prayer. Her husband chewed!

CHAPTER III, AND LAST.

"What! more bread!" said John Jenkins, gruffly. "You're always asking for money for bread. D—nation! Do you want to ruin me by your extravagance?" and as he uttered these words he drew from his pocket a bottle of whisky, a pipe and a paper of tobacco. Emptying the first at a draught, he threw the empty bottle at the head of his eldest boy, a youth of twelve summers. The missile struck the child full in the temple, and stretched him a lifeless corpse.

Mrs. Jenkins, whom the reader will hardly recognize as the once gay and beautiful Mary Jones, raised the dead body of her son in her arms, and, carefully placing the unfortunate youth beside the pump in the back-yard, returned with a saddened step to the house. At another time, and in brighter days, she might have wept at the occurrence. She was past tears now.

"Father, your conduct is reprehensible!" said little Harrison Jenkins, the youngest boy. "Where do you expect to go to when you die?"

"Ah!" said John Jenkins, fiercely; "this comes of giving children a liberal education. This is the result of Sabbath schools. Down, viper!"

A tumbler thrown from the same parental fist laid out the youthful Harrison cold. The four other children had, in the meantime, gathered around the table with anxious expectancy. With a chuckle, the now changed and brutal John Jenkins produced four pipes, and, filling them with tobacco, handed one to each of his offspring and bade them smoke. "It's better than bread!" laughed the wretch hoarsely.

Mary Jenkins, though of a patient nature, felt it her duty now to speak. "I have borne much, John Jenkins," she said, "but I would prefer that the children should not smoke. It is an uncleanly habit, and soils their clothes. I ask this as a special favor!

John Jenkins hesitated—the pangs of remorse began to seize him.

"Promise me this, John!" urged Mary upon her knees.

"I promise!" reluctantly answered John.

"And you will put the money in a savings bank?"

"I will," repeated her husband; "and I'll give up smoking, too."

"'Tis well, John Jenkins!" said Judge Boompointer, appearing suddenly from behind the door, where he had been concealed during this interview. "Nobly said! my man. Cheer up! I will see that the children are decently buried." The husband and wife fell into each other's arms. And Judge Boompointer, gazing upon the affecting spectacle, burst into tears.

From that day John Jenkins was an altered man.

THE END.

The Fourth.—The programme of the day is announced in our advertising columns. The Triumphal Arch, which is being constructed at the intersection of Montgomery and California streets, is already the lion of that locality. The assembling of the children of the public schools to greet the procession with patriotic songs will be a novel and happy incident. The sprinkling of the streets will greatly promote the public comfort.

THEATRICAL TALK.

MR. PAUNCEFORT, the new addition to the company at Maguire's Opera House, has made a generally favorable impression. There is but one opinion among those who have witnessed his acting, namely, that he is a thoroughly good actor. His impersonation of the character of "Henry Jasper," in the Bachelor of Arts, was an admirable piece of acting. As "Cloudesly," in the afterpiece of A Practical Man, he proved most satisfactorily that a San Francisco audience is as easily moved to laughter by a legitimate light comedy style of acting as by the very lowest style of low comedy. Mr. Pauncefort's "John Mildmay," in Still Waters Run Deep, was a highly finished execution, and displayed a degree of talent which delighted all present. Everything which Mr. Pauncefort has attempted during the week he has played well. It is really a comfort to be able to praise without any reservation, and as the chance may perhaps not occur again for some little time, I gladly avail myself of it. The dramatic productions of San Francisco authors are positively at length to see the light. The long promised Enoch Arden is in preparation; beautiful new scenery is being painted for it, and it will be produced in such style as to insure success if the piece itself merits it. The author may well congratulate himself that the leading characters, "Enoch Arden," "Annie Lee" and "Philip Ray," are to be entrusted to such actors as Mr. Pauncefort, Mrs. Sophie Edwin and Mr. Charles Thorne. The Silver Chord and The Palmetto will follow Enoch Arden, and one continued succession of novelties will be kept up until the advent of another star. The performance at the Opera House this afternoon and evening will consist of The Corsican Brothers, Mr. Pauncefort playing the double part of "Louis" and "Fabien dei Franchi."

Wheatleigh's Eureka Theatre has firmly established its claim to liberal support from the public. The comedy of Taming a Butterfly had a splendid run, for San Francisco; it was withdrawn last night to give place to the Colleen Bawn, in which Mr. Wheatleigh "doubled" the characters of "Danny Mann" and "Miles Na Coppaleen" with miraculous skill. Fanny Morgan Phelps made a decided hit as "Anne Chute." A farce entitled Jefferson D. in Hoops, or the Confeds in the Last Ditch, written by a "gentleman of this city," will be produced on Monday. Mr. Wheatleigh has, I fancy, rather stretched a point in order to encourage local dramatic talent, in consenting to appear in the character of "Jeff Davis," in what is probably a slight piece d' occasion. However, it may be a strictly legitimate farce. This afternoon and evening the Colleen Bawn will be repeated. On the afternoon of the Fourth a dramatic entertainment will be given at the Eureka at half past two o'clock. Perhaps the little people will be regaled with the sight of Jeff Davis in hoops.

Touchstone.

Loss of a Steamer.—The Opposition steamship Golden Rule, on her last trip from New York to Aspinwall, was wrecked, on the 3d of May, on Roncador (or Roarer) Island, one of the Antilles. The Golden Rule ran on the reef nearly at full speed, and became firmly imbedded on it. She had on board 620 passengers, who, together with the officers and crew, succeeded in reaching the island, some three miles off. Enough stores were taken from the ship to furnish scanty subsistence until communication could be had with the main land, though but little baggage was saved, as the steamer soon went to pieces. The passengers were taken off the island by the U. S. steamers State of Georgia and Huntsville, and were landed at Aspinwall on the 11th of May. The America was to have left Panama on May 13th, with the wrecked passengers, for this city.

The Schools have figured largely in the news records of the dailies during the present week. The mammoth new public school building on the corner of Fifth and Market streets, the Lincoln School, was dedicated on Thursday afternoon. Dr. Huddart's Union College is completing the closing exercises of its present term. Examinations will be continued to-day, and on Monday afternoon the musical exhibition will take place, to be followed by the distribution of premiums. On Wednesday the sixth annual commencement of St. Ignatius College took place, in the basement hall of the church building, on Market street. The collegiate institutes of Santa Clara and San José have also closed their terms with the usual exercises. The Public Schools will open on Monday next. St. Mary's College, of this city, will commence its next session on the 18th of July next. The St. Ignatius College, and the educational institutions of Santa Clara and San José will commence their new terms in August.

Forest City Burned.—On the afternoon of June 27th this flourishing mountain town was consumed. All the buildings, with the exception of the Methodist church, on the outskirts, were destroyed. In half an hour after the first discovery of the fire the whole town was in ashes. Mrs. Sims was burned to death, and Miss Jane Glass was badly burned The loss will probably amount to $70,000.

THE PEDLAR'S DOOM; OR, THE VISION OF TOULOUSE.

AS the junior partner in a commercial house at Lyons, I had been travelling for some time on the business of the firm, when, one evening in the month of June, 1761, I arrived at a town in Languedoc, where I had never before been. I put up in a quiet inn in the suburbs, and, being very much fatigued, ordered dinner at once, and went to bed almost immediately after, determining to begin very early in the morning my visits to the different merchants.

I was no sooner in bed than I fell into a deep sleep, and had a dream that made the strongest impression upon me.

I thought that I had arrived at the same town, but in the middle of the day instead of the evening, as was really the case—that I had stopped at the very same inn, and gone out immediately, as an unoccupied stranger would do, to see whatever was worthy of observation in the place. I walked down the main street into another street crossing it at right angles, and apparently leading into the country. I had not gone very far when I came to a church, the Gothic portal of which I stopped to examine. When I had satisfied my curiosity, I advanced to a by-path which branched off from the main street.

Obeying an impulse which I could neither account for nor control, I struck into this path, though it was winding, rugged and unfrequented, and presently reached a miserable cottage, in front of which was a garden covered with weeds. I had no difficulty in getting into the garden, for the hedge had several gaps in it wide enough to admit four carts abreast. I approached an old well which stood solitary and gloomy in a distant corner, and, looking down into it, I beheld distinctly, without any possibility of mistake, a corpse which had been stabbed in several places. I counted the deep wounds and the wide gashes, whence the blood was flowing.

I would have cried out, but my tongue clove to the roof of my mouth. At this moment I awoke with my hair on end, trembling in every limb, and cold drops of perspiration bedewing my forehead—awoke to find myself comfortably in bed, my trunk standing beside me, birds warbling cheerfully near the window, whilst a clear, young voice was singing a provincial air in the next room, and the morning sun was shining brightly through the curtains.

I sprang from my bed, dressed myself, and, as it was yet very early, I thought I would seek an appetite for my breakfast by a morning walk. I went accordingly into the street and strolled along. The further I went the stronger became my confused recollection of the objects that presented themselves to my view. "It is very strange," I thought; "I have never been here before, and I could swear that I have seen this house, and the next, and the one on the left." On I went, till I came to the corner of a street crossing the one down which I had come. For the first time I remembered my dream, but put away the thought as too absurd; still, at every step I took, some fresh point of resemblance struck me. "Am I still dreaming?" I exclaimed, not without a momentary thrill through my whole frame. "Is the agreement to be perfect to the very end?"

Before long I reached the church with the same architectural features that had attracted my notice in the dream, and then the high road, along which I pursued my way, coming at length to the same by-path that had presented itself to my imagination a few hours before. There was no possibility of doubt or mistake—every tree, every turn was familiar to me. I was not at all of a superstitious turn, and was wholly engrossed in the practical details of commercial business. My mind had never dwelt upon the hallucinations, the presentiments, that science either denies or is unable to explain; but I must confess that I now felt myself spell-bound as by some enchantment, and with Pascal's words upon my lips, "A continued dream would be equal to reality," I hurried forward, no longer doubting that the next moment would bring me to the cottage; and this was really the case. In all its outward circumstances it corresponded to what I had seen in my dream. Who, then, could wonder that I determined to ascertain whether the coincidence would hold good in every point? I entered the garden and went direct to the spot where I had seen the well; but here the resemblance failed—well there was none. I looked in every direction, examined the whole garden, went round the cottage, which appeared to be inhabited, although no person was visible; but nowhere could I find any vestige of a well.

I went back to the hotel, and, after chatting with the landlord for some time on different subjects, I came to the point, and asked him directly to whom the cottage belonged that was on a by-road which I described to him.

"I wonder, sir," said he, "what made you take such particular notice of such a wretched little hovel. It is inhabited by an old man and his wife, who have the character of being very morose and unsociable. They rarely leave the house, see nobody, and nobody goes to see them; but they are quiet enough, and I never heard anything against them beyond this. Of late, their very existence seems to have been forgotten; and I believe, sir, that you are the first who, for years, has turned his steps to the deserted spot."

These details, far from satisfying my curiosity, did but inflame it the more. Breakfast was served, but I could not touch it. I endeavored to interest myself in a quarrel between two men in the street, but the garden and the cottage preoccupied my mind; and at last, snatching my hat, I cried, "I will go, come what may."

I repaired to the nearest magistrate, told him the object of my visit and related the whole circumstance briefly and clearly. I saw directly that he was much impressed by the statement.

"It is, indeed, very strange," said he; "and after what has happened I do not think I am at liberty to leave the matter without further inquiry. Important business will prevent my accompanying you in search, but I will place two police officers at your command. Go once more to the hovel, see its inhabitants and search every part of it. You may, perhaps, make some important discovery."

I suffered but very few moments to elapse before I was on my way, accompanied by two officers, and we soon reached the cottage. We knocked, and after waiting some time, an old man opened the door. He received us somewhat uncivilly, but showed no mark of suspicion, nor, indeed, of any other emotion when we told him we wished to search the house.

"Very well, gentlemen, as fast and as soon as you like," was the reply.

"Have you a well here?" I inquired.

"No, sir; we are obliged to go for water to a spring at a considerable distance."

We searched the house, which I did, I confess, with a kind of feverish excitement, expecting every moment to bring some fatal secret to light. Meanwhile the man gazed upon us with an impenetrable vacancy of look, and we at last left the cottage without seeing anything that could confirm my suspicions. I resolved to inspect the garden once more; and a number of idlers having been by this time collected, drawn to the spot by the sight of a stranger with two armed men engaged in searching the premises, I made inquiries of some of them whether they knew anything about a well in that place. I could get no information at first, but at length an old woman came slowly forward, leaning on a crutch.

"A well!" cried she, "is it a well you are looking after?" That has been gone these thirty years. I remember it as if it were only yesterday, how, many a time, when I was a young girl, I used to amuse myself by throwing stones into it and hearing the splash they used to make in the water."

"And could you tell where that well used to be?" asked I, almost breathless with excitement.

"As near as I can remember, on the very spot on which your honor is standing," said the old woman.

"I could have sworn it," thought I, springing from the place as if I had trod upon a scorpion.

Need I say that we set to work to dig up the ground? At about eighteen inches deep we came to a layer of bricks, which being broken up, gave to view some boards which were easily removed, after which we beheld the mouth of the well.

"I was quite sure it was there," said the woman. "What a fool the old fellow was to stop it up, and then have to go so far for water!"

A sounding line, furnished with hooks, was now let down into the well; the crowd pressing around us, and breathlessly bending over the dark and fœtid hole, the secrets of which seemed hidden in impenetrable obscurity. This we repeated several times without any result. At length, penetrating below the mud, the hooks caught in an old chest, upon the top of which had been thrown a great many large stones, and after much time and effort we succeeded in raising it to daylight. The sides and lid were decayed and rotten; it needed no locksmith to open it; and we found within what I was certain we should find, and which paralyzed with horror all the spectators who had not my pre-convictions—we found the remains of a human body!

The police officers who had accompanied me now rushed into the house and secured the person of the old man. As to his wife, no one could at first tell what had become of her. After some search, however, she was found hidden behind a bundle of fagots.

The old couple were brought before the proper authorities, and privately and separately examined. The old man persisted in his denial most pertinaciously, but his wife at length confessed that in concert with her husband she had once, a a very long time ago, murdered a pedlar, whom they had met one night on the high road, and who had been incautious enough to tell them of a considerable sum of money which he had about him, and whom, in consequence, they induced to pass the night at their house. They had taken advantage of the heavy sleep produced by fatigue to strangle him; his body had been put into the chest, the chest thrown into the well, and the well stopped up.

The pedlar being from another country, his disappearance had caused no inquiry; there were no witnesses of the crime, and as its traces had been carefully concealed from every eye, the two criminals had good reason to believe themselves secure from detection. They had not, however, been able to silence the voice of conscience; they fled from the sight of their fellow men; they thought they beheld, wherever they turned, mute accusers; they trembled at the slightest noise; and silence thrilled them with terror. They had often formed a determination to leave the scene of their crime—to fly to some distant land; but still some undefinable fascination kept them near the remains of their murdered victim.

Terrified at the disposition of his wife, and unable to resist the overwhelming proofs against him, the man at length made a similar confession; and six weeks after, the unhappy criminals died on the scaffold, in accordance with the sentence of the Parliament of Toulouse.

A MODEST OUTFIT.

WE turn to a volume (says an English paper) containing anecdotes of the English aristocracy, and find some account of a lady living in the reign of James I., Elizabeth Spencer, wife of Lord Compton, afterward Earl of Northampton, the greatest heiress of her time.

Her father was Sir John Spencer, Lord Mayor of London, who left a fortune estimated at from £300,000 to £800,000—an almost boundless treasure in those days. On the inheritance falling to him through his wife, Lord Compton went out of his wits for joy; but recovering after a time, he received the following letter from her ladyship, which is given as affording a pretty complete, though perhaps exaggerated, picture of the woman of fashion and fortune of that day:

"My Sweet Life—Now I have declared to you my mind for the settling of your state, I suppose that it were best for me to bethink and consider within myself what allowance were meetest for me. . . . . I pray and beseech you to grant to me, your most kind and loving wife, the sum of £2,600 quarterly to be paid. Also, I would, besides that allowance—have £6000 quarterly to be paid, for the performance of charitable works; and those things I would not, neither will be accountable for. Also, I will have three horses for my own saddle, that none shall dare to lend or borrow; none lend but I, none borrow but you. Also, I would have two gentlewomen, lest one should be sick, or have some other let. Also, believe it, it is an indecent thing for a gentlewoman to stand mumping alone when God hath blessed their lord and lady with a great estate. Also, when I ride a-hunting, or a-hawking, or travel from one house to another, I will have them attending; so, for either of those said women, I must and will have for either of them a horse. Also, I will have six or eight gentlemen, and I will have my two coaches, one lined with velvet to myself, with four very fair horses; and a coach for my women, lined with cloth, and laced with gold, otherwise with scarlet, and laced with silver, with four good horses. Also, I will have two coachmen, one for my own coach, the other for my women. Also, at any time when I travel, I will be allowed not only coaches and spare horses for me and my women, but I will have such carriages as shall be befitting for all orderly, not pestering my things with my women's, nor theirs with either chambermaids, nor theirs with washmaids. Also for laundresses, when I travel, I will have them sent away before with the carriages, to see all safe. And the chambermaids I will have go before, that the chamber may be ready, sweet and clean. Also, for that it is indecent to crowd up myself with my gentleman-usher in my coach, I will have him to have a convenient horse to attend me, either in city or country. And I must have two footmen. My desire is, that you defray all the charges for me. And for myself, besides my yearly allowance, I would have twenty gowns of apparel, six of them very excellent good ones. Also, I would have to put in my purse £2,000 and £200, and so you to pay my debts. Also, I would have £6,600 to buy me jewels, and £4,000 to buy me a pearl chain. Now, seeing I have been, and am so reasonable unto you, I pray you to find my children apparel, and their schooling, and all my servants, men and women, their wages. Also, I will have all my houses furnished, and my lodging-chambers to be suited with all such furniture as is fit—as beds, stools, chairs, suitable cushions, carpets, silver warming-pans, cupboards of plate, fair hangings, and such-like. So for my drawing-chamber in all houses, I will have them delicately furnished, both with hangings, couch, canopy, glass, carpet, chairs, cushions, and all things thereunto belonging. Also, my desire is, that you would pay your debts, build up Ashby House, and purchase lands and lend money, as you love God, to my lord-chamberlain, who would have all, perhaps your life from you. * * * So, now that I have declared to you what I would have, and what it is that I would not have, I pray you, when you be an earl, to allow me £2,000 more, than I now desire, and double attendance."

It is said that the wardrobe of Queen Elizabeth contained three thousand gowns, many more, we dare say, than the present Queen of England possesses, and much richer in lace and jewels than any in which she attires herself. Every one has learned of her vanity, the long time she spent at her toilet, and yet she was a healthy, strong-minded woman—as good a monarch, perhaps, as ever sat upon the throne of England.

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL THE

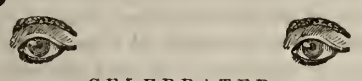
DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known Mr enring diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of douht, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the hend, as it coutains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'



CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lacbrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Augustnre Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root, Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Pleurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtne of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (heroditnry) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outwnrd appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG, M. D.,
Solo Proprietor, New York.

Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Solo Agents for the Pacific Coast,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE
COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 200 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be rendy for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Franeisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th Mareb, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - - $660,000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29-3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

IN DIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25 3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10,000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co. WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office.

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.
W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S
no26 San Francisco.

DR. LIBBEY,

WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracted with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no charge.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. jc10-1m

---

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

---

PROPOSALS

FOR PUBLISHING ON STEEL

A PORTRAIT OF

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND SON.

This Picture was photographed by Brady in the White House at Washington, and is the last the President ever sat for.

It represents President Lincoln at home with his son reading the Bible, and is pronounced by the best judges to be superior to any other ever taken. We would recommend all who desire a first-class engraving—a life-like picture of President Lincoln—to subscribe now and receive their pictures from the first impressions of the plate. Early subscribers will receive proof-sheets. We propose to furnish to subscribers a fac-simile of the card engraved on steel 10 1-2x12 1-2 inches on plate paper 19x24 inches. Price in Rosewood or Gilt Frame, 14x18 inches, $5.

☞ Sold only by Subscription.

DEWING & LAWS, General Agents,
je24-tf 511 Sacramento Street.

GUARDIAN'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 24th day of April, 1865, in the matter of the estate of Louis Conrad Meyer, a minor, the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said minor, will sell to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on the 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. & A. Barstow, No. 24 Montgomery Block, corner of Montgomery and Washington streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said Louis Conrad Meyer in and to that certain lot or parcel of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz.:

Commencing at the northwesterly corner of Octavia and Fulton streets, thence running south along the west line of Octavia street, 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, easterly 275 feet; thence at a right angle, northerly 275 feet; and thence westerly along the north line of Fulton street 275 feet to the place of beginning; comprising a portion of Western Addition, Block No. 150, and surrounding streets.

And the said guardian will receive offers or bids therefor from this date to said 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock noon at the place aforesaid.

JOHANNA MEYER, Guardian of the Estate
June 10, 1865.-5t of Louisa Conrad Meyer, a minor.

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

NEW WHOLESALE STORE!

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the host selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES!

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.
ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff; vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LERCHEA, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

AMALIE J. R. SCHAEBEN, Plaintiff; vs. AUGUSTE A. SCHAEBEN, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to AUGUSTE A SCHAEBEN, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eighthundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LERCHEA, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney, office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap8-tjy8-inc

(For the Californian.)

RATIONAL NAMES.

I SUFFER under an evil, which only those who are oppressed with the same sort of a mental weight, can thoroughly appreciate. It is worse than the loss of a limb, cropped ears, deficient nose, an early imperfect education, or any of those common ills of which humanity fancies it has a right to complain. I have an atrocious Christian name. If a man has an artificial leg, he can so train it and himself that it cannot be noticed. He may even attain eminence in an art to which two perfect limbs would seem an imperative necessity. Witness the enthusiasm with which the unipedal dancer Donati is being received. As to defective ears, whether absent entirely like a Quaker's in the early times of New England, or long like those of Midas, the secret in these latter days may be judiciously kept even from the wife of one's bosom. Indeed, we know of many an undoubted ass whose wife regards him as a hero of perfection. Modern Taliacotianism too can give one a nose more irreproachable in architecture than any furnished by nature.

But for an awkward name, what can be the remedy? You send up your card to a stranger, conscious that the first emotion you excite must be a sense of the ridiculous. You go through with an introduction with the same humiliating feeling. You carry through life a sort of nuncupative boot tied to your personality which leads you, canine-like, as much as possible to court obscurity and solitude. You can derive no pleasure in being addressed familiarly, affectionately, or respectfully, inasmuch as the appellative necessary thereto can but harrow up all that is disagreeable in your sensitive nature. Love itself is obnoxious when through all the tenderness of its flattering epithets you discern the taint of a miserable name, which, like the peculiar soil of that fabled island of the east, renders bitter even the honey gathered from its flowers.

I am yclept Dionysius Vago. Could any one be known by a more frightful compound of vowels and consonants? That ugly name has been my ruin. Not that it flung me out of any whimsical relative's will. Dionysius is eminently ancestral. It has been served up at christenings in the family, until it, Vago, and the odor of good punch have become inseparable.

The Vagos have ever been remarkable for their love of kindred ties, and early home associations, in spite even of a hereditary fondness for roaming. This family rolling-stone disposition led my father, a true chip of the Vago block, or rather a fair specimen of the Vago conglomeration of pebbles, to leave, in a search after fortune, the most beautiful spot in the finest country on the face of the globe. (Need I explain to the travelled reader that the country is Ireland, and the particularly beautiful portion thereof, the County Kerry?) After wandering about this continent for some time, after the genuine Vago fashion, my father found himself settled in a commonplace western village, of flat surroundings, where the phlegmatic people maundered rather than conversed in that uninteresting dialect known as Pennsylvania German, and where scenery and population alike could not but contrast painfully to the Celtic mind with the loveable mountains and gorges, the merry shiftlessness and good natured rackrent associations of the old home across the sea. It was then that my father felt what his wanderings had cost him. It was then that his love of home made him gild into beauty everything that his Irish recollections dwelt upon. It was then too that I appeared in the world and aroused in him the nefarious idea of Abraham-like sacrificing me upon the altar of loyalty to home customs and gential whimsicalities.

Kerry is eminently Celtic. The haughty Saxon has not yet even quite overcome the resistance which once so proudly defied a Fitzgerald "to put so much as a plough into the land of a Desmond." The Celt is there, still strong in character and uncorrupted in language. The only avenue to linguistic impurity lies in the hearty affection nourished by the humble hedge school, by the scholastic parish priest, and by the university bred tutor for the classics. Squire, middleman, and peasant alike worship Horace, and the mountain herdsman is more likely to address the passing traveller ignorant of Erse in Latin than in English.

The result is that old Milesian names like Phaudrig and Teagne do constant battle in popular taste with Roman prænomens such as Terence and Cornelius; and the way in which Latin terminations in us precede Celtic O's and Mc's will hereafter, I am happy in believing, puzzle some disgusting modern ethnologist who attempts to theorize about Southern Irish races.

In some such way as this, Dionysius became a damnable heir-loom in our family; and my father in the warmth of his homesick fervor, plastered it relentlessly upon me. In vain did the good-natured neighbors kindly offer their advice and suggestions as to the beauty of Conrad, Heinrich, Hermann or Karl as baptismal names: my impulsive parent rushed frantically with me to a priest twenty miles distant, and I was branded rather than christened by the abominable style of "Dionysius Carraghan O'Carraghan Vago." "Carraghan" is good: it has the true ring; but Dionysius—Ugh!

When I was an infant and asked my name, as is the interesting fashion among slow people, who know little about the art of conversing with childhood, and when my stuttering repetitions finally worked up sufficiently the miserable polysyllabic, a smile invariably came out on the face of the questioner, as he compared my bashful presence with his classical idea of the pedagogue Tyrant of Syracuse. I got finally dimly to understand that the name was ridiculous, and avoided telling it whenever I could. At school, good-natured mistresses, when they took me upon their laps, would pleasantly abridge it to "Dinny;" but as time passed on, awful male instructors of poor taste, but of severe precision in naming, were wont to call me at full length, to the infinite amusement of my jeering companions. At college, I endeavored to render the unsightly, unmanageable absurdity somewhat obscure; but a triennial catalogue crystallized it into durability: and now, I feel that it never will forsake me until the grateful moss shall have effaced it from my tombstone.

I have been the victim of nomenclature. Did you ever pick up an interesting shell or flower, and on learning its name, a long bit of Latin pedantry, pregnant with meaning, but unfit for sensible people with good teeth to pronounce, drop it again with a feeling of unaccountable disgust? It is thus that the world has given me the cold shoulder, when informed of my unhappy name. It has been my frightful skeleton which would not stay quietly in its comfortable closet, or be hidden gracefully behind a lean initial. It marches forth with a sonorous blare of trumpets, aligning its platoon of syllables, and charging mercilessly upon any fortifications of dignity, behind which I may attempt to shelter myself. It is to me a tyrant far worse than he of Syracuse ever could have been to his captives. It has quashed any little ambitious schemes that I may have dreamed of. I am a man of sound larynx and fluent language, and might have been a political orator or something equally gratifying to one as an American citizen, could my name have stood the test of being flamingly posted on street corners for passers-by to repeat and roll unctuously upon their tongues. I am a man of eccentric religious sentiments or I would have long ago taken clerical orders—the only thing with which my name would harmonize—have hidden myself in a Hebrew professorship, and have written lively little quartos on Biblical questions, on the title-page of which "Dionysius Vago, D. D., D. C. L.," would have appeared to advantage.

I once loved—wildly and not judiciously, as Celts always do. How I managed to get so far, I do not know; but when I proposed, the romantic angel of my dreams confessed frankly that Dionysius sounded so oddly, that she doubted her ability ever to overcome the feelings of mirth which it excited. She is now another's; but she always pronounces the objectionable name so tenderly and pitifully when we meet, that I sometimes fancy that—but why stir up one's drowsy sensibilities with that hopeless, emotional spoon. "It might have been?" She has seven children and four folds of double chin.

Although asked with flattering frequency to act as godfather to the chubby boys of old friends, I have, from principle, invariably refused. There was one poor weakly child, whose mother, taking an unholy fancy to the name, proceeded to inflict it upon her darling. But Providence wisely removed the babe from earthly anxieties before it could feel what a blister its name would prove.

Ye parents, who regard with pain the least mortification endured by your darlings, be coolly prudent and philosophical in your choice of names for them. Let them not, on the one hand, be burdened with a magni nominis umbra, which will forestall expectation as to the success of their intellectual efforts, or on the other, be vexed with a plebeian designation nipping those efforts in the bud. Do not, above all things, be eccentric in your christenings. Consider the exact impression the name will give. I knew once a Hebrew gentleman of excellent character and great latitude in his dealings with Gentiles. But he named his boy Lazarus. I never could look into that child's face without a wild fancy as to how he would appear rising from a grave, shrouded in sepulchral cerements. My friend should have respected his Christian neighbors enough to have chosen some name as thoroughly Hebraic, perhaps, but less suggestive in sound.

That was a stupid brute of a traitor, who, the other day, as we learn by the papers, named his boy, J. Wilkes Booth. If the son should haply prove smarter than his malicious parent, there will some day be a squabble in that family, from which filial reverence will be properly absent.

But such vulgar wickedness towards children is uncommon. It is in another direction that care must be taken. Good men are apt to have ugly names. But because, my dear madam, the Rev. Dr. Habbakuk Bezaleel Smith is sound in doctrine and a bright example in morals, let it be no inducement for you to christen your hope by his scriptural appellation. It is related that Bishop Chase, whose own name, Philander, quite euphonious in Greek, but exceptionable in American nomenclature, led him to an understanding of the unpleasantness of such appellations, was once about to baptize an infant whose parents were admirers of a Rev. Doctor rejoicing in the style of Marcus Tullius Cicero Blank, and who, fancying that the name had some influence on the Doctor's many virtues, had determined on it for their son, and suggested it at the font. Before the name was half uttered, the good Bishop interrupted with, "Nousense, I baptize thee, Peter." If Peter ever falls from grace, he must indeed be a wretch, after the church has done him so kindly an act.

If our divus President had had time among his serious duties for such social matters, I doubt not but that he would have issued a merry proclamation, forbidding, under pain of confiscation, the giving to any boy born in his administration the patriarchal name under which he in his youth and manhood probably suffered many a commonplace jibe and would-be witticism.

Names should not be in themselves obtrusive. Charles, for instance, is pleasant. It conveys no idea either odd or offensive. When you hear the name you await its bearer before you form conceptions of him. It is, therefore, a good name; and whether Charles makes his way through the world as a hod-carrier or a Senator, as a poet or boot-black, no absurdity attaches thereto. But who dares to influence futurity by prefixing Napoleon Bonaparte to honest Smith? Avoid, too, the use of names which will indicate either the political or religious sect to which the parents belong. If the child, when a man, differs from you on either subject, you will not then fancy especial propriety in your notions at christening. Remember, too, that among commonplace, dull people, whose ideas have a narrow range, names are liable to be harped and punned upon, until every intellectual nerve of their bearers is in a state of agony, for which there need have been no occasion.

Pay respect to family appellatives when it can be done without injury to euphony and taste. But discard a rich godfather instanter, if his horrible designation cannot be adopted without mercenary consideration. Give your children wholesome styles, whether for infancy or manhood, and you have done them a great favor, of which poverty cannot deprive them, and to which gold cannot add a single charm.

To my brethren in this matter of what Swift calls being "Nicodemused," let me suggest consolation. We can but carry our crosses as gaily as possible, making people believe that we regard them as ornamental toys, curious, perhaps, but in no wise to be laughed at as grotesque. We must make our harsh appellatives the exponents of all good fellowship and human affection. The worst title can, in time, be so displayed that it will meet with nothing but tender regard. I have known men whose characters would have made "Judas" linger lovingly on the lips, had it been their lot to have borne that apostolic brand of treason. A pure life, a warm heart, and a genial address will at last shroud the most oppressive name in the irresistible charm which ever hovers around the personality of a gentleman.

DIONYSIUS VAGO.

AT Evansville, Indiana, Miss Fanny B. Price concluded a very successful engagement on Friday evening, May 19th. She was presented with a magnificent diamond ring, in behalf of the ladies and gentleman of Evansville.

Mme. Scheller and Mr. Charles Pope, have returned to the Academy of Music, Cleveland. Enoch Arden failed to make a sensation. The Streets of New York made a decided hit.

Kate Fisher opened at Brant's Hall, Harrisburg, Pa., May 23d, with the Martinetti Troupe and W. Davidge, Jr.

The Keans appeared at the St. Louis Theatre, June 3d, and were well received.

John T. Ford, manager of the theatre where the President was assassinated, was released from the Old Capitol Prison at Washington on the 27th of May. It is also rumored that John S. Clarke was released at the same time.

Mr. and Miss Richings terminated their engagement at the Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia, May 27th.

Mrs. W. H. Leighton and Yankee Locke were at last accounts playing at the Indianapolis Theatre, (Ind.,) to crowded houses.

Central Park has been revived at Wallack's with great success.

Mr. John E. Owens, the popular actor, departed for Europe on the 27th of May.

Helen Western was at Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati, May 29th, playing to excellent houses.

The Cotton and Murphy troupe of Minstrels were at last advices at Andrew's Hall, Boston, playing to splendid houses.

Miss Bateman was at the Adelphi Theatre, London, May 8th, performing in Fazio.

GROCERIES of every description can always be bought cheap of B. Sbarboro & Co., No. 531 Washington street, a few doors above the Washington Market. This firm does an extensive cash business, and sells at a small advance only above wholesale rates. Read their advertisement in to-day's paper.

THE "KING OF PIANOS."—Mr. George Hall, one of the most extensive dealers in Piano Fortes, thus writes to the manufacturer:

Having been in the Piano business on a large scale for more than twenty years in the great valley of the West, and bought from all the principal makers in this country, I consider the BRADBURY the KING of Pianos. GEO. HALL.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent. per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning.
A. KOHLER, 424 Sansome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6,500,000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25-tf

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched in the month of JULY, 1865:

JULY 3rd - - - - - - SACRAMENTO.
JULY 13th - - - - - - GOLDEN CITY.

From Folsom-street Wharf, at eleven o'clock, A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
je24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

CALIFORNIA COLLEGIATE
INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG LADIES,
64, 66, 68, 70 Silver Street, San Francisco,
FOR BOARDING AND DAY PUPILS,

Will commence its next Session THURSDAY, July 6th. A few vacancies remaining, early application will be necessary for those desiring admission. Further particulars may be obtained by calling upon or addressing
MISS M. LAMMOND,
je24-1m Principal.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE RACKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS RACKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS RACKFORD, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. jy1-5t

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR
OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
TO BE HELD IN THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,
IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.

The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Executive Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.

No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.

A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.

Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 21 of August.

Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 21 of August.

The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.

The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.

The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.

The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.

No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.

All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.

All communications to be addressed to C. S. HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hunscom, Edward Numan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

MEXICAN 10 PER CENT. LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO,
A LOAN OF
TEN MILLIONS OF DOLLARS!
Payable six years from July 1st, 1865,

Is offered for negotiation in the city of San Francisco, for which the bonds of the said Government will be issued in sums of from $50 to $500, respectively, with interest at the rate of
TEN PER CENT. ANNUM,
Upon coupons attached thereto. Principal and interest payable in
UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

Interest Payable Semi-Annually, at the PACIFIC BANK in the city of San Francisco.

The said bonds bearing date July 1st. 1865, and payable six years after date, are now offered for sale at the office of the undersigned,
NO. 430 MONTGOMERY STREET,

The payment and redemption of these Bonds and Coupons are secured by the transfer to Samuel Brannan, Esq., as Trustee, of one-half of the fiscal proceeds of
ALL THE REVENUES AND DUTIES
Derived from the Custom Houses of
MAZATLAN, GUAYMAS, MANZANILLO,
And all the Ports in the States of
SINALOA, SONORA AND COLIMA,
And from the Mines of said States,

Which Revenues and Duties, so soon as collected, are to be deposited and held in the PACIFIC BANK, San Francisco, and employed exclusively for the payment of said Bonds and Interest.

The great number of those desiring to aid, and having faith in the eventual triumph of
THE REPUBLIC OF MEXICO,
together with the abundance of the security offered, justify the belief that this Loan will be speedily taken up.

The Bonds issued will possess additional value from the facilities that will be offered to such of the holders as are engaged in
TRADING WITH THE PORTS SPECIFIED.

The Mexican Government reserves the right to redeem said Loan, or any part thereof, upon six months notice of said intention, published in a newspaper of the city of San Francisco and in a newspaper of the city of New York.

The undersigned has appointed SAMUEL BRANNAN, Esq., of the city of San Francisco, his Attorney, and given him authority to transact all business relative to these Bonds, in his name.

Subscription Books are opened at the rooms of the undersigned Office, Room No. 1, second floor, 420 Montgomery street.

For further particulars, including terms of loan, apply to
GASPAR SANCHEZ OCHOA,
Agent of the Republic of Mexico.
Office, No. 1, second floor, 420 Montgomery street,
ja24 tf San Francisco.

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,
NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET.
(OVER FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE DEPOT.)

INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest
EXPANDERS,

For Expanding the Chest, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

This Supporter possesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who have used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishing to possess
GRACE OF FORM
AND
SYMMETRY OF PERSON.

It is comfortable to the frame, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of
GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of
BUST,
Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. READ also has a Supporter which she can confidently recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation; gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M. my27-tf

FLAGS AND UNION BADGES
OF ALL SIZES,
ON HAND AND PRINTED TO ORDER, AT THE LOWEST RATES, BY
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO,
517 CLAY STREET,
ja24 2t COMMERCIAL PRINTING OFFICE.

ALLCOCK'S
POROUS PLASTERS
RELIEVING AND
PAIN STRENGTHENING

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.
THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Brandreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.
☞ Sold by all Druggists. de17-3m

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.
In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.
The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.
The next session commences July 18th.
For further information, apolication may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 3m REV. P. I. GREY, President.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:

Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.
9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40
FROM THE CITY
10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.

Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.
my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY,
A CURE FOR EVERY FORM OF
Pulmonary Complaint!
COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH, SPITTING OF BLOOD, LIVER COMPLAINT, etc., etc.

Consumption,

Which carries off more victims than any other disease, and which baffles the skill of the Physician to a greater extent than any other malady, often
YIELDS TO THIS REMEDY,
when all others prove ineffectual.
AS A MEDICINE,
Rapid in relief, soothing in effect, safe in its operation, it is
UNSURPASSED!
while as a preparation, free from noxious ingredients, poisons or minerals; uniting skill, science and medical knowledge, combining all that is valuable in the vegetable kingdom for this class of disease, it is
INCOMPARABLE!
and is entitled, merits and receives the enviable appellation of the
INVALID'S FRIEND.

Sold by all druggist's and by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco

LEECHES! LEECHES! LEECHES!

We are in receipt, per every steamer, of
FRESH SWEDISH LEECHES,
which we offer for sale at lower rates than ever before on this coast. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansomo streets.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sole Agents,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets

CHEAP LOTS FOR SALE.

HOMESTEAD LOTS, inside Larkin street, from $275 to $500, on long time, with interest at ten per cent. per annum, with perfect title. M. A. BRALY,
Northwest corner Front and Clay streets,
jy1-1m Up stairs.

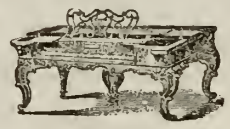
WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
de31-3m

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,

ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME!



WM. B. BRADBURY'S

New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimonials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.

A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29-tf

---

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers

—IN—

Fine Clothing

—AND—

GENTLEMEN'S

FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,

200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

OVERSTOCKED!
AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

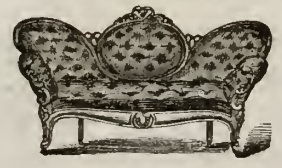
Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.



BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS

—TO—

Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO

FOR RED BLUFF,

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

no5 tf J. WHITNEY, Jr., President.

FURNITURE

Closing Out at any Price!

On account of the Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNDERSELL anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDSTEADS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS,
BEDDING, Etc.,

At Your Own Prices!

ap22-3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, Etc.

WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
mn4-3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND, & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

ap22-tf

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.

ap22-tf

DR. H. A. BENTON,

Electro-Magnetic Physician,

OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Applinnces and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:

Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Vintou, American Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.

Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.
ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE!

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other preparations

FOR THE CURE OF

Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,

AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE

is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

A BAD BREATH!

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

DIABETES, INDIGESTION, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, STRANGUARY CALCULUS, GRAVEL, CATARRH AND OTHER AFFECTIONS OF THE BLADDER,

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

---

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the:

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons we can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfaction. my27 3m

---

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

SAN JOSE.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY..... Proprietor.

As a desirable place of resort for health or recreation, the above Hotel is not surpassed in the State.

Excellent accommodations for families, by the day, week, or month, on reasonable terms.

ju25

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17 3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

THE OPERA OF "L'AFRICAINE."

ALTHOUGH L'Africaine has no overture, before the curtain rises there is a brief introduction written in a singularly elaborate manner, which presents the more exquisite morsels of the coming opera. When this musical bill of fare has been read the curtain rises. We see a council chamber of magnificent architecture in the king's palace at Lisbon. There is Inez in such agitation as you may conceive a maiden who has heard nothing of him (Vasco de Gama) to whom she plighted her troth on the eve of his departure on a voyage of discovery now two years gone. The past in its azure mantle glides before her with its melancholy step; she remembers her of the song he sang after their last vows had been exchanged, their last kisses given—music alone at such an hour can express the soul's emotions. She repeats it. The last note has scarcely melted away into air when her father, Don Diego, appears. He has been closeted with the king discussing his domestic affairs. The result of the conference is (so he tells Inez) to break her engagement with Vasco de Gama and to affiance her to Don Pedro, a wealthy and powerful nobleman, and consequently the very figure in gouty eyes to play the part of Cupid. Old Don Diego babbles the arguments familiar to mouths which have for twenty years forgotten the charms which lurk in kisses: Vasco de Gama is of obscure birth; he has no money; he is drowned, for nothing has been heard of the squadron under Bernard Diaz, with whom he sailed—you know the fal lal la with which age glozes amorous ditties. Inez is scarcely able to master her grief, at least not from jealous eyes. Don Pedro is present, and, with an anger he takes no pains to hide, sees that if her hand may be, her heart will never be his. His burst of rage is checked at the outset by the entrance of the council. It is a noble procession in which the court, the church, the bench and the field are brilliantly represented in their renaissance costumes. We contemporary theatre-goers require the eye to be flattered, however powerful may be the appeal made to the ear; the former could not be better pleased than by this gaudy scene arranged with the skill they possess here in these matters. Don Pedro is president of the council. When the places are filled the Grand Inquisitor and the prelates present chant a prayer—a bass chorus—which is not only magnificent, but delicately shaded, suited with the sombre religion of these men who held the sword in one hand and the fagot in the other, who knew only our Judge—not our Father which art in Heaven. The prayer is not the accents of piety, but of fanaticism. The masterly touch with which this distinction is made and the magnificence of these rugged appeals (ought not I to say menaces?) to Heaven command great applause. The council discusses in admirable recitatives the fate of Bernard Diaz and his companions. The secular members urge that an expedition of search be sent after them in order that, failing tidings of them, new discoveries might be made. The church shakes its head; it is averse from these lands of which no mention is made in the Bible; who knows if the Evil One does not raise them by infernal magic in order to drag down Christian souls to hell or play some foul trick on children of the church! Are not all the inhabitants of those regions black, and is not this color the devil's livery? Bernard Diaz and his companions are dead, and instead of spending money in searches for them, the best course is to spend the money in founding masses for their souls. The Grand Inquisitor reaches the end of the argument demonstrating these propositions when a weather-beaten, travel-soiled mariner craves admission, as the last survivor of Diaz's expedition. He is ushered in. 'Tis Vasco de Gama. He tells the story of the shipwreck, and ends in a confident tone: "Give me but the requisite vessels and I'll discover a new country which shall pour wealth into Portugal." He supports his assertions by two slaves he purchased in Africa, but were not Africans; they came from the continent he would reach. The slaves are questioned. They refuse to answer. The council bids Vasco de Gama and his slaves retire while it consults. There are three parties in the council: the youthful party full of enthusiasm for the new scheme; the elderly party which likes things to remain as they are; and the ecclesiastical party which sees the Enemy of Mankind in all these new-fangled notions. As Meyerbeer expressed in his prayer the character of the petitioners, so in like masterly manner he portrays in music the effervescence and generosity of youth, the stagnation of age, and the grumbling irritation of the church. His genius always shone with particular brightness in morsels intended to be executed by masses of musicians and its light beams with undiminished splendor in L'Africaine. It was not, be it remembered, his last opera—it was conceived in the warmth of youth and executed in the experience of age. The council rejects Vasco de Gama's plan. He is furious, and his language becomes so intemperate as to draw on him the rigors of the law; the curtain falls on a chorus of anathemas hurled at him. There is but one opinion of this finale of the first act—it is sublime.

We see Vasco de Gama in a dungeon, in the second act. His slaves Selika and Nelusko are with him. He dreams as he sleeps, dreams whispered by his ruling passion. His rest is uneasy. Selika attempts to soothe it by a song of that country—her native land—which he would reach. Indolent as a hammock's motion, amorous as the Orient, gently relaxing as the south wind, it quiets his perturbed spirits. Then she bends over him and kisses his brow. While she gazes on the pale face, she hears approaching steps. Nelusko, armed with a dagger, comes to slay him. Selika forbids the assassination. He obeys, and in an admirable song tells how, notwithstanding his hatred for the pale face, his love for Selika masters his hate. Selika wakens Vasea de Gama. He takes a map traced by himself and plans his voyage, for though in prison and denied the necessary vessels, he still hopes to prosecute his scheme. Doth not Heaven ever temper the wind to the shorn lamb? Selika observes him in silence, and then, seeing the route he traced would lead to his certain destruction, (could she bear to see him she loved lose his life?) she points out the true course his ship must sail. He catches her in his arms and vows he adores her. At this moment, Inez, Don Pedro and their suite enter; she has accepted Don Pedro for her husband in order to obtain Vasco de Gama's liberty. Her breast is wrung by jealousy when she sees Vasco de Gama and Selika locked in each other's arms. He detects it, and to extinguish it makes her a present of Selika and Nelusko. Don Pedro saw Vasco de Gama's plans during the debate before the council and determines to appropriate them in order to reap the honors of discovery. Vasco de Gama is almost heart-broken when he hears this intelligence. Here a sextuor which becomes a septuor is sung, in which Vasco de Gama mourns his twice-blasted hopes; Inez weeps that fortune should ever thwart true love's course; Don Pedro rejoices in the possession of wife and fame; Selika mourns over her miscarried love; Nelusko tells his hatred and his love, etc. It is with this vivid contrast of sentiments, predominant in which is pathos, the second act ends.

The third act transports us out of sight of land; we see the famous vessel (which disappoints expectations) rising and falling on the sea, like a lily on the breast of some sleeping beauty. 'Tis early morning; the age of innocence of the day when the sun scatters gold and purple over the smiling and still unlaborious earth—not those fierce beams shot through the quivering air which goad the field to travail and the trees to fruit. Inez swings in her hammock and thinks of faded times; Selika, humbly at her feet, follows her wandering thoughts now roaming over the past, now dwelling in her native land. The sailors sing a hymn of praise to Heaven which has guarded them and whose continual protection they implore. The women then take up the magnificent chant and in turn crave Heaven's arm. While this solemn scene transpires, Nelusko, leaning against the starboard shrouds, secretly jeers the fools who thank Heaven for a blessing it has not deigned to grant. They protected!—every minute, every fathom is hastening them to destruction. He hates the whole race of pale faces, and the whole shipload of them is doomed to destruction. A change comes over the morning. Clouds appear. The wind rises. The sea labors. Nelusko is chief pilot. Au nord! Tournez au nord!—ou sinon le trépas! he cries to the pilot in a splendid piece of declamation consisting only of these words, with no modulation but an ascending progression, which produces an effect I cannot pretend to describe. Ship is "bouted;" all are delighted and express their joy at being saved in merry song. He checks their premature delight by singing Adamastor's ballad. Adamastor is a giant of the seas. This ballad is as full of sinister presage as the moaning of the ocean when it chafes a vessel's side before the tempest. A drum is heard! Seemingly distant as the Highland bagpipes which Jessie Brown heard during Lucknow's siege. It draws nearer. It is from a vessel bearing Portuguese colors. A boat puts off. It reaches Don Pedro's vessel. Vaseo de Gama climbs up the ship's side. He knew that if Don Pedro followed the indications contained in his, Vaseo's, maps (made before Selika had pointed out the true route) he and Inez would be lost. He obtained a vessel from the king and gave them pursuit. Don Pedro refuses to believe him; suspects sinister designs; orders him to be tied to the main-mast and shot. Inez and Selika intercede in vain for him. "Soldiers obey your orders! Make ready! Take aim!—" At this instant a terrible noise is heard. The vessel has struck on the reef Nelusko designed it should reach; it heels over. Hordes of wreckers and pirates appear and would massacre every body—a gesture of Selika checks them. They recognize their old queen and do her homage.

Act fourth is laid in India. Selika has been reinstated on her throne. All the persons on Don Pedro's vessel have been put to death (it is reported) except Vaseo de Gama. He wanders about the country, delighted to see his dream a reality; but he is to die, for in that land, as in old Japan, the foreigners must die. He expresses his delight in ravishing song, accompanied by tremolos of violins and echoes of horns. Selika's subjects insist on his execution. She saves his life by marrying him. He is for a moment intoxicated with the new land, and with her sings a most amorous duet (Mons. Theopile Gautier calls it the most amorous duet ever sighed upon the stage,) and they go to the nuptial bower. They would be perfectly happy, but for a sigh which seems borne on the wind, from whence no one knows, but which is strangely like Inez' voice. It awakens remorse in Vaseo do Gama's breast.

The fifth act acquaints us with Selika's resolution to restore Vaseo to Inez. She discovers that he still loves Inez. Life has now no charms for Selika, and she determines to seek the Upas tree. We see the Upas tree. It stands alone by the sea shore; a desert is around it. While we gaze on this vacant scene we hear a symphony in the slow measure of a dead march. It consists of only sixteen bars, executed in unison by altos, violoncellos and violins on the fourth string and bassoons. Mons. Theophile Gautier thus describes this symphony: "'Tis of a disquieting, supernatural beauty; of a sonorousness unknown to human ear, and seeming to come from another planet. One is tempted to think it a spirit's sigh, Nature's inarticulate, sympathetic plaint, the sob of the invisible world—what Virgil calls the tears of things. * * * We do not believe a musical phrase ever produced such an impression." Selika appears and bids farewell to life in noble and touching recitative. When she lies down to die, an unseen chorus breathes parting songs, soft and sad as a dying summer's day. The curtain slowly fell. It presently rose. We saw all the actors of the Grand Opera ranged around Meyerbeer's bust, crowned with laurel, and the orchestra played the sixteen bars of the funeral symphony which heralded poor Selika's death.—"Spiridion," in the Boston Gazette.

ALL DIFFICULTIES MAY BE OVERCOME.—There are few difficulties that hold out against real attacks; they fly, like the visible horizon, before those who advance. A passionate desire and unwearied will can perform impossibilities, or what seem to be such to the cold and the feeble. If we do but go on, some unseen path will open upon the hills. We must not allow ourselves to be discouraged by the apparent disproportion between the result of single efforts and the magnitude of the obstacles to be encountered. Nothing good or great is to be obtained without courage and industry; but courage and industry might have sunk in despair, and the world must have remained unornamented and unimproved, if men had nicely compared the effect of a single stroke of the chisel with the pyramid to be raised, or of a single impression of the spade with the mountain to be leveled. All exertion, too, is in itself delightful, and active amusements seldom tire us. Helvetius owns that he could hardly listen to a concert for two hours, though he could play on an instrument all day long. The chase, we know, has always been the favorite pastime of kings and nobles. Not only fame and fortune, but pleasure, is to be earned. Efforts, it must not be forgotten, are as indispensable as desires. It is better to wear out than to rust out. "There will be time enough to repose in the grave," said Nicole to Pascal. In truth, the proper rest for man is change of occupation. As a young man, you should be mindful of the unspeakable importance of early industry, since in youth habits are easily formed, and there is time to recover from defects. An Italian sonnet, justly as well as elegantly, compares procrastnation to the folly of a traveller who pursues a brook till it widens into a river, and is lost in the sea. The toils as well as risks of an active life are commonly over-rated, so much may be done by the diligent use of ordinary opportunities; but they must not always be waited for. We must not only strike the iron while it is hot, but till "it is made hot." Those who have not energy to work must learn to be humble, and should not valuly hope to unite the incompatible enjoyments of indolence and enterprise, of ambition and self-indulgence.

ON one of the northern railroads there is a conductor named S——, a very clever, sociable, gentlemanly man, a great favorite with the company he is connected with, and the travelling public in general—fond of a joke, quick at repartee, and faithful in the discharge of his duties. During the past year, as his train, well filled with passengers, was crossing a bridge over a wide stream some seven or eight feet deep, the bridge broke down, precipitating the two passenger carriages into the stream. As the passengers emerged from the wreck, they were borne away by the force of the current. Our friend S—— had succeeded in catching hold of some bushes that grew near the stream, to which he held for dear life. A passenger, less fortunate, came rushing by. S—— extended one hand, saying: "Your ticket, sir; give me your ticket." You can imagine the effect of such a dry joke in the midst of the water.

AT a recent meeting of a parish, a straight-laced and most exemplary curate submitted a report in writing of the destitute widows and others who stood in need of assistance from the parish. "Are you sure, reverend sir," asked another solemn brother, "that you have embraced all the widows?" He said he believed he had.

AN exquisitely dressed young gentleman, after buying another seal to dangle about his delicate person, said to the jeweller that "he would-ah like to have-ah something engraved on it-ah, to denote what he was." "Certainly, certainly. I will put a cipher on it," said the tradesman.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

MR. GEORGE PAUNCEFORT,

SUPPORTED BY

THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Saturday Evening, July 1st, 1865,

The thrilling Play entitled

The Corsican Brothers!

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,

SATURDAY, July 1st,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

THE CORSICAN BROTHERS!

In rehearsal,

DON CÆSAR DE BAZAN,

ENOCH ARDEN,

And several ORIGINAL PLAYS in preparation.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50 cents
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

NOTICE TO FAMILIES!

WE CALL THE ATTENTION of Housekeepers to our fine assortment of Provisions, Wines, Liquors, etc.:

PROVISIONS.

Coffee, roasted; Green Coffee, all kinds;
Pure Ground Coffee, Choice Teas, Cocoa,
Chocolate, Sugar, all kinds; Flour, Butter,
California Cheese, Italian Cheese, Syrup,
Lard, Barton & Gustier Oils, Olive Oil,
Possel Fils, Spice of all kinds, Pickles,
Pepper, Pepper-sauce, Mustard, all kinds,
Oysters, Lobsters, Pie Fruits, Pine Apples,
Spanish Olives, Fruits au Juis, Brundy Fruits,
Honey, Citron, Peaches, fresh and dry,
Dried Apples, Beans, all kinds, Codfish,
Corn and Oatmeal, Hams and Bacon,
Chile Negro, Maccaroni, all kinds; Farina,
Figs, Jams and Jellies, Raisins, Mackerel,
Yeast powders, Crackers, all kinds;
Coal Oil, Castor Oil, Washing Blue,
Rice, Sardines, Starch, Washing-soda,
Soap, Candles, Clothes Pins and Lines,
Shoe Blacking, Brooms und Brushes, Baskets,
Pails and Cans, Tubs and Wringer,
Carpet Tacks, Almonds, Nuts, etc.

WINES AND LIQUORS FOR FAMILY USE.

Otard, Dupuy & Co.'s Cognac,
L. Delprat & Co.'s Cognac, Old Tom,
Sazerac Brandy, Cognac Pellevoisin,
American Brandy, Scotch Whisky,
Bourbon Whisky, Magnolia Whisky,
Holland Gin, Segars and Tobacco,
Rum, Ale and Porter, in Bottles,
Port Wine, Claret Wine, French;
Claret Wine, California; Currant Wine,
White Wine, California; Ginger Wine,
White Wine, sauterne; Angelica Wine,
Malaga sweet Wine, Madeira Wine,
Muscatel Wine, Leoville Medoc Wine,
Lognac Wine, Chat. Margoux Wine,
Cherry Cordial, Champagne, Cliquot;
Champagne, Heidsiech & Co.; Wine Bitters,
Champagne, Ernest Irroy & Co., Murischino,
Champagne, green seal, Kirschenwasser,
Vermouth, Noilly Pratt & Co.; Schnapps,
Sonoma Champagne, etc., etc., etc., etc.

All of which we offer for sale, by wholesale and retail, at the same figures to be had in first hands. Those wishing to get a

Pure Article of Ground Coffee,

Can have it ground in the mill at our store, in a few moments—Java, Mocha, Rio, and Costa Rica Coffees.

Do not mistake the number the first time you call—531 Washington, a few doors below Montgomery—531—and you will always know where to buy your Provisions hereafter.

Hotel and Restaurant proprietors, and families, will find it greatly to their advantage to examine our Goods and PRICES. All goods warranted, and delivered by our teams throughout the city and suburbs.

Orders from the interior solicited, and promptly filled.

B. SBARBORO & CO.,

Importers and Dealers in Provisions, Liquors and Family Wines, No. 531 Washington street,

Below Montgomery, next door below the "Examiner" Office, San Francisco. (Brick building.) jy1-3m

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST-CLASS HOUSE

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

WHEATLEIGH'S EUREKA THEATRE,

Montgomery street between Pine and California.

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH.....Lessee and Manager.
JAMES DOWLING.....Stage Manager.
RALPH PHELPS.....Treasurer.

Saturday Afternoon and Evening, July 1st,

Will be presented the great Irish sensation Drama, entitled the

COLLEEN BAWN!

In which MR. CHARLES WHEATLEIGH will personate, for the first time, the roles of

MILES NA COPPALEEN

AND

DANNY MANN.

Ann Chute.....Fanny Morgan Phelps
Hardress Cregan (his first appearance) Mr. F. Thorne
Kyrle Daly.....Fred Franks
Father Tom.....Geo. Mitchell
Mr. Corrigan.....J. E. Myers
Hyland Creagh.....J. Torrence, Jr.
Eily O'Connor (with song)...Miss Louise Clarkson
Mrs. Cregan.....Mrs. Judah
Sheluh.....Mrs. Francis Guss

It will be produced with NEW SCENERY, painted by Mr. Torniug.

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,

FOR FAMILIES!

ADMISSION, 50 cents. Children half-price.

In rehearsal, a sprightly Dramatic Sketch, entitled,

JEFF DAVIS IN HOOPS;

OR, THE CONFEDERACY IN THE LAST DITCH.

Dress Circle, $1 00; Parquette, 50 and 25 cents; Private Boxes, $5 00.

Box Office open at 10 o'clock, when Seats can be secured.

DRY GOODS! DRY GOODS!

TAAFFE & CO.

ARE OFFERING AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

THEIR ENTIRE SPRING IMPORTATION OF

FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS!

ALL OF WHICH WERE PURCHASED AT THE

LOW PRICES RULING DURING THE PANIC,

AND WILL BE OFFERED AT

From 20 to 50 per cent. Less than the

PRESENT COST OF IMPORTATION.

SILKS.

In splendid Moire Antique, Watered, Chene, Plain, Plaid, Brocade and Black of every description.

DRESS GOODS,

In Poplins, Mozambiques, Challies, Empress and Ottoman Cloths. Delaines, French, English and American Prints, Ginghams, Organdies, Percales, etc.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS,

Cotton and Linen Sheetings and Shirtings, Superfine Table Linen, Napkins, Towels, Towelling, Blankets, Quilts, Flannels, Lace and Muslin Curtains, and Jaconets; Swiss, Cambric, Mull and Nainsook Muslins, in plain, striped and plaid.

MOURNING GOODS,

Alpaca, Bombazines, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Delaines, Debages, Prints, Ginghams, Crapes, etc.

HOSIERY,

Gentlemen's, Ladies' and Children's Under-Garments, Hose and Half Hose, in Silk, Merino, and Cotton; Gentlemen's Linen and Cotton Shirts, Collars, Cravats, Neckties, etc., etc.

Cloaks, Sacques, Basques and Opera Cloaks,

IN THE LATEST PARIS FASHIONS.

ALSO,

FROM AUCTION:

1,000 dozen Ladies' Cotton Hose, at $3 per dozen;
400 pieces French Print, yard wide, 30 cents;
900 Dress, Plaid, Striped and Plain French Poplins, from from 30 cents to $1 per yard;
600 pieces good Shirting Linens, from 30 to 75 cents per yard;
5,000 Dresses best Merrimac Prints, at $2 per dress;
2,000 dozen Ladies' and Gentlemen's Linen Cambric Handkerchiefs, from $1 50 to $15 per dozen.

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
j 1 Under the Lick House.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.

517

CLAY STREET, BET. SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY.

my27

FOURTH OF JULY PROGRAMME!

FOR THE

Celebration of the Eighty-ninth Anniversary

OF THE

INDEPENDENCE

OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA!

San Francisco, July 4th, 1865.

A Federal salute will be fired by the First California Guard at sunrise, and it is requested that the bells in the city and harbor be rung during the firing.

The various divisions which will compose the Procession, will form under the direction of the Marshal and Assistant Marshals below assigned them, as follows:

The divisions will form at 10 o'clock, A. M.

The First Division will form on Powell street, facing east, the right resting on Filbert street.

The Veterans will form immediately in the rear of the Volunteers—Marshal, Harvey Lake.

The Second Brigade, California Militia, commanded by Brigadier General John Hewston, composing the Second Division, will form on Washington Square.

The Third Division, in carriages, will form on Stockton street, north of Filbert.

The Fourth Division will form on Green street, east and west of Stockton.

The Fifth Division will form on Vallejo street, east and west of Stockton.

The Sixth Division will form on Broadway, east and West of Stockton.

The Seventh Division will form on Pacific street, east and west of Stockton.

The Eighth Division will form on Jackson street, east and west of Stockton.

The Ninth Division will form on Washington street, west of Stockton.

The head of the column will move from the corner of Powell and Filbert at 11 A. M. precisely, and as the rear of each division shall arrive at the right of its successor, that will march into column in the order above named.

The column when formed will be in the following order, preceded by ten mounted policemen.

THE ADVANCE.

C. A. TAYLOR, Grand Marshal.
With Aides as follows:
Alfred Barstow, Chief Aide.

H. M. Newell, F. G. Berry,
Geo. Blake, S. H. Wetherbee,
John McGlynn, W. H. Lyon,
O. Livermore, W. W. Haney,
O. F. Willey, W. H. Davis,
Edw. T. Hall,

Maj. Gen. McDowell and Staff.
Maj. Gen. Allen and Staff.

FIRST DIVISION.

The Troops at the Presidio, Point San Jose and Fort Point, under the command of Col. Thos. F. Wright.
Delegation of Veterans, marshaled by Captain Harvey Lake.

SECOND DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. John Hewston and Staff.
First Regiment, C. M., Col. J. Wood, commanding.
Second (Irish) Regiment, C. M., Col. M. C. Smith.
Sixth (German) Reg., C. M., Col. F. E. G. Tittell.
First Infantry Battalion, C. M., Major Lewis.
First Artillery, C. M., Col. J. W. McKenzie.
First California Guard, C. M., Capt. I. Bluxome, Jr.
First Cavalry, C. M., Major J. H. Marston.

THIRD DIVISION.

R. Chenery, Marshal.
G. Congdon and B. W. Hathaway, Assist. Marshals.
President and Orator of the Day, in carriages.
Chaplain, Poet and Reader of the Day, in carriages.
Foreign Consuls, in carriages.
Foreign Army and Navy Officers, in carriages.
Officers of U. S. Army, in carriages.
Officers U. S. Navy, in carriages.
Federal Officers, in carriages.
Officers Revenue Service, in carriages.
Officers Coast Survey, in carriages.
State Officers, in carriages.
Board of Supervisors, in carriages.
City and County Officers, in carriages.
Board of Education, in carriages.

FOURTH DIVISION.

J. D. Hawks, Marshal.
P. B. Cornwall and A. S. Gould, Assistant Marshals.
Band.
Society of California Pioneers.
Society of Mechanics' Institute.
Olympic Club.
Eureka Typographical Union.

FIFTH DIVISION.

David Scannel, Marshal.
Frank Evans and Chas. D. Connell, Assistants.
Band.
Exempt Firemen.
Active Fire Department.

SIXTH DIVISION.

C. D. Carter, Marshal.
Jacob Deeth and C. M. Levy, Assistant Marshals.
Band.
Butchers' Union Association.
Sons of the Emerald Isle.
Irish American Benevolent Society.
Fenian Brotherhood.
Hibernian Society.

SEVENTH DIVISION.

A. G. Randall, Marshal.
W. M. Newhall and Louis R. Lull, Assistants.
Band.
Social Turn Verien.
Scandinavian Society.
Russian Selavonic Society.
Garibaldi Association.
Mexican Citizens.

EIGHTH DIVISION.

M. E. Hughes, Marshal.
E. A. Rockwell and A. F. C. Engert, Assistants.
Band.
Riggers and Stevedores' Association.
Lumber Dealers' Association.
Trades Union.
Ship and Steamboat Joiners' Association.
Ship Caulkers' Association.
Citizens on foot.
Citizens in carriages.
Citizens mounted.

NINTH DIVISION.

——— ———, Marshal.
Colored People.
Chinamen in carriages.

COLORS.

The Grand Marshal, Purple and Gold.
The Aides to the Grand Marshal, White and Gold.
The Marshals, Scarlet and Silver.
The Assistant Marshals, Blue and Silver.

The Marshals, Assistant Marshals and Aides will assemble at 17 and 18 Montgomery Block, at 9 o'clock on the morning of the Fourth.

The President of the Day, the Orator, Chaplain, Poet and Reader, Foreign Consuls and Officers, Officers of the Army and Navy, Federal Officers, Officers of the Revenue Service and Coast Survey, and State and County Officers, who have accepted invitations to participate in the celebration of the coming anniversary, are requested to assemble in the parlor of the Lick House at 9½ A. M., where a Marshal and Aides will be in attendance to conduct them to the carriages provided.

The Board of Supervisors and Board of Education will assemble in their respective chambers, where Aides will be in attendance with carriages.

LINE OF MARCH.

Washington Square to Stockton street, to Washington, to Montgomery, to Market, to Second, to Howard, to Fourth, to Folsom, countermarch on Folsom to Fourth, to Howard, to Third, to Market, to Montgomery, to the Metropolitan Theatre.

For programme of exercises at the Theatre see daily papers.

The First California Guard will fire a national salute at sunrise, meridian and at sunset. It is requested that the buildings in the city and the vessels in the harbor be decorated with the National Flag during the day.

The Fireworks will be exhibited in the evening, on the corner of Sixth and Howard streets, under the direction of the Board of Supervisors.

jy1-1t C. L. TAYLOR, Grand Marshal.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent. including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7-30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent. per day on a $50 note.
Two cents " $100 "
Ten " " $500 "
20 " " $1,000 "
$1 " " $5,000 "

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,

Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

March 25, 1865. ap29-3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency.

JAY COOKE,

my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No. 7.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 8, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES:
- THE CALIFORNIAN'S Condensed Novelists —By "Bret"
- Answers to Correspondents. — By "Mark Twain."
- Intellectual Moss.—By "Dionysius Vago."
- Interesting Plants —By "Iris."
- The Roman Lottery.
- An Eastern Juggler.
- Intolerance.
- Terrors of the Desert.
- Swearing for a Family.
- The Women of Paraguay.
- The Billy Mulligan Tragedy.

EDITORIALS:
- Distinguished Guests.
- Musical Matters.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

POETRY:
- Petrified Poetry, from the American Flag.
- Down—(April, 1865.)

THEATRICAL TALK:
- The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.
- Theatricals at the East.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:
- Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Chapter XXXIII.
- Summary of Preceding Chapters.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"WE that have free souls, it touches us not."

HAMLET—Act III, Scene 2.

THE Board of Health found Gridley guilty of a misdemeanor, but the Grand Jury would not find a bill against him. Quite right! Lots of people like mutton curry; we do not see why Gridley has not a right to make his pig curry. He said that it was only his own peculiar pig that he fed on dog meat. Noble man! He was going to try the experiment on himself—fiat experimentum in corpore vili—and if he found that puppified pork agreed with him, then he intended to give the public the benefit of his great discovery. The Board of Health lamented that the disclosures concerning Gridley's method of fattening pigs had had a most damaging effect on the pork trade; that, in fact the business was going to the dogs; never since the devils entered into the herd of swine, had the pork butchers received such a blow. We have heard that a subscription is being raised to induce Gridley to emigrate; the pork butchers say he has played the devil with their business, and as long as he is in town it is impossible to sell pork. Even pork-pie hats have gone out of fashion. A millenium has arrived for the dogs; the Dog Star is in the ascendant; no more muzzles; Gridley daren't for the life of him take a dog to the pound lest people should think it is destined for his pigs. We do not justify Gridley; we never did justify Gridley in feeding pigs with parboiled puppies and Indian meal; we do not consider a pig thus fattened would make a good Indian meal, much less a Christian dinner. With regard to dogs before they have undergone a change and become pork, there may be a difference of opinion. In the Sandwich Islands, puppies fed on poë are said to be most delicate and toothsome meat, and are considered a dish fit to set before a king —King Kamahameka III—we suppose the Board of Health of the city of San Francisco would object to board with him. We advise Gridley, his pork business having been destroyed—or materially injured, through prejudice—to import taro from the Sandwich Islands, and devote himself to fattening puppies on poë. In course of time, when the delicacy of the flavor of the meat begins to be properly appreciated, all prejudice against it will vanish, and he will be able to find a much better use for dogs than feeding pigs on them. Every one would, we should imagine, laying all absurd prejudices aside, prefer a nice little puppy which had been fed on nothing but a wholesome vegetable like taro and perhaps a little buttermilk, to a horrid hog which had lived on the garbage of the slaughter house.

SOME people appear to take a delight in disfiguring the English language by coining hideous words. The dramatic critic of the Call deserves to be talked to death by Chinook Indians for making use of the expression "embracive of the entire strength of the company," in speaking of the cast of a play. What did he do it for? Was he too modest to say "embracing the whole company" for fear people might imagine he would like to do so—that is, as regards the feminine portion of it? We protest that he has no right to pervert "embracing" into "embracive of," nor has any other man.

A. COFFIN publishes an advertisement in a morning paper, warning all persons against trusting Joseph A. Coffin, as he will not be responsible for any debts contracted by him. In spite of this notice we know a coffin will take every one in; but no undertaker will trust Joseph for a coffin, for A. Coffin won't pay for it.

AT a late fire a noble act of heroism occurred, which the daily press have neglected to record. A fireman hearing that there was a sack of oysters in a burning building, rushed in, and, at the risk of his life, saved the poor things from being burnt to death.

WE wish to correct a misapprehension which may arise in consequence of the Mercury's stating in its last issue that the celebrated "Twelve" would perform in the brass band march in Faust. Now "The Twelve" are not a brass band, nor are they a brazen band; on the contrary, they are most remarkable for their modesty. Not one of the members ever blows his own horn, not even a French horn. "The Twelve" are a vocal quire; sometimes they are more than twelve, but even then they are not called a ream but only a quire. "The Twelve" depend entirely upon the instruments with which nature has provided them to produce music, and not, as the Mercury would lead people to believe, on instruments of brass; they don't even depend on organs—except their own vocal organs. A pretty figure "The Twelve" would have cut if forced to play that march in Faust; they would never scale the hill of Fame by Faust (English pronunciation) marches. If they ever did transmogrify themselves into a brass band, of course the bassoes, or bassi, would play bassoons, bass drums and trombones; the tenors would perform on cornets and French horns. We are quite satisfied with "The Twelve" as they are, and so are the public when they have an opportunity of hearing them. "The Twelve" is an admirably constituted musical club; it is formed with a firm base and pursues the even tenor of its way under all circumstances. Whether ten or twelve in number it still bears the name of "The Twelve;" it is not a tenor "Twelve," though, be it understood—its fame rests considerably on its bass. Having thus satisfactorily, we hope, explained what "The Twelve" are, perhaps the Mercury will refrain from calling them a brass band. We may remark that "The Twelve" was once a baker's dozen; that was when it had a Judas Iscariot; it however got rid of Judas and has got on well ever since. Success to "The Twelve;" people may talk as much as they like about the "Tuneful Nine," they don't begin to compare with our tuneful twelve.

MESSRS. TRIPP & ROBINSON, Pyrotechnists, advertised for some time before the Fourth of July, that they were "manufacturing pieces appropriate for our recent National calamity." The exhibition on the Fourth proved that they told the truth. Anything more mournful than those fireworks could not well be devised. The rockets had not spirit enough—or powder enough, would perhaps be more correct —to rise in the air; the set pieces spluttered and hissed for a second or two and then expired. We wish Messrs. Tripp & Robinson had not been intent on manufacturing melancholy fireworks. A daily paper offers an apology for these pyrotechnists, saying that but a small sum was paid for the fireworks. Why then did they not, having accepted the contract, give the public quality instead of quantity? Why did they make rockets which committed suicide, before they had attained half the height they should have reached, by bursting their insides out, sickly serpents that had scarcely strength enough to wriggle—symholical of Copperheads no doubt—Roman candles that looked as if they wanted snuffing, wheels that were tired and wouldn't turn round torpid torpedoes, shells that were only half-shells, crackers that had lost their voices and were too weak to wag their tails, blue lights of the most unwholesome hue, and other fireworks which seemed as if they had been wetted down before being let off, and consequently turned out damp failures? Messrs. Tripp & Robinson tripped up most sadly; we have lost all confidence in their squibs and crackers; we hope they will like our little squib.

THE British residents of San Francisco have at length formed a "British Benevolent Society." Britishers are a good deal slower than Americans, but they generally succeed in making things that will last. We imagine from the manner in which this society has been formed that there is no danger of its falling to pieces. William Lane Booker, Esq., has been elected President, and Thomas F. Hulbert, Secretary. It is curious that the English should have been the last nationality in California to form themselves into an association of this kind, and as a proof that they are the least "clannish" of any people in the world. They do not need to club together to preserve their nationality in a foreign country; every Englishman is an Englishman always, even if he does not associate with his countrymen. Cælum non animum mutant qui trans mare currunt, is especially applicable to the Englishman, except that he often, when he does take a run across the sea, changes his mind and runs back again, believing his own foggy sky to be the brightest in the world. The British Benevolent Society is sure to flourish, now it has been brought into existence, and will no doubt accomplish much good.

THE editor of the Dramatic Chronicle, in order to prove that he is not a "grammaniac," and to show his contempt for that sort of thing, in describing an occurrence at the Academy of Music, makes use of the following expression:

"The broken piece of the sword, which should have fell on the stage, flew among the audience, just grazing the head of a gentleman in the parquet and frightening a number of others."

This may be very good American, but it is certainly not good English.

ALL the papers in the State are publishing the following ridiculous paragraph:

"How to keep on good terms with your creditors—pay them."

Nonsense! If you pay them they are no longer creditors. Pay them and they lose all interest in your welfare; while you continue to owe them money they are anxious about your health and prosperity. During the late war many a tradesman perused the list of killed and wounded with the most intense anxiety, fearing to read in it the name of young Adolphus Fitz Perkins. How they trembled for his safety when they saw that his regiment was ordered into action, and how gladly they welcomed him when, the war over, he came marching home! If he had paid all his little bills before he went to the war, would they thus have watched his glorious career? Not they. Heaven only knows how many prayers for his safety reached there from tailors, bootmakers and proprietors of dry-goods stores while he was fighting the battles of his country. The man who has creditors can never be without well wishers. Don't pay your creditors if you wish to keep on good terms with them. If you pay them you destroy them, you break the ties which bind them to you. No; pay them a little, from time to time; keep on paying them, and thus you will keep on good terms with them. A pleasure anticipated is always greater than the reality. They anticipate the payment in full of what you owe them and draw pleasure from that anticipation; do not rob them of it. Keep on good terms with your creditors and keep your creditors, so, when you at length pay the debt of nature, you will be sure of leaving behind you a few, at least, who sincerely mourn your loss.

CONFOUND that correspondent of the Scientific American, who advised people to boil their clocks! His advice on the subject is as follows:

"Rough as this treatment may appear, it works well; and I have for many years past boiled my clocks whenever they stopped from accumulation of dust or a thickening of oil upon the pivots. They should be boiled in pure or rain water, and dried on a warm stove or near the fire."

He may boil his clocks if he pleases, but if he possess any feeling at all, he will, we hope, regret the publication of this paragraph when he learns the effect of it on one juvenile mind, and the mischief it caused in one household. The other day, Andrew Jackson Washington Clay, the son of the lady who keeps the boarding house where the present writer administers to the wants of his poor perishable body, collected all the watches on which he could lay his hands, and boiled them for the space of an hour and a half! The young wretch, when remonstrated with, produced the article referred to, said he had only boiled those watches of which he had heard the owners remark that they wanted cleaning, and he considered that clocks and watches, being a good deal alike, the treatment that was good for the one would be equally applicable to the other. He recommended the water in which he had boiled the watches to be used for soup, as, with the addition of a little mutton, a soup might be made and a saving in herbs be effected, for the water must have acquired quite a flavor of time (thyme.)

WE hope that those who refused to turn out in the procession on the Fourth of July because the colored people had "accepted with humble thankfulness" the invitation to participate, extended to them by the committee of arrangements, have become, on reflection, heartily ashamed of themselves; if they are not, they ought to be. On the day on which the obsequies of the late President Lincoln took place, thousands of white men walked in procession with all the negroes in San Francisco, no one on this occasion appeared to feel himself degraded by such association. The negro was allowed to mourn with us without a single voice being raised to protest against being forced to "walk with niggers." The martyred Lincoln was laid in the tomb; the negro and the white man mingled their tears at the grave of him who had fallen a victim to the great principle, dear to all men, whether their skins be black or white—FREEDOM. The day of rejoicing came, the day on which Americans rejoiced that they were freed from despotic rule; the black man humbly exclaimed, "Now I also am free! May I not rejoice with you?" Poor negro! For eighty-eight long years the Birthday of Freedom had been nothing to him. Now at length he had gained his freedom. He had fought for it side by side with the white man; shoulder to shoulder they had stormed the deadly breach, their blood had mingled as it sank in the soil of many a battlefield. Might he not now rejoice? He would with humble thankfulness walk last, the very last if so the white men wished it. "No," was the surly answer from hundreds of free and enlighted citizens. "You may fight with us, serve as a shield for white men, ward off the deadly bullets which would else reach hearts hearts. You may mourn with us but you shall have no part in our rejoicings."

SLAVERY being now forever abolished in the United States, we ought to get rid of Mason and Dixon's line. Let it be cut up into short lengths to hang traitors with.

TREM.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS PUBLISHED.

Ensign Harcourt Lowther, a gentleman of culture, and Francis Tredethlyn, the hero, (the son of a Cornish farmer,) a soldier in the same regiment, who is detailed as a confidential servant to Ensign Lowther, have been stationed in Van Diemen s Land for five years. In boyhood Tredethlyn had fallen in love with his rich uncle's only child, "cousin Susy," and a secret engagement had taken place between them, which was afterwards broken off, and he enlisted. Although he had written frequently to his cousin he had received no response or any intelligence from home, until the story opens with the reception of information of the death of his miserly uncle and his inheritance of thirty thousand pounds a year. He departs for England to take possession of his inheritance.

Upon his arrival in England, his first action is a vain attempt to find his cousin Susan, who had been forbidden her father's house in a moment of stormy passion, to divide his fortune with her. His monied influence gains him an introduction into the family and social circle of Lionel Hillary, an apparently wealthy merchant, whose family consists of his only daughter, Maude, and her friend and companion, Miss Julia Desmond, both cultivated and prepossessing young ladies. Tredethlyn soon becomes enamored with Maude, though the consciousness of his social inferiority causes him to hide his passion and endeavor to subdue it. Dazzled and flattered by his new position, he is made an easy victim to the designs of Miss Desmond, who sees in his fortune an incentive to the exertion of all her arts with a view to a matrimonial alliance that will at once free her from her situation of dependency, and give her wealth and position. An avowal and declaration is forced from Tredethlyn at a designed interview, by the artful Miss Desmond, and they are engaged.

A panic now occurs in the mercantile affairs of Lionel Hillary, and ruin stares him in the face. His daughter, noticing his changed manners and sleepless nights, watches him, and prevents him from committing suicide; winning from him the avowal that twenty thousand pounds are immediately required to save him from failure, disgrace and poverty. She seeks the frank, good-hearted Tredethlyn, and, in an impassioned manner, appeals to him to rescue her father from his situation. This interview brings forth an equally impassioned declaration from Tredethlyn of his love for her, of his conscious unworthiness, and his willingness to bestow the whole of his fortune for her benefit, if necessary.

Miss Hillary is surprised, shocked and offended by this avowal, and is about retiring in anger, when Miss Desmond, who has overheard enough to obtain a clew to the purport of the interview, enters; charges Maude with mercenary motives in supplanting her, and Tredethlyn with infidelity, and declares all is cancelled between him and herself. Miss Desmond leaves the house early next morning without an explanation. Tredethlyn attempts an apology to Maude, who refuses to listen to him. He, disgusted by the troubles his fortune and new position have environed him with, determines to estrange himself from them and fly to London. The next day twenty thousand pounds are placed to the credit of Lionel Hillary at his banker's, from an anonymous source. The merchant is all gratitude; points to Tredethlyn as his benefactor, and speaks of him in the warmest terms to his daughter.

Tredethlyn seeks again in vain for his cousin Susan, though he learns she has been entrapped into a mock marriage by a villain, who deserted her, and that she then fled to London. Subsequently new meshes are thrown around our hero by the designing Lionel Hillary; ten thousand pounds more are obtained from him, and he is admitted a silent partner in the house of Hillary & Co. Maude, who was betrothed to Ensign Harcourt Lowther—Tredethlyn's old master—before he left England, is commanded by her father to break off all correspondence with him and to look with favor upon an alliance with Tredethlyn. A chance encounter occurs, and Maude's amiability paves the way for a new hope and a new declaration. Acceptance and marriage speedily follow.

Just previous to the marriage, Ensign Harcourt Lowther returns from Van Diemen's Land, and seeks an interview with Maude, only to learn from her own lips the story of her forced engagement. Learning the name of the affianced, he tells her of the old relation of master and man, and makes Maude pledge him not to reveal to Tredethlyn the secret of their earlier love and engagement. Nettled and stung by his jealousy and pride, he plans a cultured and villainous revenge. After the marriage occurs and Tredethlyn and wife have become engrafted into the fashionable circles of London, he seeks him out and instals himself into the graces of the young Cornishman, and becomes his inseperable companion and mentor, leading him gradually into (for Tredethlyn) the dangerous confines of vice and dissipation and widening more und more the gulf between him and Maude, who had become the "sensation," the leading fashionable wife of London, whos sparties, receptions and dinners were notable for their extravagance.

Maude one day encountered Miss Julia Desmond, who is occupying the position of governess, seeks her forgiveness and tenders her a home. Julia, still rankling with jealous passion, refuses the offer, except as a hired companion. Maude humors her foible, but insists on her promising to come as a "friend." Envy and jealousy urging Julia to seek a proper opportunity to become avenged, she dissembles and accepts.

Tredethlyn, sickened by the constant round of gay and dissipated life, is withdrawn from the dangerous highways by the discovery of his cousin, whom he encounters one night as a supernumerary of one of the London theatres. He seeks an interview, with the determination of bestowing on her a portion of that fortune, which his innate convictions have always told him should have been hers.

Harcourt Lowther continues his daily visits to the house of Tredethlyn, and is constantly poisoning the wife's mind by noting the husband's absence and inventing excuses for him with the mock morality of a "Joseph Surface" Tredethlyn has a secret which calls him frequently from town during the day, which excites Lowther's curiosity, but his efforts to discover it are fruitless. The greater portion of Tredethlyn's time, however, is spent in the old way, with cards, at the race-track, and in dissipation, under Lowther's guidance.

Roderick Lowther, the elder brother of Harcourt Lowther, and much like him in appearance and character, prepossessing, cool, calculating and unscrupulous—a member of the corps diplomatique at Belgium—returns to England on a three months' leave of absence, and becomes domiciled with Harcourt. He announces his intention of seeking a good pecuniary match and marrying to secure the approval of an old maiden aunt, whose fortune he expects to inherit. He soon fathoms his brother's schemes, promises his assistance in their furtherance, and asks Harcourt to aid his own. He is introduced into the house of Mrs. Tredethlyn, and there meets Miss Grunderson, a young lady of ordinary appearance and intellect, but an heiress.

Roderick at once perceives that the most feasible way to make an impression upon Miss Grunderson, (who has frequently been courted for her wealth, and is somewhat suspicious of motives,) is to appear eminently disinterested, and rather skeptical, withal, relative to the desirableness of the matrimonial condition. Pursuing this line of policy, he is successful. He next visits his aunt to propitiate her favor. Harcourt Lowther finds Tredethlyn no longer a willing instrument in his hands, but discovers a clue to the mystery that so long has baffled him, in a tradesman's bill for goods and furniture supplied at Brook Cottage, Petersham, the bill having been carelessly left by Tredethlyn in his study.

A pleasure party, consisting of Harcourt Lowther, Mrs. Tredethlyn, Roderick Lowther, Rosa Grunderson and Julia Desmond visit Petersham; Harcourt contrives to give the party a view of Francis Tredethlyn in company with a woman seated very lovingly "under a mulberry tree" near a cottage; he intimates that he has made a discovery which causes him the worst apprehensions.

Mrs. Tredethlyn, agitated and angry, demands the name of her husband's companion. He protests his inability to inform her; accuses Tredethlyn of infidelity; refers to their own former happiness, and regrets her present unfortunate situation, a fate which, he declares sadly, he has been unable to avert, Francis having, despite his counsel, given himself up to dissipation. She thanks him for his frankness, and accepts his statements as true.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

ROSA'S REVELATION'S.

AFTER this there was no more said between Harcourt Lowther and Mrs. Tredethlyn upon the subject of her husband's delinquencies. They walked slowly back to the stile, where Julia was sitting as patiently as if she had been that monumental patience of whom the poet had told us. There is something wonderfully expressive in natural pantomime; and Miss Desmond, sitting on that rustic stile, tracing figures from Euclid on the dusty pathway under her feet, with the ivory point of her parasol, had yet contrived to keep a sharp watch upon those two people on the other side of the meadow, and to form a tolerably clear idea as to the gist of their conversation.

"Julia, dear," Maude said, wearily, as they walked to the riverside, "would you mind going back to town as soon as we can get to the carriage? I have such an intolerable headache that I'm sure I shall be quite unfit to dine with papa."

Of course Julia declared that dining in London, or at the Cedars, was equally indifferent to her. It was very often her humor to affect the dull, characterless manner of a paid dependent; and it was her humor to do so just now.

"I am afraid Mr. Lowther and I have kept you waiting an unconscionable time," said Maude, looking at her watch.

"Not at all," replied Miss Desmond; "I rather like waiting."

Roderick Lowther and Miss Grunderson were loitering at the little landing-stage; the young lady's showy draperies looking pre-Raffaelite in the sharp edges which she exhibited against the hot blue sky.

"Oh, you darling Mrs. Tredethlyn!" exclaimed Rosa; "I thought you never were coming. If your 'pa is half as particular about his dinner as mine is, won't he be cross with us all? Its close upon seven o'clock!"

Maude looked piteously at Harcourt Lowther. He understood that appealing glance.

"I have given Mrs. Tredethlyn a violent headache, by putting her in an awningless boat under a broiling sun," he said, "and then beguiling her into a fatiguing walk, and I deserve to be horsewhipped for my stupidity. If you have any regard for your friend's health, Miss Grunderson, you will forego the pleasure of dining with Mr. Hillary, and get her home as quietly as you can."

Rosa Grunderson might be silly, but she was by no means stupid; and, looking at Maude's ashen face, she saw that something more than a headache had caused the change in her friend. She saw this, and that vague distrust which she felt about the brother of the man she adored shaped itself into a positive dislike.

"That Mr. Lowther has been saying something to annoy her," thought Miss Grunderson; "and I hate him. What business has he to be always dancing attendance upon her instead of her husband? And now he's not content with getting her talked about, so he must needs go and make her unhappy, poor darling!"

Thus mused the meditative Rosa, while Roderick Lowther rowed her homeward over the placid water. The diplomatist's fascinations were almost thrown away upon her during this brief journey from Richmond to the Cedars, although he had progressed so far in Miss Grunderson's affections, during a leisurely promenade on the terrace, that he had serious thoughts of calling on Grunderson père, within the week, to make a formal offer for the young lady's hand and fortune.

"I have no idea of wasting my time and trouble upon the girl, to find myself thrown out at the last moment by an impracticable parent," thought Roderick, as he shot through the water with that long, deliberate stroke, for which the Oxonians are celebrated. "I must know exactly where I am, before I devote myself to the plump Rosa. There must be no nonsense about settlements, and so forth. I won't have any legal brick wall and chevaux de frise between me and my wife's fortune. A man doesn't quarter a cabbage with the arms of the oldest untitled family in Hampshire without getting well paid for the humiliation. I must understand what I'm going in for, when I propose to my charming Rosa."

Lionel Hillary was in the drawing-room when the water-party returned to the Cedars; but he accepted his daughter's assurance that she was too tired and too ill to dine with him, and escorted her to her carriage as soon as it was ready for her. Maude was quite composed now, and there was no suspicion of the truth aroused in the merchant's mind when he kissed her, and bade her good-by.

"It was foolish of you to go on the water in the hottest part of the day, darling," he said; "and I'm afraid you're going out a little too much in town; but the season will soon be over, and I suppose you will soon be leaving London."

Mrs. Tredethlyn murmured something unintelligible, and the barouche rolled away. She saw her father and the two Lowthers, standing on the broad stone steps, dimly through a mist, athwart which the group seemed only a confusion of familiar faces and dark garments, and then she found herself driving Londonward through the still evening, with Julia by her side and Rosa'a anxious face opposite to her.

She accepted unquestioningly all that Harcourt Lowther had told her. Her husband was false to her. There was so much in Francis Tredethlyn's life since since his marriage which seemed an evidence of his accuser's truth. And then Harcourt had not wished to accuse. The cruel revelation had been extorted from him. No trouble that Maude had ever yet endured had been so bitter as that which had come upon her to-day—the shame, the humiliation, the unutterable horror of that discovery, made in the summer sunshine, amidst the perfume of flowers, the joyous caroling of a skylark, high up in the warm, blue sky. She did not love her husband, and the agony which gnawed her breast during this homeward journey was the sharp pang which belongs to to wounded pride rather than to betrayed affection. At least this was what she said to herself, as she remembered, with an angry flush upon her brow, those sneering remarks of Mr. Lowther's about her love for such a man as Francis Tredethlyn.

"I do believe he loved me once, let Harcourt Lowther say what he will, and he was nobly generous to my father; and now he deserts me altogether, and devotes himself to some horrible woman!" thought Mrs. Tredethlyn, whose ideas were not particularly sequential this evening.

She meditated upon so much as she knew of the life that Francis had led since the close of his honeymoon. His late hours, his frequent absences, all seemed to confirm Harcourt's account of dissipated habits and degraded tastes.

Yes, everything combined to prove the miserable truth; She was a neglected wife, abandoned by the man who had once seemed the veriest slave that ever bowed beneath the supreme dominion of love. She remembered what he had been, or what she had believed him to be, and was all the more indignant with him for the discoveries of the day. Rosa Grunderson, anxiously wathing Mrs. Tredethlyn in the twilight, wondered that so dark a cloud could overshadow the fair face of her friend.

"It must be something very dreadful," thought Rosa; "but whatever it is, that Mr. Lowther is at the bottom of it. If Roderick does propose—which I've every reason to think he will, from the way he conducted himself on the terrace—and he and 'pa can come to any arrangement about me, I won't have much to do with my brother-in-law, that's certain, for I hate him. But, I dare say, those horrid ground-rents will always stand in the way of my being married to anybody but a Rothschild; and Rotbschilds don't trouble themselves about ground-rents."

The drive from Twickenbam to Stuccoville is not a very long one, and Mrs. Tredethlyn's bays got over the ground at a pace that did credit to the judgment of Mr. Lowther who had chosen the animals for his friend. It was nearly nine o'clock when the barouche drew up before the Doric colonnade which imparted a funereal darkness to Maude's dining-room; and before the three ladies could alight, a handsome cab dashed up to the curbstone, a pair of slamming doors were flung open, and Francis Tredethlyn sprang out upon the pavement.

His wife's face flushed crimson, and then grew deadly pale. She turned to Rosa Grunderson, and murmured in faint, broken accents:

"Will you dine with us, Rosa, or shall Martin drive you home?"

"Thank you, darling," Miss Grunderson answered promptly; "I think I'll come in for just a few moments. Pa will have gone to the Bell and—to his club by this time," added Rosa, whose parent was wont to pass his evenings in the parlor of a very respectable tavern in the Brompton road, where he and several other worthies assembled nightly to discuss the affairs of the nation amidst the fumes of their cigars, the primitive clay being strictly tabooed in that select little coterie.

Maude alighted and entered the hall. Francis had handed her from the carriage, and followed her into the house. He threw away his cigar as he stepped into the hall, and approached his wife, radiant with good spirits and perfumed with tobacco.

"I'm so glad you've come," he said. "I thought you were going to dine with the Governor. and that I should have to sit in that dreary room all by myself, with only Landseer's staghounds to keep me company; though if half the people one calls company were as much alive as they are, a dinner party wouldn't be such a dismal business as it is. Of course you haven't dined: no more have I; and unfortunately there doesn't seem to be any dinner," added Mr. Tredethlyn, as he opened the door and looked into the dining-room, where the table was blank and ghastly under a faint glimmer of gas. "No one was expected, I suppose? However, they can get us something. Geoffreys, just see about dinner, will you? How do you do, Miss Grunderson? I dare say you're hungry after your drive. Are you going up-stairs, Maude?"

"Yes," answered Mrs. Tredethlyn. The syllable had a startling effect as it fell from her lips, like one solitary drop of hail falling suddenly on a summer day.

"I am going up-stairs," said Miss Desmond, confidentially, to Rosa; "will you come with me, and take off your things?"

"No, thanks, dear," answered Miss Grunderson, who would have endured tortures rather than say "thank you," when fashion required that she should say "thanks." "I don't think I will take off my things. Mrs. Tredethlyn doesn't seem very well; and it's almost too late for dinner; so I think I'll just go up to the morning-room, and rest for a few minutes before I go home. The carriage needn't be kept, you know, please," added Miss Grunderson, to a male domestic hovering in the shadowy depths of the hall: "for I can have a cab fetched when I want to go.

Mr. Tredethlyn had followed his wife to the drawing-rooms; and the two girls standing at the foot of the staircase heard one of the doors close with a sonorous bang.

Miss Desmond went upstairs, and Miss Grunderson followed slowly. The morning-room of which Rosa had spoken was on the second floor; but the young lady did not go any further than the first landing-place. The door of the front drawing-room was closed, but the door of the back drawing-room stood wide open; and peering into the lighted apartment, Rosa saw that it was quite empty. She paused for a moment, looked about her, and then went quietly into the back drawing room, and closed the door very softly behind her.

Francis Tredethlyn followed his wife to the drawing-room because that one frozen syllable, together with the strange expression of her face, had been quite enough to tell him that something was wrong. This husband and this wife had never quarreled. There had been between them none of those little stormy passages which are apt to interrupt the serenity of the best-regulated households; and the Cornishman's heart turned cold with the thought that anything like ill-feeling could arise between himself and Maude. The altered expression of her face boded so much; and yet what could arise to displease her, when he was nothing but her devoted slave, ready to obey her commands, willing to lay down his very life for her pleasure?

"Maude," he said, as he closed the drawing-room door; "you speak to me and look at me as if you were offended. And yet I have no consciousness of having done anything to displease you."

Mrs. Tredethlyn looked at her husband with supreme contempt; not the cool scorn which is akin to indifference, but rather a passionate disdainfulness. Taking into consideration the fact that Maude did not care for her husband, all this feminine rage seemed a sad waste of feeling.

"Do not add hypocrisy to the wrong that you have done me," said Mrs. Tredethlyn. "I have been most cruelly awakened this day to a knowledge of the life you have been leading ever since our marriage. I cannot speak of this subject; it is too horrible; I think the words would choke me. I thought that I should have been able to write what I had to tell you; but since I have been so unfortunate as to meet you, I may as well say with my own lips what I meant to have said in a letter. It is very little. I have only to tell you that from this moment we must be strangers to each other. After my discoveries of to-day, I should consider myself a base and degraded creature if I ever suffered your hand to touch mine in friendship again. The obligation of my father's debt to you must rest upon him henceforward, and not upon me."

"But, Maude, explain yourself!—your discovery of to-day, you say! What discovery?"

"Your affectation of unconsciousness is a deeper insult than your— No, I will not discuss this subject with you!" cried Maude, passionately. "It is shameful—it is cruel—that I should have been wronged so basely, when I trusted you so completely. Do not speak to me; do not touch me!" she exclaimed, shrinking away from him with a shudder; "your presence inspires me with disgust and abhorrence. Why do you make any poor pretence of inhabiting this house, which has only afforded you an ostensible shelter, while your amusements and your friends have been found elsewhere? I set you free from this hour, Mr. Tredethlyn. Seek for happiness, after your own fashion; where you please. I have nothing more to say to you."

She swept from the room before her husband could arrest her. Unspeakably bewildered by her passionate words, which were almost meaningless to him, Francis Tredethlyn stood motionless as a statue a few paces from the doorway by which his wife had just left him. He was standing thus when the voluminous curtains which were drawn across the archway between the drawing-rooms were cautiously divided, and a plump little figure in blue muslin appeared among the amber drapery. The Cornishman heard the rustling, and turned abruptly toward the portiere.

"Yes," exclaimed Miss Grunderson; "it's me; no, it's I! but, goodness gracious! what does it matter about grammar, when there's so much trouble in the world?—yes, and I've been listening," continued the young lady, answering Mr. Tredethlyn's inquiring stare; "and I know that listening in a general way is considered mean; but I think the amount of 'pa's ground-rents ought to exempt me from any imputation of meanness. If I didn't love that sweet lamb so dearly; and if I hadn't a very sincere regard for you, Mr. Tredethlyn—having come into money suddenly myself, and knowing how trying it is to carry it off carelessly, and not look as if one was always conscious of being richer than other people; if I didn't—in short, I shouldn't have stopped behind those curtains, and run the risk of being considered a sneak and a listener. But do say that you forgive me, please, and believe that I meant it for the best?" pleaded Rosa, whose diction was apt to become rather obscure under the influence of excitement.

"What, in Heaven's name, does it all mean, Miss Grunderson?" asked Francis, piteously.

He was ready to cling to the frailest spar by which he might float on the wide ocean of perplexity, whose billows had so suddenly encompassed him.

"Goodness gracious knows—I don't any more than the dead, though if there is anything in drawing-tables balancing themselves on tiptoe, and greatcoats flying about the room like awkward birds, the dead may know more than we give them credit for," exclaimed the lively Rosa, without a single stop; "but it's very certain there is something wrong, and whatever it is, that Mr. Lowther is at the bottom of it."

"Harcourt Lowther?"

"Yes. My 'pa hears a great deal of gossip at the Bell and —at clubs, and such places; and he always tell me everything he hears. And oh, Mr. Tredethlyn, if you knew how long I have wished to speak my mind to you, I am sure you would forgive me for listening just now."

"My dear Miss Grunderson, what could you have to say to me?" asked the bewildered Cornishman.

"Oh, lots of things. But then you know the grand maxim in society is that you mustn't speak your mind. It's like that Latin person's rule of "nil thingamy;" you mustn't admire anything, you know, and so on. And one must unlearn all one's catechism, about loving one's neighbor as one's self, and doing unto others as one would they should—which always reminds me of a winter Sunday afternoon at school and broken chilblains, because one did break while I was saying it. And you see in society the thing is to let your neighbor go his way, and to go yours, and to say, 'Bless my soul! exactly as I anticipated; paw creatchaw!' if your neighbor tumbles over a precipice, from which it would be the very worst of bad manners to hold him back; and in society, if you saw the good Samaritan—no, the other person—lying wounded in the road, it would be a dreadful incon—what's its name?—to pick him up and take him to an inn and pay for his lodging, because he might call you to account for your impertinent officiousness as soon as he got well. So, though I've been bursting to speak my mind almost ever since I've known you, Mr. Tredethlyn, I've held my tongue until to-night; but to-night the climax has come, and I must speak. Oh, you poor dear thing!" cried Rosa, in a sudden outburst of sympathy, "how you and your wife have been talked about!"

"Talked about!—by whom, when and where?"

"By everybody, always, everywhere. You don't know—though you ought to know, if you ever listened to what was going on around you—how people do talk. They've talked about your dissipation, the hours you have kept, the places you have been seen at, the people you have been seen with; about your coming home in hansom cabs in the middle of the night; and I think if quieter vehicles could be invented for people who stay out late, or at least the doors made to open differently, there wouldn't be so much scandal. They've talked about your getting tipsy!" exclaimed Rosa, shaking her head solemnly, and laying a tremendous stress upon the obnoxious word; "and they've said you were drinking yourself into an early grave, and that Harcourt Lowther was leading you on to your death, in order that he might marry your wife afterward."

"Harcourt lead me—to my death—and—marry Maude! Oh, no, no, no; it is too horrible!" gasped Francis, staring at Miss Grunderson, with his head clasped in his hands, and big beads of perspiration upon his brow.

"I know it is," answered Rosa; "but they say it; and you must own it was not a wise thing for you to be so very intimate with a man who was engaged to your wife before you married her."

"Engaged to my wife! Who was engaged to my wife?"

"Why, Harcourt Lowther, of course! Did you not know all about it?"

"No; so help me Heaven!"

Miss Grunderson looked very grave. All that she had said had been spoken in perfect good faith; but, all at once, she began to see that mischief might come of this free utterance of her thoughts.

"I thought you knew it," she stammered, in considerable confusion, "or I'm sure I should never have said a word about—"

"How did you come to know it?" asked Francis, turning fiercely upon the terrified Rosa.

"Miss Desmond told me."

"It is a lie, a malicious lie, invented by Julia Desmond!"

"I dare say it is something in the way of a story," responded Miss Grunderson, who was very anxious to extinguish the sudden conflagration which her unconscious hand had fired; "people do tell such stories, you know; not that I think Miss Desmond would speak so positively unless —but I'm sure if Mrs. Tredethlyn was ever engaged to Mr. Lowther, she had quite forgotten him when she married you; only, if it is so, I don't think it was quite honorable of him to be so friendly with you without telling you all about it."

Thus Miss Grunderson—floundering helplessly in a conversational quagmire—endeavored to undo any mischief which her indiscretion might have made. But Francis was not listening to her; he was thinking of all his life during the last year, and a host of trifling circumstances recurred to his mind, in evidence against the wife he had loved and the friend he had trusted.

"Yes," he thought, as he sank moodily down into the nearest chair, and covered his face with his hands, as heedless of Miss Grunderson's presence as if that young lady had been one of her father's cabbages; "yes, it is no lie of Julia Desmond's. A hundred recollections arise in my mind to bear witness to its truth. Maude's confession about the some one whom she had loved, but whose poverty was a hindrance to a marriage with her; Harcourt Lowther's letters from that beautiful heiress, whose father's wealth stood between him and happiness. I knew that they had known each other before he sailed for Van Diemen's Land; but I believed him implicitly when he told me casually one day that they had never been more than the most indifferent acquaintances. He had a careless, half-contemptuous way of talking of my wife that galled me to the quick, and that I have sometimes resented. Fool and dupe that I was! That affected cynicism, that pretended indifference, was only a part of his scheme. He loved her all the time; and while with one hand he pushed me away from her into the drunken orgies that only kill a little more slowly than the secret doses of the assassin, with the other he held fast the chain that bound him to her; waiting till he should be able to say. 'You are free, and I claim the fulfillment of your broken promise. You are enriched by the poor dupe who loved you, and poverty need separate us no longer.' O God of heaven! what a fool I have been; and how clearly I can see my folly, now when it is too late! False wife, false friend! so deeply, fondly loved, so blindly trusted. I can remember my wife's face the day she spoke to me of Harcourt Lowther. Has she been in the base plot against me? No, I will not believe it. If I have been this man's blind dupe, his helpless tool, she may have been as blind, as helpless as myself. O God, give me strength to trust her still, for my heart must break if she is base and cruel!"

A man's ideas are not apt to arrange themselves very consecutively at such a time; but it was something after this fashion that Francis Tredethlyn reflected upon his friend's treachery, while Rosa stood by watching him very anxiously, with that fiery eagerness which prompted her to speak her mind considerably cooled down by the aspect of her companion's distress.

"Miss Grunderson," said Francis, presently, "whatever the world may have said against Harcourt Lowther, it is a false and lying world if it ever slandered the goodness and purity of my wife."

"I know that," answered Rosa, becoming energetic once more; "for of all the sweet darlings that ever were, she's the sweetest and the dearest. And how should she know that people made nasty disagreeable remarks about Mr. Lowther's always happening to go to the parties she went to, and calling here oftener than other people, and so on—"

"He went to parties!" cried Francis. "He told me that he hated parties; that he scarcely went anywhere."

"Ah, but he did, though; and it has been his flirting way —not the things he has said, you know; but his way of saying them; his ompressmong, you know, that has caused those ill-natured remarks about Mrs. Tredethlyn. Nothing sets people talking like ompressmong.

Francis did not answer. Little by little the mists cleared away from his mental vision; and he saw that Harcourt Lowther had been from first to last the subtilest schemer who ever plotted the ruin of an honest blockhead. It had needed Miss Grunderson's ad-captandum assertion to let sudden light into the cavernous depths of the deepest pitfall that ever treachery dug under the ignorant footsteps of its victim. Francis remembered all the bitter ridicule, the sneering compassion, that Harcourt Lowther had heaped upon the respectable world, from which he held his dupe aloof, while he plunged him to the very lips in the dissipations of Bohemia. By this means he had effected as complete a separation between the husband and wife as if the same roof had ceased to shelter them.

"I had thought—when my tempter gave me time to think —that it was Maude's coldness alone which separated us; but I know now that it was the schemer's work from first to last. She did not love me—O Heaven—she loved him perhaps: but I might have had some little chance of winning her love if I had remained at her feet—her slave, her worshiper; but he has held me away from her, and now she abhors me. She has no feeling but disgust and disdain for the wretch who has abandoned her to waste his days on a race-course, his nights in the drunken orgies of a gaming-house."

Francis Tredethlyn sat with his face hidden in his hands, thinking of his folly, and hating himself for it. Why had he given himself up body and soul into the power of Harcourt Lowther? why had he been so poor a dupe in the toils of this man? It was not that he had entertained any special regard for the gentleman who had pretended to be his friend. In Van Diemau's Land he had often good reason to despise the peevish grumbler, the selfish Sybarite; and yet for the last year he had taken the man's dictum upon every subject, even that one vital question on which the happiness of his life depended. Why had he trusted so blindly; why had he submitted so slavishly to follow the guiding-strings that led him into places where he found no pleasure, among people who inspired him with disgust?

Little by little the answers to these questions shaped themselves in Francis Tredethlyn's mind; and he saw that his uncle Oliver's hoarded wealth had been at the root of all his misery. The wealth which had lifted him suddenly into a world which had been strange to him; the wealth which had made him the mark of every schemer; the wealth which had won him the hand of the woman whose heart could never have been won by his true and honest love. Adrift in that strange world, the man who had kept his name unsullied, his soul untainted, his head erect before the faces of his fellow-men, while his pockets were empty, and his very existence dependent upon the day's work that earned him a day's food, found himself all at once the most helpless creature that had floated at the mercy of the winds and waves upon a trackless ocean; and he had been very glad to grasp the first rope that was thrown out to him in all friendly seeming to guide him safely to the shore. His ignorance had flung him, unarmed and powerless, into Harcourt Lowther's arms; and the man to whom he had felt himself superior while blacking his boots and obeying his orders out in Van Diemen's Land, became all at once, indeed, the master, to work his own will with that most helpless of all creatures, an uneducated millionaire.

"If I had a son," thought Francis Tredethlyn—and a faint thrill was stirred in his breast by the mere hypothesis—"I should send him to school before I sent him out into the world. Yet I, who am as ignorant as a baby of the world in which I live, have plunged recklessly into its vortex, expecting to emerge unhurt. My own folly is the cause of my destruction. And yet I might have met with an honest friend; I might have had a loving wife."

"A loving wife!" Ah, how the poor faithful heart ached as Francis though this! A man's fireside is the same peaceful sanctuary, whether the hearth is gorgeous with encaustic tiles and an Axminster rug, or poorly covered with a scrap of faded Kidderminster, in some humble chamber where the fire-light glimmers on the dell platters that adorn a cottage-dresser.

"If Maude had loved me," Francis argued, brooding moodily upon his wrongs, "my money need have brought me no misery; my ignorance would have brought me into no danger. Her voice would have regulated my life; her counsel would have been my law. And it would have been very hard if the companionship of a lady had not in time transformed me into a gentleman. But what are the people with whom I have herded since my marriage—the acquaintances whom Harcourt Lowther has chosen for me? What! pshaw! why do I stop to think of all this? She never loved me. I should have tried to win her love if he had left me to do so. I might have failed then as miserably as I have failed now."

He groaned aloud as he thought this, and startled Miss Grundersou, who was sitting at a respectful distance from him, folding and unfolding her parasol, and wondering why she had got into this galere, and how she was to get out of it; and registering a mental vow that she would never again be tempted by her recollection of her duty to her neighbor to depart from the manners and customs of polite society. But to her relief Francis looked up presently, and addressed her.

"I thank you heartily for having spoken so frankly to me," he said: "it is only right that I should be acquainted with the common talk about the man whose hand I have clasped in friendship almost every day for the last twelve months. But I hope you will believe that, whatever Mr. Lowther may or may not be, my wife is good and pure, and worthy of the warmest affection you can feel for her. Your warmth of feeling has touched me deeply, Miss Grunderson. I have been living in so false an atmosphere lately, that I must be dull indeed if I were not affected by your friendly candor. If—if anything should happen to separate Maude and me, I should be very glad to think she had such a friend as you. And—if ever you saw her trusting as I have trusted, in the truth and honor of Harcoart Lowther, you would stand between her and that dangerous adviser, that false friend—would you not, Miss Grunderson?"

"I would," answered Rosa, valiantly; "I should speak my mind to her and to Mr. Lowther into the bargain, as candidly as I have spoken it to you to-night."

"I believe you would," said Francis; "and now, my dear, God bless you! and good-night."

He held out both his hands and clasped Rosa's pudgy little paws in a brief grasp, and then strode past her on his way toward the door.

"You are not going out to-night, are you, Mr. Tredethlyn?" she asked, anxiously; "it is so very late."

Poor little Rosa was rather alarmed by that resolute stride toward the door, which might only be the first step in some ghastly vengeance to be taken upon Harcourt Lowther by the stalwart Cornishman.

"I shouldn't like to have his blood upon my head, though I hate and despise him," thought Miss Grunderson; "for in these days of spirit-rapping, there's no knowing how he might spite himself upon me. I might have him tilting and tiptoeing every table I ever sat down to."

"I'm only going to my room to write a letter," answered Mr. Tredethlyn; "shall I order my wife's carriage for you?"

"No, thank you; as our house is so near, I think I'll ask one of your servants to see me home," replied Rosa, who had no idea of leaving the ground just yet. "I'll run up to Mrs. Tredethlyn's room and say good-by. Shall I take her any message from you?"

"None, thank you; good-night."

"Good-night."

Rosa left him still standing in the drawing-room. The spacious and grandiose apartment, in all of whose costly adornment—from the pictures on the walls to the Louis-Seize snuff-boxes and lapis-lazuli bonboniéres, and all the expensive frivolties so lavishly scattered on the tables—there was no single object which had been chosen with any reference to his taste, with any thoughts of his comfort or pleasure. No exquiste joys of "picking-up;" no delicious bargaining with dirty brokers in the purlieus of Holborn; no evening excursions, treasure-hunting, among dingy byways, where remnants of choice old china lurk sometimes, unrecognized and unvalued amongst the rabbish in a dimly-lighted shop window; none of the pleasant struggles, the proud triumphs, which attend the collection of Poverty's art and virtu, had attended the decoration of this splendid chamber. The Cornishman had given carte blauche to his friend, and had not remembered five minutes after writing them—in favor of a celebrated dealer in Bond street, and an upholsterer in Oxford street; and that was all. He smiled bitterly now as he paused to look round the room before he left it—perhaps forever.

"And this has been my home," he thought. "Home! Better to sit by my uncle Oliver's miserly fire, in the dreary house on the Cornish moors, than to loll in one of those yellow-satin chairs, playing at ball with a gold snuff-box, and watching the traitor whom I have trusted talking to my wife!"

(To be continued.)

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[All letters for this department should be addressed to Mr. Mark Twain, who has been detailed from the editorial staff to conduct it.]

Inquirer, Sacramento.—At your request I have been down and walked under and around and about the grand, gaudy and peculiar which rears its awful form at the conjunction of Montgomery and California streets, and have taken such notes as may enable me to describe it to you and tell you what I think of it. [N. B. I am writing this on Monday, the day preceding the Glorious Fourth.] My friend, I have seen arch-traitors and arch-deacons and architects, and archæologists, and archetypes, and arch-bishops, and, in fact, nearly all kinds of arches, but I give you the word of an honest man that I never saw an arch like this before. I desire to see one more like it and then die. I am the more anxious in this respect because it is not likely that I shall ever get a chance to see one like it in the next world, for something tells me that there is not such an arch as this in any of the seven heavens, and there certainly cannot be anything half as gay in the other place.

INDEPENDENCE ARCH

I am calling this one arch all the time, but in reality it is a cluster of four arches; when you pass up Montgomery street you pass under two of them, and when you pass up California street you pass under the other two. These arches spring from the tops of four huge square wooden pillars which are about fifteen or twenty feet high and painted with dull, dead, blue mud or blue-mass, or something of that kind. Projecting from each face of these sombre columns are bunches of cheap flags adorned with tin spear-heads. The contrast between the dark melancholy blue of the pillars and the gorgeous dyes of the flags is striking and picturesque. The arches reach as high as the eaves of an ordinary three-story house, and they are wide in proportion, the pillars standing nearly the width of the street apart. A flagstaff surmounts each of the pillars. The Montgomery street arches are faced with white canvas, upon which is inscribed the names of the several States in strong black paint; as there is a "slather" of gory red and a "slather" of ghostly white on each side of these black names, a cheerful barber-pole contrast is here presented. The broad tops of the arches are covered (in the barber-pole style, also, which seems to have been the groundwork of this fine conception,) with alternate patches of white and sickly pink cotton, and these patches having a wrinkled and disorderly appearance, remind me unpleasantly of a shirt I "done up" once in the Humboldt country, beyond the Sierras. The general effect of this open, airy, summer-house combination of arches, with its splashes and dashes of blue and red and pink and white, is intensely streaky and stripy; and altogether, if the colossal bird-cage were only "weatherboarded" it would just come up to one's notion of what a grand metropolitan barber-shop ought to be. Or if it were glazed it would be a neat thing in the way of a show-lamp to set up before a Brobdignag theatre. Surmounting the centres of two of the arches—those facing up and down Montgomery street—are large medallion portraits of Lincoln and Washington—daubs—apparently executed in whitewash, mud and brick-dast, with a mop. In these, also, the barber-shop ground-plan is still adhered to with a discriminating and sensitive regard to consistency; Washington is clean-shaved, but he is not done getting shampooed yet; his white hair is foamy with lather, and his countenance bears the expectant aspect of a man who knows that the cleansing shower-bath is about to fall. Good old Father Abe, whose pictured face, heretofore, was always serious, but never unhappy, looks positively worn and dejected and tired out, in the medallion—has exactly the expression of one who has been waiting a long time to get shaved and there are thirteen ahead of him yet. I cannot help admiring how the eternal fitness of things has been preserved in the execution of these portraits. To one who delights in "the unities" of art, could anything be more ravishing than the appropriate appearance and expression of the two countenances, overtopped as they are by sheaves of striped flags and surrounded on all sides by the glaring, tinted bars that symbol the barber's profession? I believe I have nothing left to describe in connection with the two arches which span Montgomery street. However, upon second thought, I forgot to mention that over each of the two sets of portraits stoops a monstrous painted eagle, with wings uplifted over his back, neck stretched forward, beak parted, and eager eye, as if he were on the very point of grabbing a savory morsel of some kind—an imaginary customer of the barber-shop, maybe.

The arch which fronts up California street is faced with white canvas, prominently sewed together in squares, and upon this broad white streak is inscribed in large, plain, black, "horse-type," this inscription:

"Honor to the Founders and saviours of the Republic."

For some unexplained reason, the "Founders" of the Republic are aggrandized with a capital "F," and the equally meritorious Saviors of it snubbed with a small "s." True, they gave the Saviors a "u"—a letter more than is recommended by Webster's dictionary—but I consider that a lame apology and an illiberal and inadequate compensation for "nipping" their capital S. The centre-piece of this arch consists of an exceedingly happy caricature of the coat-of-arms of California, done in rude imitation of fresco. The female figure is a placid, portly, straight-haired squaw in complete armor, sitting on a recumbent hog, and so absorbed in contemplation of the cobble-stones that she does not observe that she has got her sack of turnips by the wrong end, and that dozens of them are rolling out at the other; neither does she observe that the hog has seized the largest turnip and has got it in his mouth; neither does she observe that her great weight is making it mighty uncomfortable for the hog; she does not notice that she is mashing the breath out of him and making his eyes bulge out with a most agonized expression—nor that it is as much as he can do to hold on to his turnip. There is nothing magnanimous in this picture. Any true-hearted American woman, with the kindly charity and the tenderness that are inseparable from the character, would get up for a minute and give the hog a chance to eat his turnip in peace.

The centre-piece of the opposite arch is a copy of the one just described, except that the woman is a trifle heavier, and of course the distress of the hog is aggravated in a corresponding degree. The motto is—

"Mine Eyes have seen the Glory of the coming of the Lord."

This is an entirely abstract proposition, and does not refer to the surrounding splendors of the situation.

I have now described the arch of which you have heard such glowing accounts (set afloat in the first place by incendiary daily prints, no doubt,) and have thus satisfied your first request. Your second—that I would tell you what I think of it, can be done in a few words. It cost $3,000, and I think it cost a great deal too much, considering the unhappy result attained. I think the taste displayed was very bad—I might even say barbarous, only the tone of some of my preceding paragraphs might lead people to think I was making a pun. If you will notice me you will observe that I never make a pun intentionally—I never do anything like that in cold blood. To proceed—I think the same money expended with better judgment would have procured a set of handsome, graceful arches which could be re-trimmed and used again, perhaps; but I think these can't, as we have no ferry slips now that require gateways resplendent with cheap magnificence; I think the whole affair was gotten up in too great a hurry to be done well—the committee was appointed too late in the day; I suppose the appointing power did not know sooner that the Fourth of July was coming this year; I think the committee did as well as they could under the circumstances, because a member of it told me so, and he could have no object in deceiving me; I think many people considered the cluster of arches, with their Sunday-school-picnic style of ornamentation, pretty, and took a good deal of pride in the same, and therefore I am glad that this article will not be published until the Fourth has come and gone, for I would be sorry that any remarks of mine should mar the pleasure any individual might otherwise take in that truly extraordinary work of art.

Now you have the arches as they looked before the Fourth—the time when the above paragraphs were written. But I must confess—and I don't do it very reluctantly—that on the morning of the Fourth they were greatly improved in appearance. One cause was that innumerable small flags had been mounted on the arches, and hid the broad red and pink patchwork covering of the latter from sight, and another that the fiery colors so prevalent about the structure had been pleasantly relieved by the addition of garlands and festoons of evergreens to the embellishments, and the suspension of a champagne basket of other greens and flowers from the centre of it, chandelier fashion. Also, as by this time 'all Montgomery street was a quivering rainbow of flags, one could not help seeing that the decorations of the arches had to be pretty strong in coloring to keep up any sort of competition with the brilliant surroundings.

As I have disparaged this work of art before it had a chance to put on its best looks, and as I still don't think a great deal of it, I will act fairly by it, and print the other side of the question, so that you can form a just estimate of its merits and demerits by comparing the arguments of the prosecution and defence together. I will re-publish here the opinion entertained of it by the reporter of the Alta, one of its most fanatical, and I may even say, rabid admirers. I will go further and endorse a portion of what he says, but not all, by a good deal. I don't endorse the painting "in the highest style of the decorative art," (although it sounds fine—I may say eloquent,) nor the "magnificent basket," either:

"The most noticeable feature of the display on this street was the

GRAND TRIUMPHAL ARCH,

at the intersection of California and Montgomery streets, designed by M. F. Butler, Esq., the architect: erected by A. Snyder; painted, in the highest style of the decorative art, by Hopps & Son; and draped and adorned with flags and flowers by Chas. M. Plum, upholsterer, and A. Barbier, under the management and supervision of a Committee, consisting of John Sime, W. W. Dodge and M. E. Hughes. This arch was one of the chief attractions throughout the day and evening. On Montgomery street, distributed on both north and south sides, were the names of the thirty-six sovereign States of the Union, to each one a separate shield, and the names of the leading Generals of the Revolution, side by side with those of the war for the Union, and on the California street side the names of officers of the Army and Navy, past and present, the face of the arch on the east side bearing the words: 'Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord.' And on the west side: 'Honor to the Founders and Saviors of the Republic.' The centre of both the arches on Montgomery street were ornamented with portraits of Washington and Lincoln, and surmounted with flags beautifully and tastefully grouped. The flags of various nations were also grouped under the base of the arches at the four corners, and the whole structure was hung with evergreens, wreaths and flowers, while a magnificent floral basket hung suspended under the centre of the structure by wreaths depending from the arches. As the procession passed under this arch, the petals of the roses and other flowers were constantly falling upon it in showers as the wreaths swung to and fro in the Summer breeze."

Now for my side again. The following blast is from the Morning Call. The general felicity of the thing is to be ascribed to the fact that the reporter listened to some remarks of mine used in the course of a private conversation with another man, and turned them to account as a "local item." He is excusable for taking things from me, though, because I used to take little things from him occasionally when I reported with him on the Call:

STRAIGHTENING UP.—The likenesses of "Pater Patriæ," and "Salvator Patræ," on the ornamental (!) barber-shop at the corner of Montgomery and California streets, have been straightened up, and now wear a closer similarity to what might be supposed to represent men of steady habits. While we hold in the most profound veneration the memory of those illustrious men, as well as the day we propose to celebrate, yet we defy any person to look at that triumphal structure, its blue pillars and tawdry arches, utterly ignoring architecture and taste—and not laugh.

Now for the other side. The following highly-flavored compliment is also from the Morning Call, (same issue as the above extract,) but was written by the chief editor—and editors and reporters will differ in opinion occasionally:

A FINE DISPLAY.—All things promise a fine display to-day, the finest probably that has ever been witnessed in this city. The splendid triumphal arches at the intersection of Montgomery and California streets, will be especial objects of admiration. They were designed by M. F. Butler, Esq., the architect, have been erected under his supervision, and are at once splendid specimens of his artistic skill as well as of the taste of the Committee who chose his designs over all others presented for the occasion. Mr. B. is the pioneer, as well as among the best architects of this State, and this last work, though of a somewhat ephemeral nature, is worthy of the artist who designed and superintended it, and was properly entrusted to one of our oldest citizens as well as one of the most loyal men of the State.

Now for my side. The following is also from the Call, (same issue as both the above extracts:)

THAT ARCH.—The following bit of satire, from a correspondent, is pretty severe on the anomalous structure our Committee have designated with the name of triumphal arch: "The grand Patriotic or Union Arch erected at the corner of Montgomery and California streets, is a magnificent affair. I presume it will be retained there for a number of weeks. But isn't there a very important omission about the structure? Erected in commemoration of the Nation's birthday and all its subsequent glories, should not the portrait of the author of the Declaration of Independence crown one of its beautiful arches? '76."

Now for the other side once more. The following is from the Bulletin. The concluding portion of the first sentence is time-worn and stereotyped, though, and I don't consider that it ought to count against me. It is always used on such occasions and is never intended to mean anything:

"The triumphal arch which is now being completed under the direction of M. F. Butler, architect, at the junction of California and Montgomery streets, is the most imposing structure of its kind that has ever been erected on this coast. [Here follows a description of it in dry detail.] The arches are beautifully trimmed with evergreens, and the whole structure is to be adorned with a profusion of flags representing all nations, with appropriate mottoes and names of popular Generals scattered here and there among the Stars and Stripes."

And, finally, for my side again. Having this thing all my own way I have decided that I am entitled to the closing argument. The following is from the American Flag:

TRIUMPHAL ARCH.—A triumphal arch had been erected at the intersection of California and Montgomery streets, at a cost of $3,000. It consisted of four arches, one fronting and spanning each street, and resting upon four large pillars, thirty feet in height, painted a dingy blue, festooned with flags of various nations, and exhibiting upon each side, painted upon shields the names, two upon each shield of the heroes of 1776 and 1865—Grant, Greene; Sheridan, Montgomery; Dahlgren, Decatur; Dupont, Porter, etc. Near the centre of the arches fronting on Montgomery street, were rather poorly painted portraits, also painted upon a shield, of Washington and Lincoln, surrounded by large spread eagles, and bearing beneath, the initials "W. L;" upon these arches were inscribed upon red and white shields, the names of all the States; the arch facing California street, west, bore the inscription "Honor to the Founders and to the Saviors of the Republic;" and that opposite, "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;" and near the centre of both was a picture of a female of rather a lugubrious countenance, seated upon a lion couchant, bearing in her left hand a staff, and upon her head something bearing a striking resemblance to the metalic caps worn by the mail-clad warriors of ancient Greece, all of which, we presume, was intended to represent the "Goddess of Liberty victorious over the British Lion," but as we were unable to read the name of the damsel upon the shield which she held in her right hand, we will not be positive on that point. The whole affair was finely decorated with evergreens, flowers, wreaths, flags, etc., and would have been creditably ornamented, had more taste and skill been displayed in the paintings.

The prosecution "rests" here. And the defense will naturally have to "rest' also, because I have given them all the space I intend to. The case may now go to the jury, and while they are out I will give judgment in favor of the plaintiff. I learned that trick from the Washoe judges, long ago. But it stands to reason that when a thing is so frightfully tawdry and devoid of taste that the Flag can't stand it, and when a painting is so diabolical that the Flag can't admire it, they must be wretched indeed. Such evidence as this is absolutely damning.

STUDENT OF ETIQUETTE.—Asks: "If I step upon one end of a narrow bridge just at the moment that a mad bull rushes upon the other, which of us is entitled to precedence—which should give way and yield the road to the other?"

I decline to answer—leave it to the bull to decide. I am shrouded in doubts upon the subject, but the bull's mind will probably be perfectly clear. At a first glance it would seem that this "Student of Etiquette" is asking a foolish and unnecessary question, inasmuch as it is one which naturally answers itself—yet his inquiry is no more absurd than a dozen I can find any day gravely asked and as gravely answered in the "Correspondents' Column" of literary papers throughout the country. John Smith meets a beautiful girl on the street and falls in love with her, but as he don't know her name, nor her position in society, nor where she lives, nor in fact anything whatever about her, he sits down and writes these particulars to the Weekly Literary Bushwhacker, and gravely asks what steps he ought first to take in laying siege to that girl's affections—and is as gravely answered that he must not waylay her when she is out walking alone, nor write her anonymous notes, nor call upon her unendorsed by her friends, but his first move should be to procure an introduction in due form. That editor, with a grand flourish of wisdom, would have said: "Give way to the bull!" I, with greater wisdom, scorn to reply at all. If I were in a sarcastic vein, though, I might decide that it was Smith's privilege to butt the bull off the bridge—if he could. Again—John Jones finds a young lady stuck fast in the mud, but never having been introduced to her, he feels a delicacy about pulling her out, and so he goes off, with many misgivings, and writes to the Diluted Literary Sangaree about it, craving advice: he is seriously informed that it was not only his privilege, but his duty, to pull the young lady out of the mud, without the formality of an introduction. Inspired wisdom! He too, would have said: "Back down, and let the bull cross first." William Brown writes to the Weekly Whangdoodle of Literature and Art that he is madly in love with the divinest of her sex, but unhappily her affections and her hand are already pledged to another—how must he proceed? With supernatural sagacity the editor arrives at the conclusion that it is Brown's duty, as a Christian and gentleman, to go away and let her alone. Marvelous! He, too, would have said: "Waive etiquette, and let the bull have the bridge." However, we will drop the subject for the present. If these editors choose to go on answering foolish questions in the grandiloquent, oraeular style that seems to afford them so much satisfaction, I suppose it is no business of mine.

MARY, Rincon School.—No, you are mistaken—bilk is a good dictionary word. True, the newspapers generally enclose it in quotation marks, (thus: "bilk,") which is the usual sign made use of to denote an illegitimate or slang phrase, but as I said before, the dictionaries recognize the word as good, pure English, nevertheless. I perfectly agree with you, however, that there is not an uglier or more inelegant word in any language, and I appreciate the good taste that ignores its use in polite conversation. For your accommodation and instruction, I have been looking up authorities in the Mercantile Library, and beg leave to offer the result of my labors, as follows:

From Webster's Dictionary, edition of 1828.

BILK, v. t. [Goth bilaikan, to mock or deride. This Gothic word appears to be compound, bi and laikan, to leap or vault.]

To frustrate or disappoint; to deceive or defraud, by non-fulfillment of engagement; as, to bilk a creditor.—Dryden.

BILKED, pp. Disappointed; deceived; defrauded.

From Walker's Dictionary.

BILK, v. a. To cheat; to deceive.

From Wright's Universal Pronouncing Dictionary.

BILK. To deceive; to defraud.

From Worcester's Dictionary.

BILK, v. a. [Goth. bi-laikan.] To scoff; to deride; to defraud.

"But be sure says he, don't you bilk me."—Spectator.

From Spiers and Surenne's French Pronouncing Dictionary.

BILK, v. a. 1, frustrer; 2, (argot,) flouer (escroquer, duper.)

From Adler's German and English Dictionary.

TO BILK, v. a. Schnellen, prellen, betragen, im Stiche lassen (besonders um die [mit der] Bezahlung;) joc. einen Husaren machen.

From Seoane's Spanish Dictionary.

TO BILK. Enganar, defraudar, pegarla, chasquear, no pagar lo que se debe.

From Johnson's Dictionary.

TO BILK, v. a. [Derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothick bilaican.] To cheat, to defraud, by running in debt and avoiding payment.

"Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepared."—Dryden.

"What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger and the pleasing sight
Of your bilk'd hopes?"—Dryden.

From Richardson's Dictionary.

BILK. Mr. Gifford says: "Bilk seems to have become a cant word about this (Ben. Jonson's) time, for the use of it is ridiculed by others, as well as Jonson. It is thus explained in Cole's English Dictionary: 'Bilk, nothing; also to deceive.'" Lye, from the Goth. Bilaikan, which properly signifies insultando illudere. To cheat, to defraud, to elude.

Tub. Heo will ha' the last word, though he take bilke for't.
Hugh. Bilke? what's that?
Tub. Why, nothing, a word signifying nothing; and borrowed here to express nothing.—B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, Act 1. sc. 1.

(He) was then ordered to get into the coach, or behind it, for that he wanted no instructors; but be sure, you dog you, says he, don't you bilk me. Spectator, No. 498.

Patrons in days of yore, like patrons now,
Expected that the bard should make his bow
At coming in, and every now and then
Hint to the world that they were more than men;
But like the patrons of the present day,
They never bilk'd the poet of his pay.
—Churchill. Independence.

The tabooed word "bilk," then, is more than two hundred years old, for Jonson wrote the "Tale of a Tub" in his old age—say about the year 1630—and you observe that Mr. Gifford says it "seems to have become a cant word in Jonson's time." It must have risen above its vulgar position and become a legitimate phrase afterwards, though, else it would not have been uniformly printed in dictionaries without protest or explanation, almost from Jonson's time down to our own—for I find it thus printed in the very latest edition of Webster's Unabridged. Still, two centuries of toleration have not been able to make it popular, and I think you had better reflect awhile before you decide to write to Augustus that he is a bilk.

PIONEERS.—This society, after the dismissal of the procession on the Fourth, held their accustomed social re-union, with more than their accustomed sociality, speeches, wit and wine. The annual election of officers for the ensuing year was held last night, but we are not able to state the result.

DOWN.

(April, 1865.)

YARD-ARM to yard-arm we lie
Alongside the Ship of Hell;
And still through the sulphury sky,
The terrible clang goes high—
Broadside and battle-cry,
And the pirates' maddened yell!

Our Captain 's cold on the deck;
Our brave Lieutenant's a wreck—
He lies in the hold there, hearing
The storm of fight going on overhead,
Tramp and thunder to wake the dead,
The great guns jumping overhead,
And the whole ship's company cheering!

Four hours the Death-Fight has roared,
(Gun-deck and berth-deck blood-wet!)
Her mainmast's gone by the board,
Down come topsail and jib!
We 're smashing her, rib by rib,
And the pirate yells grow weak—
But the Black Flag flies there yet,
The Death's Head grinning apeak!

Long has she haunted the seas,
Terror of sun and breeze;
Her deck has echoed with groans;
Her hold is a horrid den,
Piled to the orlop with bones
Of starved and of murdered men!
They swarm 'mid her shrouds in hosts,
The smoke is murky with ghosts!

But to-day her cruise shall be short!
She's bound to the Port she cleared from,
She's nearing the Light she steered from—
Ah, the Horror sees her fate!
Heeling heavy to port,
She strikes, but all too late!
Down with her cursed crew,
Down with her damned freight,
To the bottom of the Blue,
Ten thousand fathom deep!
With God's glad sun o'erhead—
That is the way to weep,
So will we mourn our dead!

[H. H. Brownell, in the Atlantic Monthly for June.

TERRORS OF THE DESERT.

A FEW stars began to gleam in the heavens when we reached the sandy desert. We maintained the stillness of death during our march, in order that we might escape the notice of the Turkomans probably then in our vicinity. They might, perhaps, not see us on account of the darkness of the night, the moon not rising till later. We wished, also, that no sound might betray our position to them. On the soft ground the tread of the camels produced no echo. We feared, however, that some freak of braying might occur to our donkeys, for their voices would echo far and wide in the still night. Toward night we reached a place where we were all obliged to dismount, as both donkeys and camels were sinking down to their knees in the fine sand. This, indeed, formed there an uninterrupted chain of little hills. In the cool night-march I could just manage to tramp on through this endless sand, but toward morning I felt my hand beginning to swell from continually resting upon my staff. I, consequently, placed my baggage on the donkey, which, although breathing hard, was still more at ease in the sand than I with my lame leg.

Our morning station bore the charming appellation of Adamkyrylgan (which means "the place where men perish,") and one needed only to cast a look at the horizon to convince himself how appropriate is that name. Let the reader picture to himself a sea of sand, extending as far as the eye can reach, on one side formed into high hills, like waves lashed into that position by the furious storm; on the other side, again, like the smooth waters of a still lake, merely rippled by the west wind. Not a bird visible in the air, not a worm or beetle upon the earth; traces of nothing but departed life, in the bleaching bones of man or beast that has perished, collected by every passer-by in a heap, to serve to guide the march of future travelers! Why add that we moved on unnoticed by the Turkomans? The man does not exist on earth that could make a station here on horseback; but whether the elements would not oppose our progress was a point, the consideration of which shook even the sang froid of the Oriental, and the sombre looks of my fellow-travelers during the whole way best betrayed their anxiety.

According to what the kervanbashi told us, we should have had, altogether, on this way from Tunuklu to Bohara, only six days' journey, half through sand, the rest over firm and even ground, where, here and there, grass is met with and shepherds resort. Consequently, after examining our skins, we calculated that we should only have to apprehend a deficiency of water during one day and a half; but, the very first day, I remarked that the Oxus water did not bear out our calculations; that that most precious liquid, although we made a most sparing use of it, diminished every moment, either from the heat of the sun, its own evaporation, or some such cause. This discovery made me watch my stores with double carefulness; in this I was imitated by the others, and, in spite of our anxiety, it was even comical to see how the slumberers slept, firmly embracing their water-vessels.

Notwithstanding the scorching heat, we were obliged to make, during the day, also, marches of from five to six hours duration, for the sooner we emerged from the region of sand the less occasion we had to dread the dangerous wind, the tebbad; for on the firm plain it can but bring with it the torture of fever; whereas in the region of sand it can in a moment bury everything. The strength of the poor camels was taxed too far; they entered the desert wearied by their nocturnal journey; it was not, therefore, surprising that some fell ill through the torments of the sand and the heat, and that two died even at this day's station. It bears the name of Shorkutuk. This word signifies salt fountain, and one, in fact, is said to exist here, adequate for the refreshment of beasts; but it was entirely choked up by the stormy wind, and a day's labor would have been necessary to render it again serviceable.

But, let alone the tebbad, the oppressive heat by day had already left us without strength, and two of our poorer companions, forced to tramp on foot by the side of their feeble beasts, having exhausted all their water, fell so sick that we were forced to bind them, at full length, upon the camels, as they were perfectly incapable of riding or sitting. We covered them, and as long as they were able to articulate they kept exclaiming "Water! water!" the only words that escaped their lips. Alas! even their best friends denied them the life-dispensing draught; and when we, on the fourth day, reached Medemin Bulag, one of them was freed by death from the dreadful torments of thirst. I was present when the unfortunate man drew his last breath. His tongue was quite black, the roof of his mouth of a grayish-white; in other respects his features were not much disfigured, except that his lips were shriveled, the teeth exposed, and the mouth open. I doubt much whether, in these extreme sufferings, water would have been of service; but who was there to give it to him?

It was a horrible sight to see the father hide his store of water from the son, and brother from brother; each drop is life; and when men feel the torture of thirst, there is not, as in the other dangers of life, any spirit of self-sacrifice or any feeling of generosity.

We passed three days in the sandy parts of the desert. We had now to gain the firm plain, and come in sight of the Khalata mountain, that stretches away toward the north. Unhappily, disappointment again awaited us. Our beasts were incapable of farther exertion, and we passed a fourth day in the sand. I had still left about six glasses of water in my leathern bottle. These I drank, drop by drop, suffering, of course, terribly from thirst. Greatly alarmed to find that my tongue began to turn a little black in the centre, I immediately drank off, at a draught, half of my remaining store, thinking so to save my life; but, oh! the burning sensation, followed by headache, became more violent toward the morning of the fifth day; and when we could just distinguish, about mid day, the Khalata Mountains from the clouds that surrounded them, I felt my strength gradually abandon me. The nearer we approached the mountains the thinner the sand became, and all eyes were searching eagerly to discover a drove of cattle or shepherd's hut, when the kervanbashi and his people drew our attention to a cloud of a dust that was approaching, and told us to lose no time in dismounting from the camels. These poor brutes knew well enough that it was the tebbad that was hurrying on; uttering a loud cry, they fell on their knees, stretched their long necks along the ground, and strove to bury their heads in the sand. We entrenched ourselves behind them, lying there as behind a wall; and scarcely had we, in our turn, knelt under their cover, than the wind rushed over us with a dull, clattering sound, leaving us, in its passage, covered with a crust of sand two fingers thick. The first particles that touched me seemed to burn like a rain of flakes of fire. Had we encountered it when we were six miles deeper in the desert, we should all have perished. The air now became heavier and more oppressive than before, yet we struggled on as well as we were able.

Toward evening we reached fountains that had not yet been visited this year by the shepherds; the water, undrinkable by man, still refreshed our beasts. We were ourselves all very ill, like men half-dead, without any animation but that which proceeded from the now well-grounded hope that we should all be saved.—Vambery's Travels in Central Asia.

An unsophisticated countryman, the other day, coming in to Washington with a load of wood, saw a military officer, followed at a respectful distance by two orderlies—all three mounted, and in full gallop. "Good gracious!" said he, "havn't they caught him yet? I was in about three weeks ago, and they was a-runnin' him then."

Swearing for a Family.—Rev. R. S. Maclay, for thirteen years a missionary in China, relates the following anecdote:

During one of our examinations of candidates for the baptism of Nnghang, I observed that one woman and three or four young people had the same surname. This circumstance led to the following conversation between myself and one of the young men:

"I observe you all have the same surname; are you all members of the same family?" I inquired.

"Yes," one replied, "this is mother, and these are my brothers."

"Where is your father?" I continued.

"He is at home attending to business."

"Does he approve of your embracing Christianity?"

"Yes; he is entirely willing."

"Why does not you father himself become a Christian?"

"He says it would not answer for all the family to embrace Christianity."

"And why," I asked, with some curiosity, "does he think so?"

"He says that if we all become Christians, our heathen neighbors will take advantage of that circumstance to impose upon us."

"How will they do that?"

"Christians are not allowed to swear or fight, and father says that when our wicked neighbors ascertain that we have embraced Christianity, they will proceed to curse and maltreat us. Hence, father says to us: 'You may all become Christians, but I must remain a heathen, so as to retaliate on our bad neighbors. You can go to meeting and worship, but I must stay at home to do the cursing and fighting for the family.'"

The Women of Paraguay.—The author of "Sketches in Paraguay" gives us this fragrant morsel: Everybody smokes in Paragnay, and nearly every female above thirteen years of age chews. I am wrong. They do not chew, but put the tobacco in their mouths, keep it there constantly, except when eating, and instead of chewing, roll it about with their tongues and suck it. Only imagine yourself about to salute the rich red lips of a magnificent little Hebe, arrayed in satin and flashing with diamonds; she puts you back with one delicate hand, while, with the fair taper fingers of the other, she draws forth from her mouth a brownish black roll of tobacco, quite two inches long, looking like a monstrous grub, and depositing the savory morsel on the rim of your sombrero, puts up her face and is ready for a salute. I have sometimes seen an over-delicate foreigner turn with a shudder of loathing under such circumstances, and get the epithet of el saraco (the savage) applied to him by the offended beauty for this sensitive squeamishness. However, one soon gets used to this in Paragnay, where you are by force of custom obliged to kiss every lady you are introduced to; and one-half you meet are really tempting enough to render you reckless of consequences; you would sip the dew of the proffered lips in the face of a tobacco battery—even the double-distilled "honeydew" of old Virginia.

The Wind as a Musician.—The wind is a musician by birth. We extend a silken thread in the crevice of a window, and the wind finds it and sings over it, and goes up and down the scale upon it, and Paganini must go somewhere else for honor, for lo! the wind is performing upon a single string. It tries almost everything on earth to see if there is music in it—it persuades a tune out of the great bell in the tower, when the sexton is at home asleep; it makes a mournful harp of the giant pines, and it does not disdain to try what sort of a whistle can be made out of the humblest chimney in the world. How it will play upon a tree until every leaf thrills with a note on it, whilst a river runs at its base in a sort of murmuring accompaniment. And what a melody it sings when it gives a concert with a full choir of the waves of the sea and performs an anthem between the two worlds, that goes up, perhaps, to the stars which love music most and sing it first. Then, how fondly it haunts old houses; mourning under the eaves, singing in the halls, opening doors without fingers, and singing a measure of some sad old song around the fireless and deserted hearths.

There recently lived at Palermo, Sicily, an old priest who passed for a little cracked un poco motto, as the Italians say. His name was Don Liberatore. He had an odd whim: whenever a carriage passed by him he would bow profoundly. The idle young fellows would laugh and say: "Don Liberatore, you have strangely aristocratic acquaintances for a man of your station of life. Where in the deuce did you make the acquaintance of all those lords?" "Bless your heart, child, I don't salute the lords; I salute their horses." "Their horses? And pray why do you salute their horses?" "In the first place, child, because I think it very good-natured to drag about people as they do; in the second place, because I feel I am under personal obligation to the horses, therefore I tender them my thanks; because, if those aristocratic people had not horses to drag them about, they would take you and I."

AN EASTERN JUGGLER.

WHILE traveling through India, between Surat nnd Nagpore, my body servant one day iuformed me that a great juggler and snake-charmer wished to have the honor of showing me something of his wonderful skill.

"What can he do?" I asked.

"Almost everything that is marvelous, I've been told," was the answer I received.

"Admit him."

My servant withdrew, nnd returned with a small, withered old man, about whom I saw nothing very remarkable, except his eyes, which were small, black and piercing, and seemed to have lightning imprisoned in them. I do not know that the man could see in the dark, like a cat, but there was at times that peculiar fiery appearance of the balls which is so otteu observed in night-prowling animals. He wore a white vest, Turkish trousers, a sort of crimson petticoat worked with strange devices, a turban of many colors, and red morocco shoes, pointed and turned up at the toes. His arms and neck were bare, aud, with the exception of a couple of heavy gold rings in his ears, he displayed no extraneous ornaments. His age I judged to be rising of sixty, and his short moustache was almost white. He made a low salaam, and then appeared to wait to be addressed.

"Your name?" said I, in Hindoostanee.

"Paunjar, your excellency."

"I am told you wish to show me some wonders!"

"If your excelleuey will."

"Well, what ean you do?"

He suddenly produced—from where I did not see and eannot tell—a large ball of twine, which he appeared to toss into my lap, keeping hold of one end, so that it unrolled the whole distance between him and me, at least ten feet, saying, as he did so—

"Will your excellency please examine what you see?"

Now, I honestly aver that I saw that ball of twine when he threw it as plaiuly as I ever saw anything in my life—saw it come toward me, saw it unroll, and apparently drop into my lap, so that I brought my kness quiekly together to catch it—and yet, when I put my haud down to take it and looked down for it, it was not there—nothing was there—and at the same instaut I perceived the juggler balancing it on the end of his finger.

"Pshaw!" said I; "you deceived me by making me believe you threw it toward me."

"Does your excelleney think I have it?" he asked; and before I could answer, I saw, in place of the ball, a large, beautiful rose, which he was balancing by the stem, and yet he had not altered his position and scarcely stirred a finger.

I began to be astonished.

While yet I looked, I saw in his right hand a large eup, and in his left the rose. He stepped forward a few feet, laid the rose dowu on the ground, and placed the cup over it.

Here, it will be observed, there was no machinery to assist him—no table, with its false top, eoncealed apartments, and confederate, perhaps, to effect the change, as we see similar tricks performed iu a place fitted up by the magician for the purpose—but ouly my own quarters, in the full, bright light of day, with myself sharply watching him within five feet, and my attendants grouped around almost as near. Having covered the rose with the eup, as I would be willing to make oath—for I saw the rose distinctly, as the hollow vessel, held by the top, weut slowly dowu over it—the eonjurer resumed his former plaee, and said—

"Will your excellency be kind enough to lift the eup and see what is under it?"

Of course I would have wagered a heavy sum that the rose was still there for one thing, because, expeeting some trick, I had kept my eye on it till the last momeut, and was certain there was no possibility of its being removed after the hand had let go of the cup at the top. I complied with his request, stepped forward, and raised the cup; but instantly dropped it, and bounded back with a cry of terror—for there, instead of the red rose, was one of the little, green, deadly serpents of India, coiled up and ready for a spring, with its small glittering eyes fixed intently on mine. Snakes of any kind are my horror; and this one not only horrified me, but all my attendants, who, with cries of alarm, enlarged the circle very rapidly, for they knew its bite to be fatal.

"No more such tricks as these, conjurer!" said I, sternly.

"It is perfectly harmless, your excellency," grinned the old man, walking up to it, lifting it up by the neck, putting its head into his mouth, and allowing it to run down his throat.

I shuddered, and half-believed the juggler possessed of a devil, if not a devil himself.

He next produced a tube that looked like brass, about two feet long and half an inch in diameter, and next the ball of twine again.

Where these things came from, or went to, I could not tell. They seemed to be in his hands when he wanted them; but I never observed his hands passing near his dress, either when they appeared or disappeared. When I looked for the cup that I had lifted from the snake, it was gone, and yet neither myself nor any of my attendants had seen this wonderful man pick it up! It was indeed jugglery, if not magic, of the most unquestionable kind!

Through the brass tube the conjurer now passed one end of the twine, which he put between his teeth. He theu placed the tube between his lips, threw back his head, and held it perpendicularly, with the ball of twine on the upper end. Then suddenly this ball began to turn, and turn rapidly, and gradually grow smaller, till it entirely disappeared, as if the twine had been run off on a reel. What turned it, or where it went to, no one could see. The juggler then set the tube the other end up, and a new ball began to form on the top, but apparently ribbon, of half an inch in width and of different colors. These rolled up, as if on a bobbin, till it formed a wheel of two or three inches in diameter, when the performer seemed to toss ribbon and tube over his shoulder, and that was the last I saw of either.

He then introduced what appeared to be the same cup I had lifted from the snake, showed something that looked like an egg, advanced the same as before, and placed the latter on the ground and the former over it, and again requested me to raise it, which I declined to do, fearing I should see another serpent, or something equally horrifying.

"Will any one lift the eup?" he said, turning to the others.

No one volunteered to do so, but all rather drew back.

At this he took up the cup himself and appeared to throw it in the air, and there sat in its place a beautiful dove, which flew up nnd alighted on his shoulder. He took it in his hand, muttered over some unintelligible words, seemed to cram it into his mouth, and that was the last I saw of that also.

He performed some other tricks similar to these, and concluded with the mysterious bag. This bag—which somehow came into his hands, as did all other things he used, in a manner unknown to myself—was from two to three feet long and about a foot wide. It looked as if it had been used to hold some kind of flour, and I certainly saw something like the dust of flour fly from it when he turned it inside out and beat it across his hands. He turned it back again, and tied up the mouth of it with a striug, muttering a low incantation all the time. This done, he threw it ou the ground and stamped on it, treading it all out flat with his feet. He theu stepped back a few paces and requested us all to fix our eyes on it. We did so; and after a lapse of perhaps thirty seconds, we saw it begin to swell up, like a bladder when being expanded with wind. It continued to swell till every part became distended, and it appeared as round and as solid as if filled with sand. Its solidity, however, was only appareut—for when the juggler went up and placed his foot on it, it yielded to the pressure, but immediately sprung back, or rounded out, as soon as that was removed. He then jumped on it with both feet, and flattened it all out as it first. He then went away again; and the bag, being left to itself as before, again began to rise or inflate, but this time as if some animal like a cat were inside of it. In fact I could see where there appeared to be legs; and then, to my utter amazement, I may almost say horror, it began to move toward me, as if impelled by the unknown something in it.

I do not think I am a coward—my worst enemy has never accused me of being one, at least—but I confess that on this occasion my nerves would not let me remain passive, and I retreated from the advancing mystery, and informed the magician that I had seen enough to satisfy me of his wonderful occult powers. At this he smiled grimly, walked up to the bag and trod it down again, picked it up and beat it with his right hand across his left, caused it to unaccountably disappear from my sight, and then made his concluding salaam.

How these wonders were performed—by what art, power or magic—I do uot and never expect to know. I have eonversed with mnny persons who have seen quite as strange and unnatural things, but never heard any one give any explanation that I considered at all satisfactory. I simply relate what I saw, but scarcely expect any one to credit my statement, well knowing that I myself would not have received such marvels as facts on the testimony of the most reliable friend I have in the world.

"If your excellency wills, I shall now have the honor of showing you how I charm wild serpents," said the necromancer.

I hnd heard something of this singular power, and was desirous of seeing it displayed. Accordingly myself nnd attendants all repaired to an open field, at no great distance, where, after some search, Paunjar discovered a hole, in which he said he doubted not there was a snake.

"But before I call him forth," he proceeded, "I must be assured that some one of sufficient courage will stand ready to cut him down when I give the signal—otherwise, should he prove to be a copra capella, my life may be sacrificed."

"I will myself undertake that business," said I, drawing my sword.

The man hesitated, evidently fearing to insult me by a doubt, and yet not eager to risk his life on the strength of my nerves, after the display of timidity I hnd already made. I thought I read nll this in the man's face, and I said, very positively:

"Never fear, good sir! I will eut down whatever you briug up this time, be it snake or devil!"

"My life is at your excellency's mercy," bowed the man, with a show of humility. "Remember the signal. When I raise my hand above my head, may the blow be swift, sure and deadly!"

He then gave his whole attention to the business before him. Putting an instrument, not unlike a small flageolet to his lips, he began to play n shrill, monotonous, disagreeable sort of tune, keeping his eyes riveted upon the hole in the ground; and soon after, to my utter astonishmeut, though I should have been prepared for anything, I saw the ugly head of the hooded snake, the dreaded cobra capella, the most poisouous of all deadly reptiles, come slowly forth with its spectacled eyes fixed steadily upon the strange musician, who began to retreat backwards slowly, a step at a time, the snake following him.

When at length, in this manner, he had drawn the creature some ten or fifteen feet from his hole, he suddenly squatted down and began to play more loudly and shrilly. At this the serpent raised itself on its tail, as when about to make its deadly spring, and actually commenced a dancing motion, in time with the music, which was continued for about a minute, when the charmer gave me the signal to strike. Guardedly and stealthily I advanced near enough for the blow, and then struck, cutting the reptile in two, and sending its head flying to some distance. I never took life with better satisfaction.

Whatever deception there might have been about the juggler's tricks, there was certainly none about the snake, for I have the skin still in my possession. I gave the man a couple of gold mohurs, and he went away perfectly satisfied, wishing my excellency any quantity of good luck. I was perfectly satisfied, too, and would not have missed seeing what I did that day for ten times the amount paid.

ENGLISH LAW.—In England, as a married woman cannot, except under special circumstances, make a will, she will probably die intestate as to her leaseholds, which will, on her death, belong to the husband. All personal goods and chattels in the possession of the wife at the time of the marriage, become the absolute property of the husband, whether he survives his wife or not, with this exception, that the wife's paraphernalia, that is, her wearing apparel and personal ornaments, suitable to her position and degree in life, will remain her property if she survive him, although he may dispose of them at any time during his lifetime. As the law gives the husband control over his wife's person and property, it also imposes upon him the duty of maintaining her and the children they may have: and if he fail to do so, she may obtain necessaries for the purpose on his credit; but the husband is not bound to provide for his wife if she leave his house against his will, unless she has been obliged to leave in consequence of ill-treatment. Another advantage which the law affords a woman in consideration of her husband taking all her property, is her dower, which acerues to her if she survives her husband. Her dower is her right to enjoy for her own life, after her husband's death, the third part of all the inheritable freehold property of which the husband was seized during the marriage, and of which any issue that she might have had could by any possibility have been heir. If the husband dies intestate, his real property will not go to the widow, but to the heir-at-law, and she will receive a third or half of the personalty, according as there are, or are not, any children of the marriage. If there are children, the widow will get one-third of her deceased husband's personalty; if there are no children, she will get half; the remaining half will be divided among the intestate's next of kin; and even if there are no such next of kin, the widow will only get one-half of her husband's personality, the other half going to the crown, although, in such a case, the crown would remit it back to the widow.

"SUSPENDED LIKE MAHOMET'S COFFIN."—There is a deal of "see-saw" in science. First it is pointed out that the idea of Mahomet's coffin suspended between heaven and earth is a strictly scientific one which indicates a possible effect of magnetism. Then it is proved that such a suspension is not scientifically possible. Then again, we find Prof. Tyndall, in one of his recent lectures on electricity, at the Royal Institution, showing the idea to be, after all, a strictly scientific one. A piece of gold leaf, 2½ inches long and 1¼ inches wide, is cut into the form of a kite or fish, placed on a piece of paper, and presented to the knob of a large Leyden jar charged with electricity. When detached by a knife, the leaf springs toward the knob, but stops within 2 inches, and remains hovering in the air, the tail waving like that of a fish. When the jar is moved, the gold leaf follows, and continues to float for nearly an hour. The experiment may be made with a smaller jar and smaller pieces of gold leaf.—English paper.

AMONG the numerous costly presents to the daughter of Baron Lionel Rothschild, on her marriage with her cousin, Baron Ferdinand, was a magnificent pearl necklace, of the value of ten thousand pounds.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1865.

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS.

WE cannot but be greatly rejoiced at the fact that the progress of Speaker Colfax and his associates through the towns of the Pacific Slope has been a hearty ovation, more gratifying probably, to the various members of the party, from the fact that it was unexpected and really impromptu in its character. Hospitality is a charming virtue under any conditions, and both host and guest derive therefrom one of the most unselfish pleasures allotted to humanity. The man who exerts his energies in the entertainment of his friends has a claim on them which is proverbially respected. Who indeed ever stretched his limbs beneath the mahogany of Dives and did not feel some degree of gratefulness to the rich dinner-giver which any number of vices could not eradicate? On the other hand, who ever staid at a log cabin on the western frontier and departed without a wholesome regard for backwoodsmen and their character?

California is neither a haughty, rich host, nor a poverty-stricken poor one, though she in many respects combines the noticeable features of both. She cannot exhibit herself as one so far removed from want that her hospitable spirit may need no attempt at response; nor is she so poor that her attentions will not honor him upon whom they are bestowed. She may not demand a tangible return, and will not be necessitated to make such a demand. Her hospitality requires only the normal reward of an affectionate place in the memory of the recipient. This, she is certain to have. We are so far removed from Eastern sympathy, that every prominent statesman, writer, or citizen who comes hither, either from curiosity or real interest in our gold, political or social interests, and who returns to the Atlantic Coast with a favorable idea of us, becomes, as it were, a champion in a field where we need him most. The mere barren constitutional representatiou of two Senators and three Congressmen is insufficient to do battle for California ideas. We should give them allies all over the East. It is not enough that we send men to Congress, who can declare truths about us and our necessities. There must be there and elsewhere some portion of the audience who are directly in sympathy with those declarations. There must be a secouding influence, an applauding influence, a voting influence, or the seed will be sown upon a rock.

It has been a constant complaint among Californians, whether politicians, or private citizens, that their most urgent pleas for measures beneficial to our coast are received with an indifference, which arises to some extent from an entire ignorance of our character as a State and our necessities as men laboring in a direction entirely dissimilar to any enterprise known at home.

Every time we make an assault upon that ignorance, every movement we make towards exhibiting ourselves in our true light to our Eastern brethren, adds to onr own power and resources. We need Eastern capital. We can have it, if we demonstrate our capacities for using it properly. We must seek for Eastern friendship and cherish it whenever it is extended to us. It is a flat and ignorant denial of every true principle of political economy to expect that we, from the outset—and we have but just made a feeble commencement toward the prosperity we are destined to have—will be able unaided to expand with the necessary rapidity the magnificent resources of our country.

That we are making that desirable impression at home with some degree of success is demoustrated by the fact that year after year the number of distinguished travelers who venture among us is increased. It is becoming the fashion, too, for young men to make a trip hither, either by the sea or overland, for the purpose of detailing their novel experiences to the circle of home friends.

It is to be wished that this sort of enthusiasm will extend to others—that the statesmen who have for the past four years been working out the peace problem will seek their recreation in a visit to the Pacific. We note that Chief Justice Chase has been traveling over the South for the purpose of examining into its interests. Could he not attempt a longer tour, and learn of this State, towards which, Gossip has it, he has imbibed some sort of prejudice? It is a great deal to ask of a man who has reached so venerable a position; but we feel certain that the vitality so long tried by political labors has been by no means exhausted. That the distinguished Bishop of Pennsylvania should have lost his life in the attempt to visit us is a misfortune which even selfishness might well mourn. Apart from the high respect which he had won as a churchman, the venerated prelate was a man of wide views, of unselfish genius, and of general authority in the East, and his sojourn in California would have made us a warm friend, whom God in His Provideuce has seen fit to deny us.

Now that the present and probable future Speaker of the Lower House has made California a personal study, we feel certain that its interests will receive an impetus in that branch of the Federal Legislature, grateful to every one who takes a pride in the success of his State. We cannot but heartily thank Mr. Colfax and his party for their cheerful endurance of the hardships of so long and perilous a trip to inspect our peculiar conditiou and resources.

(For the Californian.)

INTELLECTUAL MOSS.

THERE is an architectural absurdity outside of my office window in the shape of a brick wall joining the two adjacent buildings, and acting as a sort of portal to the common staircase. On the top of this purposeless bit of masonry, is a dressing of a mild kind of moss, which shines with agreeable verdancy in the rainy months, but changes to a desolate brown as the dry season progresses. That wall with its cap of vegetable life, its dusty lamp-shade, and rusty gas fixtures, has interested me more, and gives a more grateful impression to the eye, than would a whole block of elegant but glaring novelty, built after the most severe ideas of the Alta's Eusebius, and lit up in all the splendor of gala-day illumination. Its charm lies in the fact that it has a comparatively ancient look for anything belonging to so young a city as San Francisco. The moss coping demands much the same sort of respect from taste that is called forth by the silver hair and worn temples of beautiful old age.

In turning my material sense to intellectual things, I cannot help but regard my friend "Ancient," with his Latin oddities and old-fashioned weaknesses, as one, whose imperfections and shortcomings have been veiled by a robe of parasitical softness. He has become in the world of speculation and action, what the German university slang would designate as a "bemossed head." He has staid in it too long as a disciple and an observer to be available in practical uses of what he has studied so long and faithfully. Yet his failure in life, if it can philosophically be called a failure, has more in it to entice forth from his fellows a feeling of affection, a tenderness of treatment joining on the one hand with pity and on the other with reverence, than would be elicited by a score of presumptuous successes gained by men of more dashing but brazen tendencies. He has never intruded himself or his abilities upon the public, when nothing could be gained from the effort beyond selfish acknowledgements of his own capacities. He is eminently social in his instincts, and yet society has not been vexed by the slightest demand on his part for sympathy. His fondness for literature has never led him to attempt the least effort of that character himself, fearful lest he should be convicted thereby of trespassing egotistically upon fields where greater genius and more competent laborers only had the right to reap. Had he been a clergyman, he would sooner have rusted away as the parish priest of a desolate village, than have betrayed the ambition requisite to secure a mellow city call, where his scholarship and gentleness would have found fuller appreciation. As an advocate, he would have grown seedy with a copy of the Pandects before him, and a hopeless ignorance of the daily business of the courts. As it is, with no profession, no refuges, no props in the way of acquaintances, he has traveled reflectively through the world, an object for sneers by brassy parvenus, and a man of loveable characteristics and action to his scanty number of friends. He is too old now to change and fix the trail of his life in any other direction. He can only manage to move along the radius which he has fallen upon to guide him beyond the circle of earthly life, and when he steps beyond its circumference, mayhap, there will be One to receive him who will torture him with no demands for egotistical assumptions, but will grant him his station with perfect discernment and Divine appreciation.

While I would counsel no youth for whose future I have hopes, to adopt my venerable friend as a perfect model in life; and while I cannot but note with disappointment the almost practical uselessness into which so much of honesty and scorn of humbug has degenerated, I feel as though the opposite course would be disgustingly undesirable. There are young men who never miss an opportunity for self-display. They dabble in politics, shine in secret society lodges, get on committees, force the acquaintance of men of position, and never allow a week to pass without a demand for favorable notice by local reporters. They are generally able, as talent goes in the market; useful, for they accomplish much that is necessary to be done; but whenever you see them, in whatever connection you find their names, you feel irresistibly that it is not that they are afflicted with an insane desire to spend their time and talent for the benefit of the public, so much as that they are laboring for themselves and laying a foundation upon which time is to build them an arch of future triumph.

We demand, or rather we should demand from the priest, the advocate, or the physician special care in the respective studies of divinity, law, or medicine. We have a right to ask also of each a full and delicate exposition of his politics. The sentiment so applauded in the Roman theatre, "Homo sum; humani nihil a me alienum puto" should be one of the great rules of every professional man in our Republic; but we may be pardoned if we ask the Rev. Mr. Jenkins to be as pure in theology and in the preparation necessary thereto, as he is boisterous in patriotism. William Jones, Esq., makes a brilliant speech on the great questions of the day in a country school-house: we would much prefer that the argument in his last ejectment suit had shown a little more care in preparation. Dr. Hydrastis is doubtless a pleasant gentleman at a primary meeting; but he should have seen to it that his surgery is as available for purposes of operation upon the physical man, as are his elocutionary assaults upon the body politic. If Mr. Jenkins expects me to take a pew in his church, he must be as forcible from the reading desk as at the mass meeting. That was mild qualification for a bishop required by the English minister—to have edited a Greek play and have written a successful religious pamphlet. I would like to have my spiritual adviser at least a constant reader of the Greek Testament and something of an oracle on the writings of the Fathers. Jones Esq. may find clients at the primaries; but it is ungentlemanly and therefore slightly unprofessional for a dignified jurisconsult to look for them there; while, if Dr. Hydrastis expects that I will laugh and grow fat on a sick bed because I was amused by his wit at the last political gathering, let me assure him that he does not understand my system.

Jenkins, Jones, and Hydrastis appear too glaring to reflective visions. They must not permit their worthy efforts at notoriety to jut out in so salient a manner. That they should endeavor to be known among men, is but a part of their business in life. But it must not be a hurried task. Such premeditated selfishness in youth augurs badly for the quality of their intellects. They should let Time cover gradually with its softening moss the little fabrics of ability which they have built, before they stand forth shouting to the world to come and admire. Jenkins had better win his way to the hearts of the old women of his congregation, get a firm hold upon the Sunday School children, weave a crafty web around the footsteps of the young men and maidens, before he casts his net in partisan waters and becomes a fisher of worldly political men. The religious tone of the sanctuary is only a sort of hanging moss, which gathers around the silent halls of devotion. Jones ought to get embedded in the black letter of Year Book jurisprudence, with samples of dust from the wigs of the entire dynasties of chancellors and judges scattered over his head, before he attempts the political side of the profession. I remember once hearing a distinguished lawyer of Philadelphia lay down as a maxim to a set of young students "never to enter for political contests until worth at least fifty thousand dollars by professional efforts." "You will be better by carrying out such a resolution," said he; "the profession will be better; and the political atmosphere much purer." Such a conservative practice may be distasteful to the young limbs of California law; but who can doubt its force? We certainly need a little moss about the political temple. As to Hydrastis, I can scarcely imagine how caucuses and consultations can be of kin. The political slate and prescription Latin are literature of such odd diversity that no one hand should attempt to scribble for both currente calamo. Give me the medical enthusiast, whose mind is not above the gallipot, or rather who is equal to the requirements of his grand art and science. Such a soul is too much honored by the crown that rests on the head of honest practitioner to need any gew-gaws of political honors.

Jones, Jenkins and Hydrastis will probably have supporters in spite of any denunciations which I might throw out as to their ideas or practices. Indeed, it is not to client, patient, or the Christian hearer that I address myself. It is to the culprit himself. By the right of the freemasonry of education, by the privilege of professional fraternity, I ask Jenkins, Jones, and Hydrastis not to be such atrocious humbugs. You are men of ability in your business; you know that you ought to succeed fairly and honestly in a dignified path fit for the tread of a gentleman. If you do not know that fact, you are hypocrities to yourselves. Leave off advertising your trades in the unprofessional manner you have been adopting. I know that Jenkins would scorn anything so insincere as the sending to a daily paper a puff of his last sermon. Actors and such might do it, but Jenkins—never. Why then try the political-platform statuary dodge, which is, to my thinking, equally reprehensible? Jones would not dream of slipping a piece into the reporter's fist, and asking him to review favorably his last brief; and yet, Jones, why did you make that purposeless political oration the other day, and get your modicum of praise from the poor editor without being out of pocket at all? As to Hydrastis—the professional scorn of advertisement is well known; but is it not quite as shabby to seek, quack-like, the notoriety of a political sawbones?

There are men who have earned places above profession. There was one to whom I was proud to listen, whether he strode the political boards, lectured on literature and manners, or spake of things holy from the elevation of the chancel; there are jurists whose opinions on matters extraneous to their profession are golden; and there are physicians whose range of thought well enables them to pluck from the brain its rooted sorrow by their deftly planned essays at arousing the mind to its normal interests. To these I am a grateful listener; and if aught of political respect from me can reward their efforts, I cheerfully give it. The moss has so softened and toned down their characters that admiration and reverence rest cheerfully and confidingly upon them.

DIONYSIUS VAGO.

"PUCK" for July is with us; witty, spicy, punny, humorous and satirical; and, withal illustrated by Nahl's pencil.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELISTS.

[Anxious to keep up the literary standard of The Californian, its proprietors have, at an enormous expense, recently engaged the principal novelists of Europe and America to contribute to its columns. In view of the objections sometimes offered to "Only a Clod" and other continued tales, arrangements have been made with the different authors to condense their stories into a space that shall not exceed two columns of our paper. By this means The Californian will be enabled to offer its readers a three-volume novel in a single issue, or so to speak, a seventy-five cent book for ten cents. By the last steamer, we have received our second installment from the pen of a well-known moral and instructive writer, which we give below:]

TERENCE DEUVILLE.

BY CH—L—S L—V—R.

CHAPTER I.

MY HOME.

THE little village of Pilwiddle is one of the smallest and obscurest hamlets on the western coast of Ireland. On a lofty crag, overlooking the hoarse Atlantic, stands "Deuville's Shot Tower"—a corruption by the peasautry of D'Euville's Chateau, so called from my great grandfather Phelim St. Remy D'Euville, who assumed the name and title of a French heiress with whom he ran away. To this fact my familiar knowledge aud excellent pronunciation of the French language may be attributed, as well as many of the events which colored my after life.

The Deuvilles were always passionately fond of field sports. At the age of four, I was already the boldest rider and the best shot in the county. When only eight, I won the St. Remy Cup at the Pilwiddle races—riding my favorite bloodmare Hellfire. As I approached the stand amidst the plaudits of the assembled multitude, and cries of "Thrue fur ye, Masther Terence," and "Oh, but its a Diuville!" there was a slight stir among the gentry, who surrounded the Lord Lieutenant, and other titled personages whom the race had attracted thither. "How young he is—a mere child; and yet how noble looking," said a sweet, low voice, which thrilled my soul.

I looked up and met the full liquid orbs of the Hon. Blanche Fitzroy Sackville, youngest daughter of the Lord Lieutenant. She blushed deeply. I turned pale and almost fainted. But the cold, sneering tones of a masculine voice sent the blood back again into my youthful cheek.

"Very likely the ragged scion of one of these banditti-Irish gentry, who has taken naturally to 'the road.' He should be at school—though I warrant me his knowledge of Terence will not extend beyond his own name," said Lord Henry Somerset, aid-de-camp to the Lord Lieutenant.

A moment and I was perfectly calm, though cold as ice. Dismounting, and stepping to the side of the speaker, I said in a low, firm voice:

"Had your Lordship read Terence more carefully, you would have learned that banditti are sometimes proficient in other arts beside horsemanship," and I touched his holster significantly with my hand. I had not read Terence myself, but with the skillful audacity of my race I calculated that a vague allusion, coupled with a threat, would embarass him. It did.

"Ah—what mean you?" he said, white with rage.

"Enough, we are observed," I replied, "Father Tom will wait on you this evening; and to-morrow morning, my lord, in the glen below Pilwiddle we will meet again."

"Father Tom—glen!" ejaculated the Englishman, with genuine surprise. "What? do priests carry challenges and act as seconds in your infernal country?"

"Yes!" I answered scornfully, "why should they not? Their services are more often necessary than those of a surgeon," I added significantly, turning away.

The party slowly rode off, with the exception of the Hon. Blanche Sackville, who lingered for a moment behind. In an instant I was at her side. Bending her blushing face over the neck of her white filly, she said hurriedly:

"Words have passed between Lord Somerset and yourself. You are about to fight. Don't deny it—but hear me. You will meet him—I know your skill of weapons. He will be at your mercy. I entreat you to spare his life!"

I hesitated. "Never!" I cried passionately; "he has insulted a Deuville!"

"Terence," she whispered, "Terence—for my sake?"

The blood rushed to my cheeks at the loving epithets, and her eyes sought the ground in bashful confusion.

"You love him then?" I cried bitterly.

"No, no," she said agitatedly, "no, you do me wrong. I—I—cannot explain myself. My father!—the Lady Dowager Sackville—the estate of Sackville—the borough—my uncle, Fitzroy Somerset. Ah! what am I saying? Forgive me. Oh, Terence," she said, as her beautiful head sank on my shoulder, "you know not what I suffer!"

I seized her hand and covered it with passionate kisses. But the high-bred English girl, recovering something of her former hauteur, said hastily, "Leave me, leave me, but promise!"

"I promise," I replied, enthusiastically: "I will spare his life!"

"Thanks, Terence—thanks!" and disengaging her hand from my lips she rode rapidly away.

The next morning, the Hon. Capt. Henry Somerset and myself exchanged nineteen shots in the glen, and at each fire I shot away a button from his uniform. As my last bullet shot off the last button from his sleeve, I remarked quietly, "You seem now, my lord, to be almost as ragged as the gentry you sneered at," and rode haughtily away.

CHAPTER II

THE FIGHTING FIFTY-SIXTH.

When I was nineteen years old my father sold the Chateau d'Euville and purchased my commission in the "Fifty-sixth" with the proceeds. "I say, Deuville," said young McSpadden, a boy-faced ensign, who had just joined, "You'll represent the estate in the army, if you won't in the House." Poor fellow, he paid for his meaningless joke with his life, for I shot him through the heart the next morning. "You're a good fellow, Deuville," said the poor boy faintly, as I knelt beside him; "good bye!" For the first time since my grandfather's death I wept. I could not help thinking that I would have been a better man if Blanche—but why proceed? Was she not now in Florence—the belle of the English Embassy.

But Napoleon had returned from Elba. Europe was in a blaze of excitement. The Allies were preparing to resist the Man of Destiny. We were ordered from Gibraltar home, and were soon again en route for Brussels. I did not regret that I was to be placed in active service. I was ambitious, and longed for an opportunity to distinguish myself. My garrison life in Gibraltar had been monotonous and dull. I had killed five men in duel, and had an affair with the Colonel of my regiment, who handsomely apologized before the matter assumed a serious aspect. I had been twice in love. Yet these were but boyish freaks and follies. I wished to be a man.

The time soon came—the morning of Waterloo. But why describe that momentous battle, on which the fate of the entire world was hanging? Twice were the Fifty-sixth surrounded by French cuirassiers, and twice did we mow them down by our fire. I had seven horses shot under me, and was mounting the eighth, when an orderly rode up hastily, touched his cap, and handing me a despatch, galloped rapidly away.

I opened it hurriedly and read:

"Let Picton advance immediately on the right."

I saw it all at a glance. I had been mistaken for a general officer. But what was to be done. Picton's division was two miles away, only accessible through a heavy cross fire of artillery and musketry. But my mind was made up.

In an instant I was engaged with an entire squadron of cavalry, who endeavored to surround me. Cutting my way through them, I advanced boldly upon a battery and sabred the gunners before they could bring their pieces to bear. Looking around, I saw that I had in fact penetrated the French centre. Before I was well aware of the locality, I was hailed by a sharp voice in French:

"Come here, sir!"

I obeyed, and advanced to the side of a little man in a cocked hat.

"Has Grouchy come?"

"Not yet, sire," I replied—for it was the Emperor.

"Ha!" he said suddenly, bending his piercing eyes on my uniform; "a prisoner?"

"No, sire," I said proudly.

"A spy?"

I placed my hand upon my sword, but a gesture from the Emperor bade me forbear.

"You are a brave man," he said.

I took my snuff-box from my pocket, and taking a pinch, replied by handing it, with a bow, to the Emperor.

His quick eye caught the cipher on the lid.

"What! a D'Euville? Ha! this accounts for the purity of your accent. Any relation to Roderick D'Euville?"

"My father, sire."

"He was my schoolfellow at the Ecole Politechnique. Embrace me!" and the Emperor fell on my neck in the presence of his entire staff. Then recovering himself, he gently placed in my hand his own magnificent snuff-box, in exchange for mine, and hanging upon my breast the cross of the Legion of Honor which he took from his own, he bade one of his Marshals conduct me back to my regiment.

I was so intoxicated with the honor of which I had been the recipient, that on reaching our lines I uttered a shout of joy and put spurs to my horse. The intelligent animal seemed to sympathize with my feelings, and fairly flew over the ground. On a rising eminence a few yards before me stood a gray-haired officer, surrounded by his staff. I don't know what possessed me, but putting spurs to my horse, I rode at him boldly, and with one bound cleared him, horse and all. A shout of indignation arose from the assembled staff. I wheeled suddenly, with the intention of apologizing, but my mare misunderstood me, and again dashing forward, once more vaulted over the head of the officer, this time unfortunately uncovering him by a vicious kick of her hoof. "Sieze him!" roared the entire army. I was siezed. As the soldiers led me away, I asked the name of the gray-haired officer. "That—why that's the Duke of Wellington!" I fainted.

* * * * * * *

For six months I had brain fever. During my illness the grapeshot were extracted from my body which I had unconsciously received during the battle. When I opened my eyes I met the sweet glance of a Sister of Charity.

"Blanche!" I stammered feebly.

"The same," she replied.

"You here?"

"Yes, dear; but hush! It's a long story. You see, dear Terence, your grandfather married my great aunt's sister, and your father again married my grandmother's niece, who, dying without a will, was, according to the French law—"

"But I do not comprehend," I said.

"Of course not," said Blanche, with her old sweet smile; "you've had brain fever; so go to sleep."

I understood, however, that Blanche loved me; and I am now, dear reader, Sir Terence Sackville, K. C. B., and Lady Blanche is Lady Sackville.

THE END.

[Petrified Poetry from the American Flag, showing where "he" fell, as the ranks marched on like a surigng tide, as the ranks marched on like a surging tide:]

SONG—"THE STANDARD BEARER."

BY JEAN L. BRUCE.

He bore our flag to the fight that day,
Where the columns moved in bright array,
And each soldier's heart beat high with pride,
As the ranks marched on like a surging tide;
As the ranks marched on like a surging tide;
Thro' the fiercest strife and over death's despair,
He waved our Banner aloft in air,
And there 'mid the flying shot and shell,
Our gallant "Standard Bearer" fell!
Oh! 'twas there he fell!

[More Petrified Poetry from the American Flag, showing how L. M. C. is hankering after B. F. H., and wants her to come oh come to his halls of festivity and pride, down there in Los Angeles, where it is mostly a dreary desert to him, now, without her presence, dear one, at his side:]

COME BACK TO ME.

TO B. F. H.

Come to me, for oh, I'm weary, pining—
Watching for thy welcome, safe return;
Come, for oh, I'm vainly longing, sighing,
And passion my inmost heartstrings burn.
In dreams my thoughts are all of thee,
And in halls of festivity and pride,
All seems a dreary desert to me,
Without thy presence, dear one, at my side.

L. M. C.

Los Angeles, California, 1865.

[Some more Petrified Poetry from the American Flag, showing how, when oh, you think upon that crowd with which their bosom swell, on Independence Day, 'tis only God can tell:]

RAISE THE BANNER HIGH.

Song for the Fourth.

BY S. R.

Oh! think upon that crowd—
Who ne'er before could say,
"We have a right to shout
On Independence Day!"
Say, can you tell the joy
With which their bosoms swell?
'Twere vain for you to say—
'Tis only God can tell!
Then raise the banner high
O'er city, hill and plain,
This Fourth of July
It waves without a stain!

MUSICAL MATTERS.

THE opera season is evidently rapidly drawing to a close. Manager Maguire, having learned from sad experience that the available resources of this locality are not sufficient to sustain the expenditures of his harmonious army, is, like a judicious general, making as speedy a retreat as possible from his untenable position, by forced marches. Nabuco, Il Barbiere, Faust, Lucrezia Borgia, Un Ballo in Maschera and La Favorita have been sung since our last issue, with an intervening full programme concert, on the afternoon of the Fourth. These operas have been excellently rendered by the principal artistes, with fine orchestral and choral accompaniments; yet too often has the cadence and swell of delicious and refining harmonies greeted a thin, though, we are pleased to add, always appreciative audience. Faust, on its first production, drew a fine full house. Morelli repeated his triumph as "Mephistopheles," and Sconcia achieved one as "Margarcta." Miss Phillips, also, won an additional laurel from the public in condescending to assume the minor part of "Siebel," to give strength to the opera. Sbriglia scintillated most brilliantly as "Ricardo" in Un Ballo, on Thursday night, for his benefit, and won abundance of applause and bouquets in the second and third acts. Space will not permit us enumerate the individual excellencies of the week's performances. We can only add our hearty commendation of the general fidelity, perfectness and fervor of the whole troupe in their nightly representations, which never flag or falter amidst the immense labor necessarily exacted from them, or become indifferent before an indifferent audience.

Martha will be given to-night. The graceful and brilliant Don Giovanni will be produced on Monday night.

THE ROMAN LOTTERY.

EVERY Saturday, at noon, the lottery is drawn in Rome, in the Piazza Madama. Half an hour before the appointed time, the Piazza begins to be thronged with ticket-holders, who eagerly watch a large balcony of the sombre old Palazzo Madama (built by Catherine de' Medici,) where the drawing is to take place. This is covered by an awning and colored draperies. In front, and fastened to the balustrade, is a glass barrel, standing on thin brass legs and turned by a handle. Five or six persons are in the balcony, making arrangements for the drawing. These are the officials—one of them being the government officer, and the others persons taken at random, to supervise the proceedings. The chief official first takes from the table beside him a slip of paper on which a number is inscribed. He names it aloud, passes it to the next, who verifies it and passes it on, until it has been subjected to the examination of all. The last person then proclaims the number to the populace below, folds it up, and drops it into the glass barrel. This operation is repeated until every number from one to ninety is passed, verified by all, proclaimed, folded, and dropped into the barrel. The last number is rather sung than called, and with more ceremony than all the rest. The crowd shout back from below. The bell strikes noon. A blast of trumpets sounds from the balcony; a boy dressed in white robes advances from within, ascends the steps, and stands high up before the people, facing the Piazza. The barrel is then whirled rapidly round and round, so as to mix in inextricable confusion all the tickets. This over, the boy lifts high his right hand, makes the sign of the cross on his breast, then, waving his open hand in the air, to show that nothing is concealed, plunges it into the barrel, and draws out a number. This he hands to the official, who names it, and passes it along the line of his companions. There is dead silence below, all listening eagerly. Then, in a loud voice, the number is sung out by the last official, "Primo estratto, numero 14," or whatever the number may be. Then sound the trumpets again, and there is a rustle and buzz among the crowd. All the five numbers are drawn with like ceremony, and then all is over. Within a surprisingly short space of time, these numbers are exhibited in the long frames which are to be seen over the door of every Prenditora di Lotti in Rome, and there they remain until the next drawing takes place. The boy who does the drawing belongs to a college of orphans, an admirable institution, at which children who have lost both parents and are left helpless are lodged, cared for, and educated, the members of which are employed to perform this office in rotation, receiving therefor a few scudi.

It will be seen by the manner in which the drawing of the lottery is conducted, that no precaution is spared by the government to assure the public of the perfect good faith and fairness observed in it. This is, in fact, absolutely necessary in order to establish that confidence without which its very object would be frustrated. But the Italians are a very suspicious and jealous people; and I fear that there is less faith in the uprightness of the government than in their own watchfulness and the difficulty of deception. There can be little doubt that no deceit is practised by the government, so far as the drawing is concerned—for it would be nearly impossible to employ it. Still there are not wanting stories of fortunate coincidences which are singular and interesting; one case, which I have every reason to believe authentic, was related to me by a most trustworthy person, as being within his own knowledge. A few years ago, the Monsignore who was at the head of the lottery had occasion to diminish his household, and accordingly dismissed an old servant who had been long in his palace. Often the old man returned and asked for relief, and as often was charitably received. But his visits at last became importunate, and the Monsignore remonstrated. The answer of the servant was, "I have given my best years to the service of your Eminence—I am too old to labor—what shall I do?" The case was a hard one. His Eminence paused and reflected; at last he said, "Why not buy a ticket in the lottery?" "Ah!" was the answer. "I have not even money enough to supply my daily needs. What you now give me is all I have. If I risk it, I may lose it—and that lost, what can I do?" Still the Monsignore said, "Buy a ticket in the lottery." "Since your Eminence commands me, I will," said the old man; "but what numbers?" "Play on number so and so for the first drawing," was the answer, "and God bless you!" The servant did as he was ordered, and, to his surprise and joy, the first number drawn was his. He was a rich man for life—and his Eminence lost a troublesome dependent.

A capital story is told by the author of the article in the Civilta Cattolica, which is to the point here, and which, even were it not told on such respectable authority, bears its truth on the face of it. As very frequently happens, a poor shopkeeper, being hard-driven by his creditors, went to his priest, an uomo apostolico, and prayed him earnestly to give him three numbers to play in the lottery.

"But how under heaven," says the innocent priest, "has it ever got into your head that I can know the five numbers which are to issue in the lottery?"

"Eh! Padre mio! what will it cost you?" was the answer. "Just look at me and my wretched family; if we do not pay our rent on Saturday, out we go into the street. There is nothing left but the lottery, and you can give us the three lucky numbers that will set all right."

"Oh, there you are again! I am ready to do all that I can to assist you, but this matter of the lottery is impossible; and I must say, that your folly, in supposing I can give you the three lucky numbers, does little credit to your brains."

"Oh, no! no! do not say so, Padre mio! Give me a terno. It will be like rain in May, or cheese on my maccaroni. On my word of honor, I'll keep it secret. Via! You, so good and charitable, cannot refuse me the three numbers. Pray content me this once."

"My son, I will give you a rule for always being content: Avoid Sin, think often on Death, and behave so as to deserve Paradise—and so—"

"Basta! basta! Padre mio! That's enough. Thanks! thanks! God will reward you."

And, making a most profound reverence, off the bottegaio rushes to his house. There he takes down the Libro dei Sogni, calls into consultation his wife and children, and, after a long and earnest discussion and study, the three numbers corresponding to the terms Sin, Death and Paradise are settled upon, and away goes our friend to play them in the lottery. Will you believe it?—the three numbers are drawn—and the joy of the poor bottegaio and his family may well be imagined. But what will you not imagine is the persecution of the poor uomo apostolico which followed. The secret was all over town the next day, and he was beset by scores of applicants for numbers. Vainly he protested, declaring that he knew nothing about it, and that the man's drawing the right numbers was all chance. Every word he said turned into numbers, and off ran his hearers to play them. He was like the girl in the fairy story, who dropped pearls every time she spoke. The worst of the imbroglio was, that in an hour the good priest had uttered words equivalent to all the ninety numbers in the lottery, and the players were all at loggerheads with each other. Nor did this persecution cease for weeks, until those who had played the numbers corresponding to his words found themselves, as the Italians say, with only flies in their hands.

The stupidity of many of the common people in regard to these numbers is wonderful. When the number drawn is next to the number they have, they console themselves with thinking that they were within one of it—as if in such cases a miss were not as bad as a mile. But when the number drawn is a multiple of the one they play, it is a sympathetic number, and is next door to winning; and if the number come reversed—as if, having played 12, it come out 21—he laughs with delight. "Eh, don't you see, you stupid fellow," said the chemist of a village one day to a dunce of a peasant, of whose infallible terno not a single number had been drawn. "Don't you see, in substance all your three numbers have been drawn? and its shameful in you to be discontented. Here you have played 8—44—26, and instead of these have been drawn 7—11—62. Well! just observe! Your 8 is within only one point of being 7; your 44 is in substance 11, for 4 times 11 are 44 exactly; and your 26 is nothing more or less than your 62 reversed; what would you ask more?" And by his own mode of reasoning, the poor peasant sees as clearly as possible that he has really won, only the difficulty is that he cannot touch the prize without correcting the little variations. Ma, pazienzia, he came so near this time, that he will be sure to win the next—and away he goes to hunt out more sympathetic numbers, and to rejoice with his friends on coming so near winning.

Dreams of numbers are, of course, very frequent, and are justly much prized. Yet one must know how to use them, and be brave and bold, or the opportunity is lost. I myself once dreamt of having gained a terno in the lottery, but was fool enough not to play it, and in consequence lost a prize, the very numbers coming up in the next drawing. The next time I have such a dream, of course I shall play; but perhaps I shall be too late, and only lose. And this recalls to my mind a story, which may serve as a warning to the timid and encouragement to the bold. An Englishman, who had lived on bad terms with a very quarrelsome and annoying wife, (according to his own account, of course,) had finally the luck (I mean the misfortune) to lose her. He had lived long enough in Italy, however, to say "Pazienza," and buried his sorrows and his wife in the same grave. But after the lapse of some time, his wife appeared to him in a dream, and confessed her sins towards him during her life, and prayed his forgiveness, and added, that in token of reconciliation he must accept three numbers in the lottery, which would certainly win a great prize. But the husband was obstinate, and absolutely refused to follow the advice of a friend to whom he recounted the odd dream, and who urged him to play the numbers. "Bah!" he answered to this good counsel; "I know her too well; she never meant well to me during her life, and I don't believe she's changed now that she's dead. She only means to play me a trick, and make me lose. But I'm too old a bird to be taken with her chaff." "Better play, them," said his friend, and they separated. In the course of a week they met again. "By-the-way," said the friend, "did you see that your three numbers came up in the lottery this morning?" "The devil they did! What a consummate fool I was not to play them!" "You didn't play them?" "No!" "Well, I did, and won a good round sum, too." So the obstinate husband, mad at his ill-luck, cursed himself for a fool, and had his curses for his pains. That very night, however, his wife again appeared to him, and, though she reproached him a little for his want of faith in her, (no woman could be expected to forego such an opportunity, even though she were dead,) yet she forgave him, and added: "Think no more about it now, for here are three numbers, just as good." The husband, who had eaten the bitter food of experience, was determined at all events not to let his fortune slip again through his fingers, and played the highest possible terno in the lottery, and waited anxiously for the next drawing. He could scarcely eat his breakfast for nervousness that morning; but at last mid-day sounded, and the drawing took place, but no one of his numbers came up. "Too late! taken in!" he cried. "Confound her! she knew me better than myself. She gave me a prize the first time, because she knew I wouldn't play it; and, having thus whetted my passions, she then gave me a blank the second time because she knew I would play it. I might have known better."

From the moment one lottery is drawn, the mind of the people is intent on selecting numbers for the next. Nor is this an easy matter, all sorts of superstitions existing as to figures and numbers. Some are lucky, some unlucky, in themselves, some lucky only in certain combinations, and some sympathetic with others. The chances, therefore, must be carefully calculated, no number or combination being ever played without profound consideration, and under advice of skilful friends. Almost every event in life has numerical signification; and such is the reverence paid to dreams, that a large book exists of several hundred pages, called Libro dei Sogni, containing, besides various cabala and mystical figures and lists of numbers which are "sympathetic," with directions for their use, a dictionary of thousands of objects with the numbers supposed to be represented by each, as well as rules for interpreting into numbers all dreams in which these objects appear, and this book is the constant vade-mecum of a true lottery-player. As Boniface lived, ate, and slept on his ale, so do the Romans on their numbers. They are scrawled over the ruins, on the shop doors, on the sides of the houses, and are given in the almanacs. The very children "lisp in numbers, for the numbers come," and the fathers run immediately to play them. Accidents, executions, deaths, apoplexies, marriages, assassinations, births, anomalies of all kinds, become auguries and enigmas of numbers. A lottery-gambler will count the stabs on a certain body, the drops of blood from a decollated head, the passengers in an overturned coach, the wrinkles in the forehead of a new-born child, the gasps of a person struck by apoplexy, the day of the month and the hour and the minute of his death, the scudi lost by a friend, the forks stolen by a thief, anything and everything, to play them in the lottery. If a strange dream is dreamed—as of one being in a desert on a camel, which turns into a rat, and runs down into the Maelstrom to hide—the Libro dei Sogni is at once consulted, the number for desert, rat, camel and Maelstrom are found and combined, and the hopeful player waits in eager expectation of a prize. Of course, dream after dream of particular numbers and combinations occurs—for the mind bent to this subject plays freaks in the night, and repeats contortedly the thoughts of the day—and these dreams are considered of special value. Sometimes, when an incident occurs of a special numerical signification, the run upon the numbers indicated becomes so great, that the government, which is always careful to guard against any losses on its part, refuses to a low more than a certain amount to be played on them, cancels the rest, and returns the price of the tickets.—Story's Roba di Roma.

RATHER TOO SMART.—A Russian soldier, recently, whilst enjoying himself at a rustic ball in one of the Polish villages, boasted that he could put a bullet through a man's hat at a hundred paces, without touching his head. A peasant accepted the wager, but in order to foil the marksman, squeezed his hat so low down over his eyes that the ball went through hat and head both, and left him a corpse on the ground. The soldier was sentenced to a month's imprisonment for homicide by imprudence; but he appealed against his sentence, alleging that the fault lay with the peasant, and offering, at the same time, to repeat the experiment with the judge, provided the latter did not "bonnet" himself so completely. We are not informed whether the learned functionary accepted the soldier's very fair offer.

TEETOTUM tells us that Miss Buchanan, once rallying a brave soldier on his courage, said: "Now, Captain ———, do you really mean to tell me you can walk up to a cannon's mouth without fear?" "Yes," was the prompt reply, "or a Buchanan's either." And he did it.

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the;

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons wo can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfactiou. my27 3m

---

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always ho called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaiuts.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For salo everywhore hy Druggists and Liquor Dealers or hy

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupturo by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing prcssuro, hy A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriero of Paris Anatomical, Orthopcdical and Surgical Machinist of the Frencb Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spiual Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instrumeuts.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on tbe

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built cxpressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can he had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for tho use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the namo of the Hotel on it, will he in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

CHEAP LOTS FOR SALE.

HOMESTEAD LOTS, inside Larkin street, from $275 to $500, on long time, with interest at ten per cent. per annum, witb perfect title. M. A. BRALY,
Northwest corner Front and Clay streets,
jy1-1m Up stairs.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of tbe above superior instruments can he found at tbe Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done hy a first-class Workman, from Steiuway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

A BAD BREATH!

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it bas separated—how many friends forever parted! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

DIABETES, INDIGESTION, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, STRANGUARY CALCULUS, GRAVEL, CATARRH AND OTHER AFFECTIONS OF THE BLADDER.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

---

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

FURNITURE

Closing Out at any Price!

On account of the Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNDERSELL anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDSTEADS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS,
BEDDING, ETC.,

At Your Own Prices!

ap22 3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, ETC.

WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on band.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
mh4-3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND, & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

ap22-tf

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.

ap22-tf

DR. H. A. BENTON,

Electro-Magnetic Physician,

OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Appliances and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:

Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Viuton, Americau Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.

Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.
ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE!

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other preparations

FOR THE CURE OF

Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,

AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE

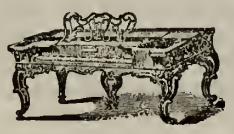
is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,

ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME!



WM. B. BRADBURY'S

New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimouials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.

A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29-tf

---

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers

—IN—

Fine Clothing

—AND—

GENTLEMEN'S

FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,

200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

OVERSTOCKED!

AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

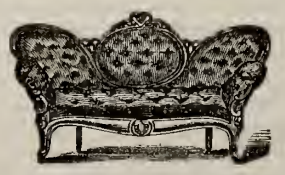
Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.



BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS

—TO—

Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the Californiu Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO

FOR RED BLUFF,

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

no5-tf J WHITNEY, JR., Presiden

THEATRICAL TALK.

AT Maguire's Opera House the new comedy of Woodcock's Little Game was produced during this week. It is a neat little comedy with a very flimsy plot. Mr. Pauncefort was very good in the character of "Woodcock," and was most ably supported by Mrs. Saunders as "Mrs. Colonel Carver." On Thursday this piece was followed by Black-Eyed Susan, in which Mrs. Sophie Edwin made her re-appearance after a short absence from the stage caused by sickness. She received a most enthusiastic welcome from the audience. She played "Susan" delightfully. In pathetic characters Mrs. Sophie Edwin has few equals on the American stage. Mr. Pauncefort's "William" elicited much applause, and the piece was as a whole most creditably performed. Miss Sallie Hinckley, during her absence from San Francisco, must have devoted herself closely to the study of her profession. She exhibits the most marked improvement in her acting and reading, and has filled every part entrusted to her since she joined the company at the Opera House most creditably. Last night The Romance of a Poor Young Man was performed, Mr. Pauncefort rendering the chief character in a style which left nothing to be desired. Mr. Pauncefort, in pathetic passages, never allows his expression of grief to degenerate into a whine; his sorrow is a manly sorrow which the audience can sympathize with without forfeiting their self-respect. This afternoon and evening The Romance of a Poor Young Man will be repeated. On Monday the drama of Enoch Arden, or Under the Palm, by the author of Assessments, or Look after my Josephine. Do You Know Jones? and numerous other successful local pieces, will be produced in magnificent style, with beautiful new scenery and stage effects. Tennyson's beautiful poem, which numbers its readers by tens of thousands, will here be faithfully presented on the stage. Mr. Pauncefort, as "Enoch Arden," Mrs. Sophie Edwin, as "Annie Lee," Mr. Charles Thorne as "Philip Ray," Mrs. Saunders as "Miriam Lane," and the promising and talented young actor, Mr. Aldrich, in an eccentric comedy part, make an undeniably strong cast. The popularity of the poem will insure a full house. The vision scene, "Under the Palm," is a fine piece of scenic art, which fully repays the time and money spent in its production.

Wheatleigh's Eureka Theatre has been doing a splendid business all the week. Wheatleigh may well cry "eureka!" for he has certainly "struck it." The Colleen Bawn, born again in capital style, with fine scenery and good acting, has filled the house, in conjunction with something called a "farce," entitled Jeff Davis in Hoops, or the Confederacy in the Last Ditch. That there is something in a name is pretty plainly proved by the fact that people go to see this production. It is simply the scene of Jeff Davis' capture produced on the stage, without the slightest pretence at fun. It is an even worse attempt at a dramatic composition than Artemus Ward, Showman. The daily papers have passed it over in silence, and I only mention it as a curious proof of how bad a thing can be put upon the stage and tolerated. Poor Wheatleigh has a heavy burden, and his being successful in drawing several laughs during such a piece is the most stupendous proof of his talent that could possibly be given. Wheatleigh is great! The intensely sensational drama of Pauline will be produced on Thursday next. This afternoon the performance will consist of The Bonnie Fishwife, Two Can Play at that Game and Jeff Davis in Hoops; this evening The Colleen Bawn and Jeff Davis in Hoops will be given.

Miss Louisa Clarkson, whom the Call aptly termed a chrysalis, is giving many signs that she will ere long emerge from the pupa condition and become a butterfly. By the by, that word pupa is extremely appropriate. One of those stupid country editors called Miss Clarkson an "animated doll," and pupa happens to be the Latin, both for a doll and a chrysalis. I am sure she will prove an apt pupil, (also from pupus,) and under Wheatleigh's tuition become so good an actress that when she next takes a trip in the interior she will astonish the editorial puppies (pupus again) who called her names. Having twisted that Latin word sufficiently, I will state in plain English that if Miss Louisa Clarkson takes as much pains to succeed as she did in the character of the "Colleen Bawn," she will certainly attain a good position in the profession which she has chosen.

Every one regrets the death of Mr. Alfred Proxe, the finest scenic artist on this coast. His friends mourn a kind-hearted, good man, while to the profession his loss is a most serious one.

I believe that Lady Don is at the present time on her way from Australia to San Francisco. On her arrival she will commence an engagement at Maguire's Opera House. Lady Don is the widow of the late Sir William Don, Bart., a distinguished member of the histrionic profession. Lady Don has lately filled several highly successful engagements in Australia. Her line of business is burlesque and comedy; she is very pretty and graceful, and will no doubt prove a grand success.

TOUCHSTONE.

SEE Middleton & Son's advertisement of Homestead Lots for sale, in another column.

(For the Californian.)

INTERESTING PLANTS.

ANY one having any a plant-cabinet, or glass structure, such as was described in the last number of THE CALIFORNIAN, would be enabled to grow and maintain in health and luxuriance many plants of interest that are rarely seen for the want of a little forethought when stocking a place with plants. The fitting up and furnishing of plant structures are managed much on the same plan as is pursued with a dwelling-house—the furniture dealer and the upholsterer are about the only ones whose taste is consulted, if the expense does not go beyond a certain amount; if it does, then the owner or occupant may have some change made in the programme. So with the plant-cabinet: the gardener or florist is sent for, and the structure to be filled with plants is shown him. What will it cost? If the amount is within the limit, he is engaged; he then sends such things as he has on hand and that will make the most show for the least money.

Why do not persons possessing such places fill them with plants which will be of interest to themselves as well as their friends and visitors? How many of our citizens and families have ever seen the trees and plants from which we derive many of our daily articles of use, such as our tea, coffee, spices; the woods from which our furniture is made; the dye-woods and medicines; each and every one possessing an interest far surpassing all the common plants usually seen, and, further, affording practical information on subjects which are hardly ever alluded to?

Perhaps a short account of a few plants may lead some one who has such a plant-cabinet, or conservatory, to look about and fill it with those things which may be a source of interest and pleasure from the various uses they are applied to as well as their intrinsic beauty:

The Tea plant, (Thea Viridis.) derived from Teha, the Chinese name for tea,) has beautiful evergreen foliage, with small white flowers, very fragrant. The cultivation is the same as that given to the Camellia Japonica. Who would not think of Cowper's beautiful allusion, when seeing this plant:

> "Now stir the fire and close the shutters fast,
> Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round;
> And, while the bubbling and loud-hissing urn
> Throws up a steamy column, and the cups,
> That cheer but not inebriate, wait on each,
> So let us welcome peaceful evening in."

Coffee. (Caffea Arabica,) according to Abbé Raynal, is a native of Upper Ethopia, whence it was transported to Arabia toward the end of the fifteenth century. Bruce is also of the opinion that it is a native of Africa, and that it derives its name from Caffee, a province of Narea, where it grows spontaneously in great abundance. The foliage is very elegant and glossy, the flowers are star-shaped, like the Jasmine, and with a perfume almost overpowering. When in fruit, with its bright scarlet berries afterward turning to a rich purple, there is no plant more ornamental.

Cinnamon (Cinnamomum verum, derived from the Arabic of Kinamon.) belongs to the Laurel family, is a native of Ceylon, of which island it constitutes the chief wealth. It forms a small tree, with leaves somewhat like those of the laurel, but of a lighter hue, having their strongly-marked ribs running lengthwise, with fine cross-fibres. The blossoms are white, nearly destitute of odor, but so abundant that the tree is perfectly covered. The fruit somewhat resembles an acorn, and is often crushed and boiled for its fragrant oil. The cinnamon in use is the peeled bark of the shoots.

Camphor, (Camphora Officinarum.) another of the same family of the Laurel tribe, is a native of China and Japan. It is a very handsome plant.

The Pepper plant (Piper Nigrum and P. excelsum) is a climbing shrub, with jointed stems, parallel-ribbed leaves and catkin-like spikes of flowers.

Nutmeg (Myristica moschata) is a native of the East Indies. The leaves are oblong-oval, glossy on the upper surface and whitish beneath, with a strong aromatic taste. The flowers are small, of a yellowish color. The fruit is about the size of a peach, which, when ripe, splits and discovers the spice in the form of a porous, woody seed (the nutmeg,) within a shell, and surrounded by a fleshy envelope or arillus (the mace.) The latter is a leaflike network of a fine red hue.

The Clove, (Caryophyllus Aromaticus, from karyon, a nut, and phyllon, a leaf,) is a beautiful plant, resembling the Bay tree in its foliage. Every part of it is highly aromatic and pungent, and its beauty and fragrance make it a favorite. Sir T. Raffles says that "Clove trees, as an avenue to a residence, are perhaps unrivaled, the beauty of their form, the luxuriance of their foliage, and above all, the spicy fragrance with which they perfume the air, produce, on driving through a long line of them, a degree of exquisite pleasure only to be enjoyed in the clear light atmosphere of a tropical climate."

India Rubber (Ficus elastica) is also a beautiful plant, with its thick waxy leaves always looking bright and clean. This is one of the very best of room plants, and will bear more neglect than almost any other, and at the same time, if the proper care and attention is bestowed on it, none will show improvement sooner.

The list may be extended indefinitely, embracing many kinds and varieties of plants. Let any one begin with any class of plants, and how soon their care will create a love for them and a desire to possess others of the kind. What can be introduced into the family that will give so much pleasure and stimulate a love of acquiring information—what the habits of the plants are, the various processes of manufacture they have to go through to be fitted for use, etc.?

Why should not our schools have conservatories where the children could learn, from Nature herself, the form and varieties of the trees which produces so many of the various articles of daily use?

IRIS.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

THE "BILLY MULLIGAN" TRAGEDY.—William Mulligan, better known as "Billy Mulligan," locked himself in his room at the St. Francis Hotel yesterday morning, while laboring under an attack of delirium, and forbade any person approaching his presence under penalty of death. He had been flighty for two or three days previous, and to entertain the idea that some parties were seeking his life. He had been locked up in the Station House for safe keeping by his friends on Thursday night, but was released yesterday morning. Subsequent to his release he went to a pawn-broker, and pledged a coat for a revolver, and then sought his room, where his landlady endeavored to see him and procure his pistol. He told her he held her in the kindest esteem, but warned her to go away, and stated that no living being should approach him. The occupants of the St. Francis, from the situation and desperate character of the man, became alarmed and sought the assistance of the police. Officer Chappell endeavored to approach his room by the balcony, which extends around the whole building, but as soon as Mulligan saw him, he fired through the window at him without effect. Mulligan had now the house to himself, all the occupants having vacated it. Jack McNabb, a friend of Mulligan, next attempted an interview with him, with the intention of soothing and disarming him: but Mulligan had become thoroughly frenzied, and told him he would shoot him if he ascended the stairs. McNabb, against the advice of his companion, who endeavored to hold him back, mounted the stairs; he advanced two steps when Mulligan shot him dead. Billy next fired at random up Dupont street, from a window, and shot a young man named Hart, Foreman of Eureka Hose Company, No. 4, the wound soon proving fatal. The whole available police force were now summoned and the house surrounded. After waiting nearly an hour for his next sally, one of their number in the building opposite shot him, through the window, with a Springfield rifle, the ball entering his forehead and causing instant death. Mulligan had locked himself up in the forenoon, and it was after three o'clock when he was shot. An immense crowd gathered in the vicinity, and that portion of the city became greatly excited as events progressed.

THE CELEBRATION OF THE FOURTH.—The day was pleasant, slightly clouded, with but little wind. There was an immense display of National colors from flag staffs, windows, doorways and the shipping. The streets were thronged, and every balcony and window along the route of the procession was filled with ladies and children. The military portion of the procession was very effective in display and organization. The civic portion fell short of last year's in extent and variety, owing to the prejudice existing against permitting the colored people to join in and bring up the rear of the procession. Nevertheless, the celebration passed off happily, and but few accidents marred the festivities of the day. The oration, by J. W. Dwinelle, was worthy of the occasion, but the poem was not so well conceived. The fireworks in the evening did not exactly meet the approbation of the large crowd that had assembled to see them—in fact they proved almost a failure, some going off prematurely, others hardly going off at all, and none equaling similar exhibitions of the two previous years. Our city paid very liberally for them, and we are afraid our Supervising Fathers were rather Tripped up on their contract.

OUR public schools have never been in so prosperous a condition as at present. With the facilities offered by the splendid new school buildings and the many improvements made in the various departments, it is believed that no city in the Union excels our own in educational advantages. The most recent improvement has been the engrafting on the High School, under the title of "The Latin School," a new department, where the student is given a higher and more complete preparatory Classical course of studies. Superintendent Pelton announces the course of instruction given at the Latin School elsewhere in our paper.

THE MEXICAN LOAN.—Mr. Samuel Brannan has assumed direct personal management and agency for the sale of the bonds of the Mexican ten per cent. loan—a loan to be secured by one-half the revenues derived from the customs of all the principal ports on the Pacific coast of Northern Mexico. From the agent's well known ability and energy, backed by the current of public opinion, which must eventually enforce the Monroe Doctrine and re-establish the Mexican Republic, we do not doubt but that the subscription list to the loan will speedily be filled.

ACCIDENTS ON THE FOURTH.—A man was killed by the sprinkling car of the Omnibus Railroad Company, just before daylight on the Fourth. He had been ejected from a grocery in a drunken state, and was lying on the track... A child of Mr. Woodthorpe, connected with the Mercantile Gazette, fell through a skylight on the roof of the Pacific Fruit Market, and it is supposed, received fatal injuries... A boy named W. Powell, had his hand so terribly lacerated by the explosion of a pistol, that it was found necessary to amputate three of his fingers.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent. per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning.
A. KOHLER, 424 Sansome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6.500.000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
'y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25 tf

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched in the month of JULY, 1865:

JULY 3rd - - - - - - SACRAMENTO.
JULY 18th - - - - - - GOLDEN CITY.

From Folsom-street Wharf, at eleven o'clock, A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
je24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

CALIFORNIA COLLEGIATE
INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG LADIES,
64, 66, 68, 70 Silver Street, San Francisco,
FOR BOARDING AND DAY PUPILS,

Will commence its next Session THURSDAY, July 6th. A few vacancies remaining, early application will be necessary for those desiring admission. Further particulars may be obtained by calling upon or addressing
MISS M. LAMMOND,
je24-1m Principal.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

AMALIE J. R. SCHAEBEN, Plaintiff; vs. AUGUSTE A. SCHAEBEN, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to AUGUSTE A SCHAEBEN, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 1st day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETBNER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney, office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)
ap8-tjy8-inc

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR
OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
TO BE HELD IN THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,
IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.

The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Exective Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.

No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.

A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.

Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 2d of August.

Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 21 of August.

The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.

The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.

The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.

The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.

No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.

All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.

All communications to be addressed to C. S, HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hunscom, Edward Nunan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewstor & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
dc17-5m NEW YORK.

PRINTING! PRINTING!!

H. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
NO. 522 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansomo and Montgomery, - - San Francisco.

All Descriptions of JOB PRINTING done cheaper and as good as anywhere else in the city.
fc4-tf

COMMERCIAL STEAM PRINTING HOUSE.
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.,
517 CLAY and 514 COMMERCIAL STREETS.

Every description of BOOK, JOB and POSTER PRINTING done in the best style and at the lowest rates.
BOOK-BINDING and RULING done to order.

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,
NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET,
(OVER FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE DEPOT,)
INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED
Skirt Supporters and Chest
EXPANDERS,
For Expanding the Chest, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

This Supporter possesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who have used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishing to possess
GRACE OF FORM
AND
SYMMETRY OF PERSON.
It is comfortable to the frame, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of
GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of
BUST,
Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. READ also has a Supporter which she can confidently recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation; gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M. my27-tf

ALLCOCK'S
POROUS PLASTERS
PAIN RELIEVING AND STRENGTHENING

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.
THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Brandreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.
☞ Sold by all Druggists. dc17-3m

FLOWERS! FLOWERS!!

The attention of the Public is invited to
The Floral Repository,
Of C. B. MILLER, Bush street, opposite Cosmopolitan Hotel.

Mr. MILLER keeps constantly on hand the rarest and choicest flowers that the season or the market affords, and will furnish parties or private houses with floral decorations at the shortest notice. Bouquets made to order, and sent to their destination with promptness. Mr. Miller would invite attention to some curious specimens of the Orchis family which his collection affords, and he would be pleased to have a call from all lovers of Flowers, whether they wish to purchase or not.

"HOME, SWEET HOME!"

No home of taste is complete without Aquaria, Gold Fish, Birds, Fern Cases, new and rare Plants, Bulbs and Seeds, Cut Flowers and Bouquets for Weddings, Hanging Baskets, Rustic Stands, Shells, Minerals, etc.

A long experience at the East justifies Mr. Miller in promising to please the patrons who may favor him with a trial. He will also be happy at all times to furnish those who take an interest in flowers with any information relative to their care and culture that may be desired.

MILLER'S 206 Bush street,
Opposite the Cosmopolitan, San Francisco.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:

Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.

9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40

FROM THE CITY

10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.

Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.
my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

A NEW INVENTION!
LEWIS'S
Self-Acting Wagon Brake!

By means of this invention, the wheels of a wagon are made to lock themselves when going down hill, certainly and effectively, and are released the moment there is any strain on the horses, without attention on the part of the driver.

It is already in use in many parts of the East, and has everywhere given satisfaction.

It will lock a wheel so that it CANNOT REVOLVE, the efforts of the wheel to turn making the lock tighter.

It operates in an instant, locking or unlocking as necessary.

It needs no care and requires no exertion.

It cannot fail to work, and is easier on the team than the common brake.

Simple in its construction, and costing no more than the common lock, it gives perfect security, and a child may drive the heaviest wagon over the steepest roads.

It can be used in the same way as the common hand or foot brake: A touch on the lever will effectually lock the wheels, and

RUNAWAYS ARE IMPOSSIBLE.

State, county or shop rights for sale.

For particulars address DULL & GEORGE, San Francisco, or apply at Whitbeck's wagon factory, Market street above First. ap8-1f

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY,
A CURE FOR EVERY FORM OF
Pulmonary Complaint!
COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH, SPITTING OF BLOOD, LIVER COMPLAINT, etc., etc.

Consumption,

Which carries off more victims than any other disease, and which baffles the skill of the Physician to a greater extent than any other malady, often
YIELDS TO THIS REMEDY,
when all others prove ineffectual.
AS A MEDICINE,
Rapid in relief, soothing in effect, safe in its operation, it is
UNSURPASSED!
while as a preparation, free from noxious ingredients, poisons or minerals; uniting skill, science and medical knowledge, combining all that is valuable in the vegetable kingdom for this class of disease, it is
INCOMPARABLE!
and is entitled, merits and receives the enviable appellation of the
INVALID'S FRIEND.

Sold by all druggist's and by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco

LEECHES! LEECHES! LEECHES!

We are in receipt, per every steamer, of
FRESH SWEDISH LEECHES,
which we offer for sale at lower rates than ever before on this coast. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
je10 3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sole Agents,
je10 3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents,
je10-3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

NEW WHOLESALE STORE!

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the host selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES!

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.

ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff; vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)

ap22-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE RACKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS RACKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS RACKFORD, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. jy1-5t

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office:

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S
no26 San Francisco.

DR. LIBBEY,

WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracten with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no chargo.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. je10-1m

---

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

---

PROPOSALS

FOR PUBLISHING ON STEEL

A PORTRAIT OF

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND SON.

This Picture was photographed by Brady in the White House at Washington, and is the last the President ever sat for.

It represents President Lincoln at home with his son reading the Bible, and is pronounced by the best judges to be superior to any other ever taken. We would recommend all who desire a first-class engraving—a life-like picture of President Lincoln—to subscribe now and receive their pictures from the first impressions of the plate. Early subscribers will receive proof-sheets. We propose to furnish to subscribers a fac-simile of the card engraved on steel 10 1-2x12 1-2 inches on plate paper 19x24 inches. Price in Rosewood or Gilt Frame, 14x18 inches, $5.

☞ Sold only by Subscription.

DEWING & LAWS, General Agents,
je24-tf 511 Sacramento Street.

GUARDIAN'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 24th day of April, 1865, in the matter of the estate of Louis Conrad Meyer, a minor, the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said minor, will sell to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on the 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. & A. Barstow, No. 24 Montgomery Block, corner of Montgomery and Washington streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said Louis Conrad Meyer in and to that certain lot or parcel of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz.:

Commencing at the northwesterly corner of Octavia and Fulton streets, thence running south along the west line of Octavia street, 275 feet; thence, at a right angle, easterly 275 feet; thence at a right angle, northerly 275 feet; and thence westerly along the north line of Fulton street 275 feet to the place of beginning; comprising a portion of Western Addition, Block No. 150, and surrounding streets.

And the said guardian will receive offers or bids therefor from this date to said 12th day of July, 1865, at 12 o'clock noon at the place aforesaid.

JOHANNA MEYER, Guardian of the Estate
June 10, 1865.-5t of Louisa Conrad Meyer, a minor.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be ready for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th March, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - $660,000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29-3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25-3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10,000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL TYPE

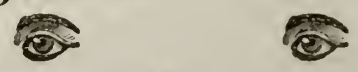
DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of doubt, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'



CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lachrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Augusture Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root. Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Pleurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtue of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG, M. D.,
Sole Proprietor, New York.

Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

INTOLERANCE.

"And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other."—Acts xv., 39.

OFF the coast of Cornwall, fourteen miles west from the great naval station of Plymouth, and full in the track of homeward-bound ships sailing up the British Channel, there rises in deep water a great ridge of rocks, whose sharp and rugged crest, sometimes quite hidden by the waves, and at other hours of the tide appearing above them, was known and dreaded for ages under the name of the Eddystone. Many a good ship, bearing many a precious life, after having passed in safety the dangers of the outer ocean, was wrecked on those rocks, within sight of the English shore. For the danger was a hidden one: even by day, and still more by night, the poor sailor was in the jaws of destruction before he was aware. At last, means were taken to warn off from that peril. A lighthouse was built on the Eddystone: and so confident was its builder in the strength and stability of his work, that he was accustomed to say that he wished no better than to spend a night in it during the fiercest storm that ever blew. He had his wish. One afternoon, while he was visiting his lighthouse, a fearful hurricane arose, which lasted all the night. When the morning broke, the people on shore looked out for the well-known tower, rising from the waves; but it was gone—swept clean away: and no one that had been in it was ever seen again. Another lighthouse followed, built of wood, which used to bend like a tree before the gale: but after standing fifty years it was destroyed by fire. Finally came the present noble structure, which has borne the brunt of the fierce storms of the channel, and cast its saving light over the dark waters, now for more than a hundred years. It is pleasant to think of the religious spirit in which architect and workmen wrought together on that slight-looking, yet strong tower. Round the highest chamber you may read, cut in the stone, these words: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it;" and the last mason-work done on the structure was the cutting on the topmost stone words in an ancient language, which mean Praise to God. You will think, I know, that it was a good and noble work, to erect, in the face of unheard-of difficulties, in the midst of a stormy sea, and off an iron-bound coast, that lighthouse tower, to warn away from the fatal reef where so much treasure and so much life had perished.

My Christian friends, right in our track, sailing over the sea of life, there is (as it were) a perilous reef, on which many more, that were not utterly lost, have suffered damage of spars and hull. If I were called to name this perilous rock in a single word, I should call it Intolerance: intolerance of people who differ from us. I will grant that the disposition to be intolerant of those who disagree with them, is found in the highest degree in the very best, noblest, most honest and earnest of mankind: it is present in the highest degree just in those persons who have the warmest hearts and the clearest heads. It is very hard, when you see, clear as the daylight, what ought to be done, and when you are earnestly desirous that it should be done, to bear patiently with stupid and wrong-headed people who will not think as you do; or who, even after they know quite well what ought to be done, hang back and will not do it. And there can be no doubt at all, that there is nothing which helps a man so effectually to show what seems a fair and tolerant spirit in any matter, as the fact that he really cares nothing at all about the matter. The churchman, who cares exceedingly little for the Church—who cares for it nothing at all in comparison with his own ease or popularity—finds it quite easy to bear with those who want to pull the Church down. But that is not a tolerant spirit: that is an indifferent, selfish, mean, contemptible spirit; the spirit of the man who can tolerate any opinion, because in truth he cares much for none. The true tolerant spirit is with him who holds his views and beliefs strongly as his life; who feels their truth and importance deeply and keenly; and yet who can give other people credit for honesty and sense when they think quite differently—can bear without irritation the temperate expression of these different opinions—can feel that such difference need not excite unkindness—need not break off friendship; need not bring things to this point, that men cannot meet and speak. Because one person thinks that one way of appointing ministers to vacant parishes is the right way, and another person thinks that another way altogether is the right way, that is no reason why they should cease to exchange a friendly greeting, and pass each other with an angry scowl. Yet there is a strong tendency to all this mischief and misery, in fallen human nature. There can be no doubt whatsoever, that intolerance is a rock ahead in every honest man's course and in every earnest Christian's, of which he must diligently strive and pray, by the help of God's Blessed Spirit, that he may steer clear.

Now it is possible that the words in which I have described this peril of which I desire that we all may be warned, have turned your thoughts too exclusively to differences in matters political, ecclesiastical, or religious; to differences on those public questions which we all know do excite such keen and angry feeling; and which only very fair, temperate, thoughtful, well-informed and large-hearted people are able to discuss without getting into a rage. But we are to remember that the self-same spirit which has made some men, claiming to be very religious men, refuse to speak peaceably to such as would not think as they did on some trumpery matter of ecclesiastical detail, may appear just as really in all the ordinary business and conversation of life. The rock against which I think my text warns us, is Intolerance of difference from ourselves, in its largest sense: the desire in everything to have our own way; the disposition not to yield to others, to give and take; the tendency to quarrel with such as differ from us in opinion or belief; and to split off altogether from such, parting from them in anger. It will be a good work to plant a beacon on this rock, to erect a lighthouse here, that we may all diligently shun it. It is a dangerous rock: the consequences of striking on it are painful and humiliating, and there is a natural current setting in that direction; there is a tendency that way in the hearts of us all. We all want to get our own way. We are all ready to be angry if any one comes across our getting it. And indeed the beacon is already built for us in the sad story, to which I am to turn your thoughts. We may well write upon it, the thankful words cut in the last stone of the Eddystone lighthouse—the solemn Praise to God! For if it often helps to cheer us, to look back upon the good examples recorded in Holy Scripture, I think it often does us as much good, and perhaps there is something that comes even more warmly and touchingly home to our weak and wayward hearts, when we are invited to learn and profit by the wrong-doings of good men.—Graver Thoughts of a Country Parson.

General Custer—An Incident of the Review.—The Third Cavalry approaches, and while it is yet far in the distance a notable and romantic episode occurs. A horseman is seen dashing up the street at break-neck pace. His large bay horse leaps in the air as if it were his proper element. Only a centaur should keep his seat on such a stallion. But the horseman, whose white gauntlets are wound in the taut reins, has tamed men as well as horses. His name is Custer, and he is of a shape to recall the picturesqueness of feudal years, of a spirit indomitable and erratic. His complexion is that of a follower of Odin, the fair and ruddy, and set in a sunrise of golden hair, which ripples upon his blue shoulders, shrouding the double stars; and on his left arm hangs a broad wreath of evergreens. His steed, as if in the lists, has leaped so high as to throw his foot from the stirrup and shake his sword from its scabbard. His hat blows away, and in the sunshine his locks, unskeined, stream a foot behind him. It is a runaway, like the charge of a Sioux chieftain, and all the people rise half in wonder, half in shudder. The cheer that was to have greeted him falls to a sibilant hush—a dozen orderlies sweep in pursuit, the President and Cabinet start up in involuntary fear; but to those passing, Custer throws a rapid salute, and bends his wild horse's hit down to his stirrups, and stops him as if a strong man's had chained a thunderbolt. So, tamed and docile the steed ambles back, the President salutes this soldier-Rarey, and the street rings with the involuntary homage of the everyday heart to the man of romance. Custer should have lived in a less sordid age. His day passed away at Ashby de la Zouche. The staff of Custer is of his own dashing mettle, and they as well as his entire division wear red neck-cloths, the oddest, most fanciful and most effective device in the army.—N. Y. World.

A "Poker" Reminiscence.—What steamboat man or traveler of that day does not remember Charley Russell—a steamboat clerk then, a captain afterwards, and a clever fellow always? Charley perpetrated a sell, in conjunction with a party of boys, regular blades. Charley met the celebrated Captain Marryatt, at the Galt House, and added immensely to the tourist's stock, with anecdotes and high-colored stories of Western life, including steamboat explosions, murders, duels, and "how poker was played." Charley consented to gratify Marryatt's wish to see the game. "You shall see to-night," said Charley, and forthwith arranged the plan. The night came, and the wonder-seeking Englishman was ushered into the room where the "boys" were got up in style for the occasion. Each had a pair of pistols and a bowie-knife in his belt, and piles of bank notes before him. Marryatt became alarmed, but pluckily stood his ground. The game commenced, the players, in high spirits; money was lost by the thousands, and drinks and oaths, the necessary concomitants of poker, were plentiful. Then came the sell. Charley lost vast sums in a bet, the charge of foul play was made, and a fight commenced; bowie-knives flashed in the air, pistols were fired, the lights were extinguished, and the terrified Marryatt rushed from the room. The next day he saw Charley in the capacity of steamboat clerk. On his return to England, Marryatt published an account of this scene, and to illustrate the character of Western people, of whom he took Charley Russell as a specimen, he said: "The next day I saw this young man clerking for a living, though he lost $30,000 the previous night." Charley had lost it in Brandon money, worth something less than half a cent on a dollar.

A "Great" Man Gone.—One of the greatest men that the present century has produced (says the London Times) was buried at the pretty little new church at Hertford Heath. We allude to the well-known big man of Hertfordshire, Mr. G. J. Coleman, who died on the fourth of April, at the ripe age of seventy-seven. Mr. Coleman was formerly purveyor to the East India College, at Haileybury, and hence will be well known to many of our readers. In very early manhood he weighed as little as eleven stone, a moderate weight for a man standing about five feet ten inches in his stockings. Upward of a quarter of a century since he began to increase in size, and steadily progressed until he obtained the enormous weight of thirty-one stone. Some idea of his great size may be gathered from the fact that his thigh measured four feet in circumference; his knee was thirty-two inches round, and his ankle twenty-eight inches. Until within a very few months, he took his daily constitutional walk; and his fatal illness (an attack of bronchitis) was only of a few days' duration. His exterior coffin was three feet four inches in breadth, and, from its vast size, had to be conveyed to the church on a bier, as no ordinary hearse was sufficiently capacious to receive it. The total weight of the coffin and contents was upward of eleven hundred weight. We believe that Mr. Coleman was the heaviest man of the present time, though he fell considerably short of the weight attained by the celebrated Daniel Lambert.

A Good Snake Story.—I have heard a most astonishing story of a snake, which I will relate, to show the wonderful degree of forethought displayed by the reptile in question.

It is well known that snakes are fond of milk. There was once a snake, not exempt from this weakness of its fellow reptiles, which hit upon the following ingenious expedient to gratify its taste: It visited a room in which a black nurse and her nurseling slept, and every night his snakeship would creep into the bed, cunningly insert the tip of its tail into the baby's mouth to amuse it, and prevent its crying, while the hideous reptile substituted itself for the infant which it thus deprived of its natural food, the nurse sleeping on, unconscious of having such a monstrous nurseling.

This went on for some time, until the infant, being thus cheated of half its allowance of food, became so thin that suspicion was excited, and an old negress was set to watch the nurse at night, the delinquent was caught in the act, and expiated its offense with its life, while the poor baby, being no longer kept on short commons, recovered its strength, and grew fine and fat as before.

I was unfeeling enough to laugh at this story, told me in the most pathetic manner by a lady who firmly believed it; and I made matters worse by expressing my regret at the snake's life not having been spared on account of its inventive genius.—Brazilian Sketches.

The Old Country.—Crowded as England is with a hungry population, five per cent. of her soil is not under cultivation. Yet the proportion of cultivated to the uncultivated land is higher in England than in any other country in Europe. In Russia less than one-fifth of the soil is under cultivation; in Sweden, one-seventh; in Austria and Holland, one-fifth; in Switzerland, one-fourth; in France, fifty-four hundredths. There is really no need of emigration. In England, it appears by a Parliamentary report, there are sixteen millions of acres wholly unproductive that might easily be made productive. The reason why those acres are permitted to be unimproved is that as soon as they are enclosed, and before they can be sufficiently reclaimed to produce a paying crop, they become subject to tithe and tax. Hence only men of large capital dare undertake the task, and they prefer to invest their capital where the return is more speedy and more certain.

A Petrolian who is doing the "tower" of Europe thus graphically describes Constantinople: "Konstantinopul has a capitle sight. It looks from seving hills up on bewtiful specticles ockerpieing the hole feeld in vishun. Thars the Phosphorus, the sea of murmurer, Mount Limpus, the Hellspond, and cetery, a panniramer that brings to mind the wurds of the sellybrated Moor:

"And O! ef thar be a lyceum upon airth,
It is this, it is this!"

A new candidate for the honors of Camille lately appeared at Winter Garden, New York. Her name is Miss Hosmer. The Clipper says: "Camille has become quite a favorite with our star actresses since Miss Heron set the ball in motion. We have had Miss Heron in the part, Mrs. Bowers, Miss Davenport, Miss Western, and others, and now we are called upon to pass judgment on the efforts of Miss Hosmer; she is to be assisted by Barton Hill as 'Armand.'"

A French paper relates that when Rothschild was asked whether he would not like to become temporal King of the Jews in Palestine, he said: "O, no, I would rather be Jew of the Kings than King of the Jews."

A temperance editor, in drawing attention to an article against ardent spirits in one of the inner pages of his paper, says: "For the effects of intemperance see our inside."

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK,

—AND—

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS,

Office and Salesrooms—No. 404 Montgomery Street, Two doors from California street.

SPECIAL AND PEREMPTORY!

CREDIT SALE

OF

HOMESTEAD LOTS AT AUCTION.

MONDAY,

Monday, - - - July 17, 1865,

AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON,

200 HOMESTEAD LOTS

ON THE

LINE OF THE MARKET STREET RAILROAD.

We will sell at Auction, on easy terms, 200 Homestead Lots, situated on the line of the Market Street Railroad, south and west from the Willows.

The Property to be sold comprises some rises of the most beautifully-located Lots in that part of the city. They commaod a fine view, aad can be improved without any expense for grading. The Lots are within fifty yards of the Market Street Railroad. The soil is good, and would make fine gardens.

Maps of this Property, showing location and full particulars, can be had at our office.

Title—United States Patent.

TERMS.—One half cash, one-half one year at 1 per cent. per month interest, secured by mortgage.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,
Auctioneers.

jy8 2t

NOTICE TO FAMILIES!

WE CALL THE ATtention of Housekeepers to our fine assortment of Provisions, Wines, Liquors, etc.:

PROVISIONS.

Coffee, roasted; Green Coffee, all kinds;
Pure Ground Coffee, Choice Teas, Cocoa,
Chocolate, Sugar, all kinds; Flour, Butter,
California Cheese, Italian Cheese, Syrup,
Lard, Barton & Gustier Oils, Olive Oil,
Possel Fils, Spice of all kinds, Pickles,
Pepper, Pepper-sauce, Mustard, all kinds,
Oysters, Lobsters, Pie Fruits, Pine Apples,
Spanish Olives, Fruits au Juis, Brandy Fruits,
Honey, Citron, Peaches, fresh and dry,
Dried Apples, Beans, all kinds, Codfish,
Corn and Oatmeal, Hams and Bacon,
Chile Negro, Maccaroni, all kinds; Farina,
Figs, Jams and Jellies, Raisins, Mackerel,
Yeast powders, Crackers, all kinds;
Coal Oil, Castor Oil, Washing Blue,
Rice, Sardines, Starch, Washiug-soda,
Soap, Candles, Clothes Pins and Lines,
Shoe Blacking, Brooms and Brushes, Baskets,
Pails and Cans, Tubs and Wringer,
Carpet Tacks, Almonds, Nuts, etc.

WINES AND LIQUORS FOR FAMILY USE.

Otard, Dupny & Co.'s Cognac,
L. Delprat & Co.'s Cognac, Old Tom,
Sazerac Brandy, Cognac Pellevoisin,
American Brandy, Scotch Whisky,
Bourbon Whisky, Magnolia Whisky,
Holland Gin, Segars and Tobacco,
Rum, Ale and Porter, in Bottles,
Port Wine, Claret Wine, French;
Claret Wine, California; Currant Wine,
White Wine, California; Ginger Wine,
White Wine, sauterne; Angelica Wine,
Malaga sweet Wine, Madeira Wine,
Muscatel Wine, Leoville Medoc Wine,
Lognac Wine, Chat. Margoux Winc,
Cherry Cordial, Champagne, Cliquot;
Champagne, Heidsieck & Co.; Wine Bitters,
Champagne, Ernest Irroy & Co., Marischino,
Champagne, green seal, Kirschenwasser,
Vermouth, Noilly Pratt & Co.; Schuapps,
Sonoma Champagne, etc., etc., etc., etc.

All of which we offer for sale, by wholesale and retail, at the same figures to be had in first hands. Those wishing to get a

Pure Article of Ground Coffee,

Can have it ground in the mill at our store, in a few moments—Java, Mocha, Rio, and Costa Rica Coffees.

Do not mistake the aumber the first time you call—531 Washington, a few doors below Montgomery—and you will always know where to buy your Provisions hereafter.

Hotel and Restaurant proprietors, and families, will find it greatly to their advantage to examine our Goods aod PRICES. All goods warranted, and delivered by our teams throughout the city and suburbs.

Orders from the interior solicited, and promptly filled.

B. SBARBORO & BRO.,

Importers and Dealers in Provisions, Liquors and Family Wines, No. 531 Washington street,

Below Montgomery, next door below the "Examiner" Office, San Francisco. (Brick building.) jy1-3m

---

THE CALIFORNIAN is published by A. A. Stickney, John Collner, and J. P. Bogardus

---

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

MR. GEORGE PAUNCEFORT,

SUPPORTED BY

THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Afternoon and Evening, July 8th, 1865,

The Sensation Drama entitled

ROMANCE OF A POOR YOUNG MAN!

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,

SATURDAY, July 8th,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

ON MONDAY EVENING, JULY 10TH,

The Original Drama of

ENOCH ARDEN;

OR, UNDER THE PALM.

By the Author of "Assessments," "Do You Know Jones?" etc., etc.

Ench Arden.....Mr. Pauncefort.
Philip Ray.....Mr. Chas. Thorne, Jr.
Job Vincent.....Mr. Aldrich.
Anne Lee.....Mrs. Sophie Edwin.
Miriam Lane.....Mrs. Saunders.

New Scenery, Magnificent Tableau and Beautiful Vision Scenes.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - 50 cents
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

DRY GOODS! DRY GODS!

TAAFFE & CO.

ARE OFFERING AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,
NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

THEIR ENTIRE SPRING IMPORTATION OF

FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS!

ALL OF WHICH WERE PURCHASED AT THE

LOW PRICES RULING DURING THE PANIC,

AND WILL BE OFFERED AT

From 20 to 50 per cent. Less than the

PRESENT COST OF IMPORTATION.

SILKS.

In splendid Moire Antique, Watered, Chene, Plain, Plaid, Brocade and Black of every description.

DRESS GOODS,

In Poplins, Mozambiques, Challies, Empress and Ottoman Cloths. Delaines, French, English and American Prints, Ginghams, Organdies, Percales, etc.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS,

Cotton and Linen Sheetings and Shirtings, Superfine Table Linen, Napkins, Towels, Towelling, Blaukets, Quilts, Flanuels, Lace and Muslin Curtains, and Jacouets; Swiss, Cambric, Mull and Nainsook Muslins, in plain, striped and plaid.

MOURNING GOODS,

Alpaca, Bombazines, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Delaines, Debages, Prints, Ginghams, Crapes, etc.

HOSIERY,

Gentlemen's, Ladies' and Children's Under-Garments, Hose and Half Hose, in Silk, Merino, and Cotton; Gentlemen's Linen and Cotton Shirts, Collars, Cravats, Neckties, etc., etc.

Cloaks, Sacques, Basques and Opera Cloaks,

IN THE LATEST PARIS FASHIONS.

ALSO,

FROM AUCTION:

1,000 dozen Ladies' Cotton Hose, at $3 per dozen;
400 pieces Freoch Print, yard wide, 30 cents;
900 Dress, Plaid, Striped and Plain French Poplins, from from 30 cents to $1 per yard;
600 pieces good Shirting Linens, from 30 to 75 cents per yara;
5,000 Dresses best Merrimac Prints, at $2 per dress;
2,000 dozeu Ladies' and Gentlemen's Linen Cambric Handkerchiefs, from $1 50 to $15 per dozen.

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Under the Lick House.

jy8

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.

517

CLAY STREET, BET, SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY.

my27

WHEATLEIGH'S

EUREKA THEATRE,

Montgomery street between Pine and California.

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH.....Lessee and Manager.
JAMES DOWLING.....Stage Manager.
RALPH PHELPS.....Treasurer.

Saturday Evening, July 8th,

Last night of the great Irish sensation Drama, entitled the

COLLEEN BAWN!

In which MR. CHARLES WHEATLEIGH will personate, the roles of

MILES NA COPPALEEN

AND

DANNY MANN.

Ann Chute.....Fanny Morgan Phelps
Hardress Cregan.....Mr. F. Thorne
Kyrle Daly.....Fred Franks
Father Tom.....Geo. Mitchell
Mr. Corrigan.....J. E. Myers
Hyland Creagh.....J. Torrence, Jr.
Eily O'Connor (with song)...Miss Louise Clarkson
Mrs. Cregan.....Mrs. Judah
Shelah.....Mrs. Francis Gass

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,

FOR FAMILIES!

ADMISSION, 50 cents. Children half-price.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCES TO-DAY, JULY 8TH,

JEFF DAVIS IN HOOPS;

OR, THE CONFEDERACY IN THE LAST DITCH,

AND

TWO CAN PLAY AT THAT GAME.

Dress Circle, $1 00; Parquette, 50 and 25 cents; Private Boxes, $5 00.

Box Office open at 10 o'clock, when Seats can be secured.

MEXICAN 10 PER CENT.

SIX YEAR LOAN.

The undersigned having a full Power of Attorney from Gen. GASPAR SANCHEZ OCHOA, Commissioner for

THE REPUBLIC OF MEXICO,

as Agent for the sale of the Bonds of this

POPULAR LOAN,

These Bonds will be sold at

FIFTY CENTS ON THE DOLLAR, GOLD COIN.

They bear date July 1st, 1865, and are now ready to be furnished in sums to suit, in denominations from $50 to $1,000. Principal aad interest payable in

UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

Interest Payable Semi-Annually, at the PACIFIC BANK in the city of San Francisco.

The payment and redemption of these Bonds and Coupons are secured by the transfer to the undersigned, as Trustee, of one-half of the fiscal proceeds of

ALL THE REVENUES AND DUTIES

Derived from the Custom Houses of

MAZATLAN, GUAYMAS, MANZANILLO,

And all the Ports in the States of

SINALOA, SONORA AND COLIMA,

And from the Mines of said States,

Which Revenues and Duties, so soon as collected, are to be deposited and held by the undersigned in the PACIFIC BANK, San Francisco, and employed exclusively for the payment of said Bonds and Interest.

General Ochoa has made an assigament to the undersigned, of one-half of all the Duties received at the above Custom Houses, for the payment of said Loan and Interest, and also to appoint Agents to receive the above Revenues.

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS

Are now open at our office, Room No. 3, third floor, Masonic Building,

No. 420 Montgomery street.

SAMUEL BRANNAN,
Agent.

jy8

DEWING & LAWS.

No. 511 Sacramento street, San Francisco.

GENERAL AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC STATES,

FOR THE SALE OF

New American Cyclopedia, 16 volumes; Annual Cyclopedia, first issued in 1861, 1 volume annually; Anecdotes, 2 volumes; History of the Civil War, 2 volumes; History of the World, by Philip Smith, B. A., 8 volumes; Gems from the Dusseldorf Gallery, issued in Parts; Burton's Cyclopedia of Wit and Humor, issued in Parts; Devotional Family Bible, issued in Parts; Life of Christ, issued in Parts; Poetry and Incidents of the War, 1 volume.

The above mentioned Works are sold by our distributing agents only.

Additions of New and Standard Works are constantly being made to this list.

Young men of good character and business habits are wanted to act as Agents. Agents wanted in every County in California, Oregon and Nevada.

DEWING & LAWS,
511 Sacramento street,
San Francisco, Cal.

je24-tf

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent. including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7-30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent. per day on a $50 note.
Two cents " " $100 "
Ten " " $500 "
20 " " $1,000 "
$1 " " $5,000 "

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Goverament, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers through out the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

March 25, 1865. ap29-3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency. JAY COOKE,

my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

The next session commences July 18th.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to

jy1 3m REV. P. I. GREY, President.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT PUBLIC SCHOOLS, San Francisco, July 1, 1865.—The San Francisco Latin School.—At a meeting of the Board of Education, held June 27th, 1865, a plan for the organization of a Classical School was adopted. The object of this school is to fit boys for Colleges of the highest standing; or if a College course be not desired, to secure a full preparation for professional studies. Particular attention will be paid to the Latin and Greek languages. Instruction will also be given in Mathematics, Geography, History, Declamation, English Grammar, Composition, and in the French language. Candidates for admission to this school, from both public and private schools, will present themselves for examination at the Boys' High School building, corner of Clay and Powell streets, on Saturday, July 8th, at 9 o'clock A. M. No candidate under ten years of age will be admitted. Each applicant must be able to read English fluently, to spell words of common occurrence, and to write a legible hand. He must be well versed in Mental Arithmetic, and in Colburn's Common School Arithmetic, to page 144 or its equivalency, be able to answer the most important questions in Geography, and must have a sufficient knowledge of English Grammar to parse common sentences in prose, or an equivalent knowledge of Latin Grammar. The above requirements are such as would fit a pupil for promotion to the first class of a Grammar School of this city. Hence those pupils who stand high in the second classes of the schools, as well as those who have entered the first classes, may apply for admission to to the Latin School. J. C. PELTON, Superintendent.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No 8. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 15, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES:

THE CALIFORNIAN'S Condensed Novelists.
Curious and Interesting Plants —By "Iris."
In the Country.—By "Bret."
A Mistake, and its Consequences—A Thrilling Narrative of the "Ribbon Boys" of Ireland.
Escape from the Indians—A Story of Frontier Life in 1780.
A Queer Way.
Hints upon Air.
Scragginess.

EDITORIALS:

How to Get Up Electioneering Enthusiasm.
The Daily Examiner.
Musical Matters.
Editorial Paragraphs.

POETRY:

When the Tide Turned.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.
Reunion.

NEW BOOKS:

A Review of Recent Publications.

THEATRICAL TALK:

The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:

Baited with Tempting Tit-bits.

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Chapters XXXIV., XXXV., and XXXVI.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"WE that have free souls, it touches us not."

HAMLET—Act III, Scene 2.

"WHAT will he do with it?" What will Uncle Sam do with the negro now he has freed him? This is the question of the day. To shirk it is simply cowardice. The New York correspondent of the Alta says the radicals are "down on" President Johnson because he declines to assume the power of saying that negroes shall vote in all the Southern States. The Alta's correspondent talks very sensibly on this subject. He says:

"What would the Californians say if the President were to insist that all the Asiatics in their State should be allowed to vote? It is true that California has not been in rebellion or revolution, but neither are any of the Southern States at the present time. If President Johnson were to assume a power, he could, with equal propriety, regulate all the other domestic institutions of the States. Even in New England, the indiscriminate voting of negroes is not allowed, for the qualification of being able to read and write is a pre-requisite, even in Massachusetts."

We are rather inclined to believe that being able to read and write is as important a qualification for participation in framing the laws of the country as wearing a white skin. We should be unwilling to see Alexandre Dumas refused the right of suffrage on account of his complexion should he be desirous of becoming an American citizen, while a white animal whose superiority over an intelligent dog rests in the power of always standing on his hind legs, while the dog finds it inconvenient to do so for any great length of time, and in the belief that there is concealed somewhere in his being a germ of something which may possibly, in course of time, grow into a soul, has equal privileges with the man of intellect. It is from this class of human beings, from these bipeds without feathers, that the outcry against recognizing the negro as a man comes. No doubt a mule would feel dreadfully insulted by being yoked with a jackass; the ass is too like him for such an association to be pleasant. The best men in the State had no fear that in walking in the Fourth of July procession with negroes they would forfeit the respect of their fellow citizens; but the uneducated classes were terribly frightened. No educated man will be frightened by the bugaboo, negro equality, which is dressed up in such terrors to frighten the rabble. By the time the Birthday of Freedom returns again public opinion will have undergone an immense change. There will be no such pitiable spectacle as was seen this year. The man who would say to the negro, "you're a black man, you shan't walk with me," will be laughed at. When this was shrieked at him in Stockton this year, the negro meekly answered: "So be it. We can wait. We have waited long. We can well wait a little longer." So Ethiopia, the Cinderella of Uncle Sam's great household, stood humbly in the street and saw her proud sisters flaunting in their pride, casting looks of scorn at their poor sister whom they had forced to do their drudgery for so many years, and now, when they pretended to rejoice that she too was free, refused to allow her to make merry at the same time as they. They can wait. Not long will they wait! The negro has bought his freedom with his blood; he has paid the price and none can rob him of it. Let him feel that it has not been given to him grudgingly; trust him a little and he will not wrong the trust reposed in him. The negro has a right to ride in the cars; the law has decided it. Has he, since that decision was rendered, thrust himself into the cars where he knows he will be regarded as an annoyance by the white passengers? We have not found it so. We know a poor old colored woman who lives high up on Green street, who has to trudge on foot the whole distance to the Metropolitan Market to make her purchases for the family in which she is engaged as cook; she may not ride in the cars; if she were a slave in the South her master would insist upon her being admitted to ride with white people, and they would not consider themselves polluted by coming in contact with her. The stain of freedom is on her, and white "ladies" would gather up their skirts were she to enter a car. She could ride and the law would protect her, but she will not thrust herself where those who look on her with scorn, simply because she is free, would shun her as if she carried with her some far more deadly disease than the air of freedom. This absurd prejudice will ere long cure itself. Southerners will overcome it very soon; Yankee pedlers who acquired it from fear of offending their Southern customers, who laughed at them and despised them for it, will be the last to give it up. Irishmen, who fear that the negro will come into competition with them in labor in the North, not reflecting that as many hands are required to till the ground in the Southern States now as before the negro was freed, and that every negro bred in the South loves it as his home and will stay there, will do their utmost to keep it up; but when they find the danger they have conjured up is purely an imaginary one, they too will relinquish it. Let the negro wait, yet a little while longer.

THE position of local reporter on a daily paper is not one which calls for the possession of much intellect i the man who fills it. The local reporters for the London press are a very low class; they hang round beer shops, and when they hear of an accident having happened, a fire having broken out, or any other event of interest, they start off to the scene, collect the facts, write an account, take it to the office and receive payment for it at the rate of a penny a line. How much more enviable is the position of local reporter for a San Francisco paper, and what a very superior class these reporters are to the London penny-a-liners. Take the local reporter of the Alta as an instance. What sparkling witticisms do we find in his column. In Thursday's paper, in his Police Court report, he says, "Mary Kane was again convicted on the charge of getting drunk and raising her namesake." Ha, ha, ha, he, he, he. Don't you see? Raising Cain. True he has made that joke every time Mary Kane has appeared in the Police Court, but it is a good joke, a very good joke, and bright things can never die. Then he tells us that "John Odor, a soldier who is in bad odor with the police, was convicted." Isn't that funny? Couldn't do that sort of thing, you know, for a penny a line. We are glad to see that the proprietors of the Alta, fully aware of the fact that they have a treasure in this young man, allow him considerable license. For example, in Monday's paper he had a very funny "item" headed "Alameda County Invaded," it was all about there being a number of mosquitoes in Oakland; he made a good many jokes; said they "were thicker than the locusts of Egypt," (what whoppers they must have been!) said they "seemed to enjoy the blood of the Oaklanders more than wild honey," (he evidently thinks locusts live on wild honey, which is a mistake—but let that pass,) talks about men with goggles, and says a number of other excruciatingly funny things. This appeared on Monday, near the bottom of the second column. To encourage him in this sort of thing, the proprietors let him publish it again on Tuesday, on the third column near the top, so that every one who had not seen the Alta on Monday, might have a chance of reading it. They did not state whether or not it was "republished at the request of numerous subscribers" like the Flag does when it reproduces one of its awful leaders. Lokulitems of the Alta is so pleased at being allowed to publish this item two days running, that he has been making jokes ever since, and the Alta is quite proud of him, and they say in the office that it's real nice to have a funny man who can write interesting items to make the paper sell while the wires are down.

WHAT a wonderful invention the telegraph is, and what an energetic individual the telegraphic reporter of the Associated Press must be! On Monday last he sent the following astounding news across the wires: "The horse Gladiateur won the Grand Prize." The steamer which arrived on Sunday brought English newspapers containing a full account of the Epsom Races, and how Gladiateur had won the Derby stakes. English racing news by telegraph via Paris! Let us be thankful for the telegraph; without it, though we should have known that Gladiateur won the Derby, we should not have known that they were aware of the fact in Paris.

THE New York Times, with reference to the short stay made by the Keans in New York, says:

"It is a thousand pities that such fine artistes are compelled to skim through the city with such unsatisfactory haste."

No doubt the Keans were successful in "skimming" the creme de la creme.

CAPTAIN CALLAHAN, when he arrested John Mitchell, expressed his surprise that he should be a rebel when he "pretended to flee from the oppression of the Old World to the freedom of the New." We cannot see anything to be surprised at. John Mitchell is remarkably consistent; he was a rebel at home and is a rebel here.

THE Monitor, in the same issue in which it publishes two Fenian communications full of "suffering Ireland" and threats to "trail in the dust the hated flag of Ireland's oppressor," has an editorial, which, containing as it does sound sense, affords a remarkable contrast to the incendiary documents referred to. The Monitor regrets that the Prince and Princess of Wales do not more frequently visit Ireland as representatives of the Queen. It says:

"It does seem a great pity that the Prince and Princess of Wales should not more frequently represent her where their appearance would call forth such heartfelt gratitude. Ireland abounds in princely mansions, and there are English noblemen who would feel it a high honor to entertain them. Irish discontent, so far as it is real, is closely allied to a sense of neglect, and for this feeling there could be no better palliative than the occasional residence of the heir-apparent in Ireland."

After the publication of this we should imagine the hold Fenians would lose all confidence in the Monitor. The view of the case taken by this paper is perfectly just; the periodical visits of royalty to Ireland would cause such a rapid growth of loyal sentiment and attachment to the crown, that the redoubtable Fenians, when they accomplished their long threatened invasion of Ireland, would be treated as a foreign foe. Irishmen at home have no wish to see the flame of civil war kindled in their beautiful isle, and the majority will be very thankful to the Fenians if they will stay where they are.

THE High Church clergymen in England wear a coat with remarkably long skirts, which is termed by their enemies the M. B. (Mark of the Beast) coat. The Edinburgh Courant states that one of these clergymen, a short time ago, had the misfortune to tread on the skirts of his coat and fall, receiving injuries which confined him to his bed for some time. It appears that the reverend gentleman had no need to cry, like Paddy, "Will some of yez tread on the tail of my coat?" The paragraph relating this accident has been going the rounds of the English press headed, "A Warning to Clergymen," and all the Low Church people of course look upon the occurrence as a "judgment" on the clergyman for being a "Puseyite."

EVERY true patriot will of course go to hear I Puritani to-night, and enjoy "the old Puritan spirit" of the music, which is the identical spirit which animated the Pilgrim Fathers. Every lover of the noble game of chess will also go to witness the performance of this opera, in which they will see how the queen, protected by a castle, is taken by a knight, and, the queen being taken, the king is check-mated. In spite of Signor Muzio having refused to allow the glorious anthem of "John Brown's Body" to be interpolated and sung by the Puritan chorus, the music will no doubt prove all that can be desired.

A SOLDIER writes from Fort Point to the Flag, giving a most heart-rending account of how the soldiers marched to town and brought their tin cups with them; he says:

"We were informed that refreshments would be furnished us on the line of march, but we saw nothing of them, and consequently had no use for our tin cups."

How very sad! No doubt they all expected to come here with their tin cups and go home with the hiccups.

TENNYSON, the poet laureate, has an event to celebrate. Alexandra, Princess of Wales, was delivered of another little Prince on July 3d. We presume he will write his birthday ode in Alexandrines out of compliment to the royal mamma. If the Princess of Wales had any friendly feeling towards this country, she would have postponed the event until the next day, so that it might occur on our glorious Fourth, and thus paid us a delicate compliment which would have done much to establish a friendly feeling between the two countries; but the Prince was born the day before. So much for British sympathy!

IS there any one in San Francisco who admires the twelve-o'clock whistle at the Mint? There is such a thing as paying too dearly for one's whistle, and a whistle which nearly ruptures the tympana of one's ears every time it sounds is a dear whistle. We always feel inclined to yell out, "What are you blowing about?" when we hear that diabolical whistle. It sounds like the warning shriek of the banshee, or the agonized scream of the gnome whose soul has just been crushed out of a mass of gold.

WE are grieved. We have always stuck up for Gridley. Alas! Gridley is deposed. John Short is elected Pound Keeper, and the pound pigs, instead of enjoying Gridley's fattening feed, will all be put on short rations.

WE notice a book advertised under the name of A Son of the Soil; it is not, as might naturally be supposed, Only a Clod under a new name, but a distinct work, though of course a son of the soil is only a clod.

TREM.

REUNION.

AN end at last! The echoes of the war—
The weary war beyond the western waves—
Die in the distance. Freedom's rising star
Beacons above a hundred thousand graves:

The graves of heroes who have won the fight,
Who in the storming of the stubborn town
Have rung the marriage peal of might and right,
And scaled the cliffs and cast the dragon down.

Peans of armies thrill across the sea,
Till Europe answers: "Let the struggle cease,
The bloody page is turned; the next may be
For ways of pleasantness and paths of peace!"—

A golden morn—a dawn of better things—
The olive-branch—clasping of hands again—
A noble lesson read to conquering kings—
A sky that tempests had not scoured in vain.

This from America we hoped and him
Who ruled her "in the spirit of his creed."
Does the hope last when all our eyes are dim,
As History records her darkest deed?

The pilot of his people through the strife,
With his strong purpose turning scorn to praise,
E'en at the close of battle reft of life,
And fair inheritance of quiet days.

Defeat and triumph found him calm and just;
He showed how clemency should temper power,
And dying left to future times in trust
The memory of his brief victorious hour.

O'ermastered by the irony of fate,
The last and greatest martyr of his cause;
Slain like Achilles at the Scæn gate,
He saw the end, and fixed the "purer laws."

May these endure, and, as his work, attest
The glory of his honest heart and hand—
The simplest, and the bravest, and the best—
The Moses and the Cromwell of his land.

Too late the pioneers of modern spite,
Awe-stricken by the universal gloom,
See his name lustrous in Death's sable night,
And offer tardy tribute at his tomb.

But we who have been with him all the while,
Who knew his worth, and loved him long ago,
Rejoice that in the circuit of our isle
There is no room at last for Lincoln's foe.

[London Spectator.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

By the author of "Aurora Floyd," "Three Times Dead," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Doctor's Wife," "The Outcasts," etc.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE LADY AT PETERSHAM.

THE letter which Francis Tredethlyn wrote in his study was a long one; a very painful one to write, as it seemed from the face of the writer, and the weary sigh which every now and then escaped from his lips. He addressed the envelope, and then threw himself back in his chair to think. He had so much to think of. Maude's extraordinary conduct, Rosa Grunderson's revelation, had overthrown the whole fabric of his life; and he found himself surrounded by ruins whose utter chaos he could not contemplate without bewilderment.

For the last few weeks his thoughts had been almost exclusively devoted to his cousin Susan, and her wrongs. Found at last, after so many failures and disappointments, so much delay, the lonely girl had been welcomed as tenderly as any wanderer who ever returned to the lost friends of his youth. But Susan Lesley had a sad story to tell her cousin. The missing link in the chain that Francis Tredethlyn had put together piece by piece was the letter which had been written from St. Petersburg by the man whom Susan had loved and trusted—the man whose diary had revealed to Francis the utter worthlessness of his character.

Robert Lesley's letter was only a worthy companion to Robert Lesley's diary. In it he coldly and deliberately told the girl who loved him, that she was not his wife; that the Marylebone marriage was no marriage; the registrar no recognized official, but a scoundrel hired for a twenty-pound note to play the part of that functionary; that the registrar's office had been no office, but a lodging-house parlor hired for the occasion, and half-a-dozen doors from the real office. In conclusion, the writer stated the pitiful stipend which he was prepared to offer to the woman he had abandoned, and the child he had disowned.

Susan showed her cousin this letter, and told him how, after receiving it, her mind had almost given way under the burden of her great agony. Then it was that she had gone to Mrs. Burfield, and had written to her father a long letter, telling him something of her story, but not all; appealing piteously to the only friend to whom she could appeal; for faithful Frank was far away in some unknown country. She told her cousin how she had waited, at first with a faint sickly hope, then with a blank despair, for some answer from the father to whom she had appealed. But none came; and when her little stock of money had sunk to its lowest ebb, she left the dull quiet of Coltonslough to begin a weary, lonely struggle for bread, which had endured, without one ray of sunlight to illumine its blank misery, until the summer Sunday afternoon on which Francis Tredethlyn found her sitting in the nurse's cottage with her boy in her arms.

"Perhaps I ought to think myself very happy, Francis," Susan said when she had told her story; "for I was always able to pay the nurse somehow for her care of my darling; and the deadly fear of not being able to do that was the worst trouble I knew in all that dreary time. I have sometimes thought that bitter struggle for my daily bread was only a blessing in disguise, for it kept me from brooding upon my great sorrow; it sometimes shut from me the thought of Robert's cruelty and my own disgrace."

"Disgrace!" cried the Cornishman; "no, Susan, there is no shadow of disgrace upon you except the disgrace of being united to a scoundrel and a liar. The marriage before the registrar was a bona-fide marriage, as binding as if it had been performed by the Archbishop of Canterbury."

And then Francis told Susan of his visit to the registrar's office. This was the balm which he was able to pour into the deepest wound that ever tortured a woman's heart. But the identity of the husband who had lied in denouncing himself a liar was entirely unknown to Susan. Messrs. Kursdale and Scardon had instituted an inquiry as to whether a Mr. Robert Lesley had been inscribed on the books of St. Boniface any time between 1845 and 1852 and the answer had been in the negative. No person of the name had been a member of that college within the last ten years.

"But your husband was visited by his brother, was he not, Susan?" said Mr. Tredethlyn, when this subject was discussed between the cousins.

"Yes; but I knew no more of Robert's brother than of Robert himself. He did not come to us often. I heard that he was a lawyer—a barrister, I think—and that he lived in the Temple. I heard even that by accident, and Robert seemed almost vexed that I should know so much."

All these trifling circumstances seemed to point inevitably to one conclusion: Robert Lesley had intended from the first to abandon his wife, whenever his own interests rendered it advisable that he should throw off the tie that bound him to her.

"But this man shall be made to acknowledge his wife—to give a name to his child," cried Francis, "if he can be found."

"If my husband is alive, Providence may throw him across my path some day," Susan said resignedly. "He could not be more dead to me than he is now if he were buried in the deepest grave that ever held the ashes of the lost; but if he gave my boy the name that is his right, I think I could forgive him all the past."

It was quite in vain that Francis Tredethlyn sought to carry his cousin and her son home to his own house.

"I am used to poverty, Francis," she said; "Let me be poor still. Leave me alone in my obscurity. I have a lodging near here, and I can see my darling every day. I will freely accept from you a little income which will enable me to live as I have lived, without working as hard as I have worked; but I will accept no more. I am delighted to think that my father left his fortune to you, Frank; and I thank and bless you for having taken so much trouble to find me out."

Francis Tredethlyn found it hard work to win Susan away from this determination, so quietly expressed. But he did at last persuade her to agree to his own plans for her life, on condition that he should tell Maude nothing, nor ask Susan to meet her until the missing husband was found, and compelled to acknowledge his wife and son.

"You must accept the home I shall prepare for you, Suzy," said Francis, "or I will have a deed of gift drawn up to-morrow, transferring half my fortune to you. I am ready to divide your father's wealth with you as soon as ever I understand your legal position. In the mean time let me have the sweetest pleasure my money has ever given me yet—the pleasure of making a happy home for you and my little kinsman."

Thus it was that Francis Tredethlyn had withdrawn himself in a great measure from the society of Mr. Lowther, while he scoured the prettiest suburbs in search of a home for his cousin, and superintended the necessary improvements and decoration, the selection of the simple furniture, the arrangement of a garden, in which Robert Lesley's son might play happily, his life undarkened by the baseness of an unknown father.

Energetic though Mr. Tredethlyn was in the carrying out of his arrangements, Susan had been established little more than a week at the cottage, and the paint on the venetian shutters was still rather sticky, when Harcourt Lowther found the upholsterer's bill, which gave him the clue to his pupil's mysterious conduct. To hasten down to Petersham, find the cottage, refresh himself with dry sherry and soda-water at the nearest tavern, was all incomparably easy to Mr. Lowther. From the landlord he heard all about Brook Cottage. How it had been to let for nearly a twelvemonth; how it had been taken all in a hurry at the end of May by a dashing-looking gentleman from town, who had been reported scouring the neighborhood in hansom cabs, inquiring for houses to let, for three days at a stretch; he heard also, how a lady, very pretty and quite young, but a little pale and worn-looking, had arrived at last to take possession of "the prettiest little box that was ever put together, without regard to expense;" how she was attended by an elderly female in black, who had evidently seen better days, and who acted as nurse to a little boy; how two respectable young women had been hired in the neighborhood to act as cook and housemaid, and how, coming regularly to the Feathers in quest of the kitchen-beer, they had already reported their mistress as the sweetest and pleasantest of ladies, and first-cousin to the dashing gentleman in the hansom cab. The landlord tried to look as if he had no uncharitable thoughts about this cousinship; but Harcourt Lowther saw that Francis Tredethlyn and the lady had been subjects of grave scandal in that quiet country-place.

"Secrecy is only another name for guilt," thought Mr. Lowther. "Our friend has gone to the bad in real earnest this time, and I can make a coup. I was getting very tired of the slow game."

Armed with this information, the schemer went back to town, to take his place in Maude's opera-box, and to lead up to that idea of a morning at the Cedars, which seemed to originate in Mrs. Tredethlyn's own brain. Chance, which had been against him so long, had gone with him unfailingly in this business. The lucky moment had come; he had got his lead at last, and had only to play his winning cards. Chance had been constant to the schemer, even in that interview between Francis and Rosa; for it so happened that in all Miss Grunderson's candid outpourings she had not dropped a word about Mrs. Tredethlyn's stroll in the Petersham meadows; though, even if she had done so, the Cornishman might have been very slow to perceive that an accidental glimpse of himself and gentle Susie in friendly companionship could have been the primary cause of that stormy greeting which he had received at the hands of his wife. Francis accepted his wife's passionate outburst as only the climax of the disgust and weariness with which he had inspired her. "She reproaches me for the life I have been leading lately," he said bitterly; but she does not understand her own feelings. It is not my life, but me she hates. It is myself that inspires the loathing and contempt which she talked of, and not my late hours or my gambling and horse-racing."

After sitting for some time plunged in a gloomy reverie, Francis stirred as the little black marble clock on the mantelpiece chimed the quarter after twelve, and felt in his waistcoat pocket for a note which he had found waiting for him on his table the previous night. It was a tiny twisted poulet from Harcourt Lowther:

"Dear Frank—A line to remind you of to-morrow night. You will be expected any time after nine.

"Yours always, H. L."

This reminder referred to a bachelor's supper which Mr. Lowther had arranged at his lodgings; a party at which there was to be what the host called a quiet rubber. A rubber played with that deadly quiet which attends the science of whist when heavy amounts tremble in the balance, and a sum that a poor man would call a fortune may depend on the player's judicious choice between a five and a seven. Francis looked from the clock on the chimney-piece to the scrap of paper in his hand; hesitated for a few moments, with a black frown upon his face, and then started hastily from his lounging attitude, and looked about him for his hat.

"There couldn't be a better opportunity," he muttered, "for saying what I want to say to him."

CHAPTER XXXV.

A HASTY RECKONING.

HARCOURT LOWTHER had never played so bad a rubber as that with which he beguiled the evening while awaiting Tredethlyn's appearance at the little bachelor-party assembled in his rooms. He was thinking of Maude. It was not the face of the queen of spades which he saw as he sat hopelessly staring at the card in a vain endeavor to concentrate his attention; it was Maude's speaking, passionate countenance which looked at him, all aglow with angry feeling. He saw her in all her beauty as he had seen her that afternoon—the tremulous lips, the flashing blue eyes—for there are blue eyes which in anger have more fire than starriest orbs that ever veiled their lightnings under the cloudy lace of an Andalusian marchesa. His love for her—which was of the most selfish nature—had grown and strengthened day by day since the hour of his return, and had kindled into an all-absorbing flame now that he seemed so near his triumph.

Was he near his triumph? He had been playing for two stakes—the woman he loved and the fortune he envied. To-day's business, Harcourt Lowther argued, as he played that unfortunate rubber, could not be otherwise than a lucky stroke, likely to hurry matters to a crisis. Francis had slipped out of his hands so often of late, had kept better hours and drunk less. But a serious quarrel with Maude would inevitably fling Mr. Tredethlyn back upon the spurious Lethe of the brandy-bottle, and would hasten the schemer's work to its fatal close.

Beforo twelve o'clock Mr. Lowther had abandoned his place at the whist table to his brother; and after lounging behind the chair of a young man who was playing écarte, and making a random bet now then, the host proposed supper—a proposition which was received very warmly by the men who were losing money, and very coolly by the winners.

Mr. Lowther's visitors enjoyed themselves immensely, and the supper-party was becoming boisterous in its gaiety, when the door was opened and Francis Tredethlyn walked in.

Harcourt Lowther called for a chair, which was edged into the corner at the host's right-haud.

"You'll have some supper, Tredethlyn?" he said, while Fraucis was shaking hands with some of the men. They were all known to him, and all knew his story, and had a pretty clear idea that Harcourt was what they called "cleaning him out," in the most approved style by which the process can be performed. "These things are all cold, I'm afraid. Jones, run across and get some fresh oysters, and you can get another spatchcock—to be ready in a quarter of an hour at the latest. Sit down, dear boy. What the deuce have you been doing with yourself all night?"

Francis called back the man as he was hurrying from the room. "Stop!" he cried; "you needn't order anything more—for me. I shan't eat supper to-night."

Harcourt Lowther looked at Tredethlyn nervously. The marital quarrel had come off, evidently, and Francis took matters very seriously.

"Come, Mr. Troublefeast," cried the host, "we're not going to stand this sort of thing, you know. We'll have no statue of the Commander stalking upon us in the midst of our fun—without Mozart. What the deuce is tho matter with you, dear boy? Roderick, pass that tankard this way, will you? Come, Frank, take down the shutters, and light up; you've made us all as quiet as the frozen crew described by that pertinacious old bore, the Ancient Mariner. Take a long dip into that tankard, old boy, and come up bright again."

Mr. Lowther struck his small white hand lightly upon his friend's shoulder as he concluded. Francis had dropped into the place offered to him, and sat there looking like nothing but the Commander, in his stony rigidity of face aud figure. As Harcourt Lowther's hand alighted on his shoulder, he startled every one by throwing it deliberately away from him.

"I have had enough of your friendship, thank you," he said; "henceforward, if we are to be anything at all to each other, I had rather we should be foes—I may have better luck perhaps that way."

"Tredethlyn! are you drunk? Or mad?"

"Neither; but I have been both; for I have trusted you. You needn't ask me what I mean," said Francis, interrupting Harcourt Lowther's exclamation by a rapid gesture of his uplifted haud. "I am going to tell you; and very plainly. Gentlemen, you were going to listen to a song just now; have you any objection to hearing a story instead? My story is not a long one.

Harcourt Lowther had turned very pale. His light blue eyes glittered, and the slim white fingers of his right hand closed involuntarily on the knife that had been lying near them. He looked as a man might look, who, marching proudly upon the road to victory, saw the earth yawn asunder beneath his feet, and knew all at once that his next step must hurl him to a dreadful death. The guests at Harcourt Lowther's supper-table pricked up their ears with one accord, and it was with considerable difficulty that they managed to keep up a faint attempt at that kind of conversation which had engaged them, in twos and threes, before Francis Tredethlyn's entrance. When they spoke to one another now, it was only in undertones, and their disjointed sentences revealed the fact that they were listening to the speaker at the end of the table. But when Francis spoke of telling a story, the company dropped all pretence of indifference to him; and listened with a polite appearance of perfect unconsciousness as to any unfriendly intention on the part of the late visitor.

"I daresay it's a common story enough in your set," continued Francis; "but it isn't a long one. It is the story of a man who was lifted one day from poverty to wealth, and found himself all at once alone in a world as strange to him as if he had been transported out of this planet into another inhabited by a different species.

"For some time the country-bred cub—he was country-bred, and what you call a cub—got on well enough. He floundered into a few mistakes, and he floundered out of them, after his own ignorant fashion. I think there is a providence for such men, as there is for druukards, and so long as they stagger along alone, they come to very little grief. He did a great many silly things with his money, I dare say; but I think he once did a generous thing—though God knows, in doing it, he followed the blind impulse of his undisciplined heart as ignorantly as if he had been some blundering Newfoundland dog that pulls the mistress he loves out of the water, where he sees her drowning. His wealth prospered with him, though he had cared little enough for it when it fell into his hands. By means of it he was enabled to save the woman he loved from a great trouble; and in her boundless gratitude for the service which he valued so lightly, she abandoned herself to the purest impulse that ever stirred a noble breast, and offered him her hand. If he had been generous or wise, he would have refused the hand which could not give him a heart. He was only—in love. Selfishly, stupidly, he seized the proffered sacrifice; too besotted in his blind passion to perceive that it was sacrifice."

Mr. Lowther's guests stared blankly at one another. They had not dropped their own talk to hear such stuff as this. Harcourt sat very still, with his hand always upon the knife. At the other end of the table lounged Roderick, the very picture of well-bred indifference. He felt that his brother had dropped in for it; but he had no idea of interrupting the action of the little drama by any fraternal championship.

"Let them fight it out their own way," he thought; "I like to see the white man suffer."

"The country-bred cub was still fresh to the intoxication of his fancied happiness when a man who had been familiar with him in his poverty came from the distant part of the world where they had met and known each other, and offered to be his friend. The cub's ignorance of life was so complete that he did not know it was possible for a man who bore her Majesty's commission, and called himself a gentleman, to be a liar and a villain. He trusted his old acquaintance implicitly, and accepted him as a friend—believing, still in his boorish ignorance, that there was such a thing as friendship, or, at the worst, an honorable good fellowship between honest men. His friend did not tell him that he had been the engaged lover of the woman the boor was going to marry, and when the young couple began their new life, he planted himself in their house; and his first act was to shut the husband from the home whose dingiest room was a paradise, so long as it was sanctified by the presence of an idolized wife. Will any one at this table guess the plot which the boor's friend hatched against him in the hour when their hands first met in friendship? I think not. The gentleman—polished, well-born, highly-educated—allowed the country cub to marry the woman he loved, reserving to himself the hope of marrying her, enriched by the cub's money, when the cub was dead. This once arranged, there was only one thing more to be settled; and that was the cub's life. Unluckily he was a brawny six-foot fellow with the constitution of a prize-fighter. But then prize-fighters are not always long-lived; their habits are so apt to be against them. Well, gentlemen, there have been men who have undermined a victim's strength with small doses of antimony, while they smiled in his face, and called him brother. We manage these things better now-a-days. The gentleman resolved that the poor boor should drink himself to death."

"Is this the plot of a French novel?" asked Roderick superciliously, after a brief silence, in which Francis Tredethlyn had paused to take breath; "if it is, you had better tell us the title of the book, and let us read it in the original. There may be some chance of our thinking it interesting then."

"There are shameful things done out of novels as well as in them, Mr. Lowther," answered Francis. "What I am telling you is the truth. The gentleman took the wealthy boor under his protection, and from that hour the cub's mind and the cub's body began to wither under the influence of a vice which of himself he held in abhorrence, but which in the dull indifferenee of a man who has no hope to elevate him, no aim to strive for, he was weak enough to accept as the cure for all his troubles. What did it matter how many glasses of brandy he drank, or how often he staggered across his dreary threshold in the early morning, stupefied by foul gaslit atmospheres and bad wiues? His friend took care to remind him that there was no one to be sorry for his misdeeds, or to rejoice in his repentance if he repented. He could not sink so low that his wife would be affected by his degradation; he could not rise so high that she would be proud of his elevation. His friend dinned the bitter truth into the wretch's ear. The beautiful young wife despised him; the wealth that other men envied was useless to him, except in its power to buy the oblivion of the brandy-bottle. From the hour in which his well-born friend took him under his protection, the boor never did a generous action, or heard a noble sentiment; and he very rarely went home sober. He was drinking himself to death as fast as a strong man can, when Providence took compassion on him, and gave him a duty to fulfill. A helpless girl, his kinswoman, was thrown across his path, and all at once he found himself of use in the world. From that moment his friend's scheme was overthrown. Good-by to the brandy-bottle and tho bad wiues! The boor had a friendless woman dependent upon his protection, and he had something to live for. He determined to sink the past, bid farewell to the wife whose affection he was unable to win, turn his back upon the circle he had lived in, and the people who had knowu him, and finish his days honestly among honest men."

"So he died, and she very imprudently married the barber," exclaimed one of the guests. "It's a very good story, I daresay; but apropos to what?" demanded the gentleman, looking at Harcourt Lowther with a malicious twinkle in his little black eyes. "What does it all mean?"

"It means, gentlemen, that I am the boor who has been the dupe of a villain, and will be so no longer; and the name of the villain is Harcourt Lowther."

There was a moment's silence, followed by a sudden smashing of glass. A pair of small sinewy white hands fastened cat-like upon Francis Tredethlyn's throat, and he and Harcourt Lowther were grappling with each other in a fierce struggle.

It was uot with Francis that he was angry. What did it matter how this man spoke of him or thought of him? What did it matter that these other men should hear him accused of a baseness, which was only an intellectual improvement upon the vulgar process by which the gentlemanly birds of prey plucked the tender plumage of their victims? All this was nothing. It was against himself—agaiust his own failure—that Harcourt Lowther's fury was raging; only, like all fury of that kind, it was ravenous for vengeance of some sort. It was only for about twenty seconds that his claws were fastened on Francis Tredthlyn's throat. A Cornish heavy-weight is not exactly the kind of person for a delicately built Sybarite to wrestle with very successfully.

"We are rather celebrated for this sort of thing in my country," Mr. Tredethlyn muttered between his set teeth, as he loosened Harcourt Lowther's grasp from his throat, and hurled him in a kind of bundle to a corner of the room, where he fell crashing down amongst the ruins of a dumb-waiter, half-buried under a chaos of broken bottles and lobster-shells.

Roderick Lowther would have sprung upon his brother's foe in the next minute, but the other men hustled round him and hemmed him in.

"Don't you see the fellow's a Hercules?" cried one of them; "let him alone, Lowther."

"Let me go," roared the diplomatist, "I kuow my brother is a false-hearted rascal, but I won't staud by and see a Lowther played at ball with by any boor in Christendom. Let me get at him, Boystock, or I shall hurt you." But Francis had walked quietly to the door, and turning with his hand upon the lock, waited for a moment's pause in the confusion before he spoke.

"Gentlemen," he said, "you are witnesses that your friend attacked me. I have no quarrel with Mr. Roderick Lowther; and as I am the bigger man of the two, there would be no credit for either him or me in a scuffle between us. If Harcourt Lowther wants to see me, he will be able to find me any time this week, at the Grand Hotel, Covent Gardeu; after this week I shall sail for South America by the first packet that leaves for Liverpool."

He paused a second time. There was no answer. The diplomatist had thought better of his thirst for fraternal retribution.

"Why should I get myself into a mess about the beggar?" he thought; "he wouldn't see me out of a scrape, I daresay."

So Francis departed unquestioned; not to return to Stuccoville mansion, but to walk up to Southampton street, and across Covent Garden, to seek a shelter in the old lodgings where he had lived so pleasantly in his bachelor days.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

POOR FRANK'S LETTER.

MAUDE shut herself in her own rooms after her interview with Francis, and refused to see any one but Julia. She wanted some one to cling to in her sudden distress, and was fain to throw herself upon the Irish girl's bosom for consultation.

Then Julia Desmond had her revenge. The pleasure that thrilled through her breast as she held Maude Tredethlyn in her arms, and heard her declare, amidst passionate sobs, that Francis had been false and base and wicked, and that she was the most miserable woman in the world, was a sensation more exquisite than Miss Desmond had ever known before. For the honor of humanity, that pleasure did not last very long. It was her rival's insolent happiness—happiness always does seem insolent to the unhappy—that had galled her to the quick. The two women were on a level now, and Julia forgave her old companion.

"I told you he was a villain," she said; and that was the only unkind speech she uttered. After that, she was comforter, confidante, friend, and she was almost sorry to see the endurance of Maude's grief. "You have your fine house and your carriage still," she said, as the young wife sat on the ground at her feet in the abandonment of her sorrow; "you could never have married Francis Tredethlyn for any other reason than the wealth he could give you. What does it matter to you whether he is true or false? You never loved him."

"No," answered Maude, naively; "I suppose not. But it is so shameful of him to care for anybody else. And from what Harcourt Lowther says he does care for that horrible person; and to leave me, Julia, day after day, and to be—there—all the time—in a garden—smoking—looking as much at home as if he had lived there all his life—I never can forgive him, Julia!"

The Cornishman's letter was very simply worded. Maude opened it in the hope that it might contain some justification of her husband's conduct. But he did not even allude to his delinquencies, and confined himself to bidding an earnest and friendly farewell to the wife who had never loved him. Tears of disappointment, humiliation, regret poured slowly down Maude's cheek as she read the letter. It was the first time Francis had written to her since her marriage; and there was something almost strange to her in the sight of his bold commercial hand, whose accustomed regularity had been a little disturbed by the writer's agitation:

"My very dear Wife: I write to you for the first time since it has been my privilege to address you by that sacred name. If I could tell you the pride and happiness I once felt in that privilege when first you laid your hand in mine, when first I heard you called by name, I should be a very different person from what I am; and then it is possible this letter need never have been written. I write to bid you good by, Maude; and I think the best proof I can give you of my love is the proof I give you now, when I bring my mind to the necessity of our separation, and resign myself to the knowledge that I may never see your face again upon this earth.

"I will not tell you how soon I discovered your indifference—how soon another person demonstrated to me that your feeling toward me was even something worse than indifference; that it was disgust and contempt which I inspired in your mind. My dense ignorance of the world, and your amiable nature would have prevented my making this discovery of my own accord. But there are always plenty of those good-natured friends that the man in the play talks about. I found such a friend. If you have any curiosity upon the subject, Rosa Grunderson, who is a good, honest-hearted little girl, will tell you the name of the man who opened my eyes to the full misery of my position. In writing this, Maude, I have no thought of reproach against you. To me you have been and always will be something so bright and lovely as to be amenable to none of the common laws which govern common natures. When you offered to be my wife, you yielded to a generous impulse; and it is I who deserve reproach for having been so base in my blind selfishness as to accept the sacrifice you were willing to offer in repayment of a fancied obligation. I cannot undo the past; but I can at least set you in some manner free from the fetters you forged for yourself under the influence of that brief enthusiasm. So long as I live one of the miseries of my life will be the knowledge that I shut you out of a brighter fate; that I deprive you of a more worthy companion; that the greatest sacrifice I can make in atonement of the past will only make you the lonely widow of a living husband. But I can at least rid you of the society of a man whose presence inspires you with disgust and loathing. Oh, Maude, I am quoting your own words; spoken so deliberately, so coldly, that I should be indeed mad and cowardly were I to shrink from accepting them in their fullest import. I might have doubted until to-night; I might have hugged myself with the notion that a liar and a scoundrel, for his own base purposes, had taught me to think myself despised and disliked; but your own lips have spoken, and I can doubt no longer. Oh, my darling, my pet, my beloved, this seems so like a reproach; but it is not, it is not.

"I am going to South America. When you read this my preparations will no doubt have begun. If possible, I shall sail immediately. Of all the men who ever left England for that fiery young world out yonder, there was never, perhaps, any one better adapted to be happy and successful there than I am. I bid good by forever to the idle dissipations, the drunken orgies, in which I have sometimes found distraction, but never happiness. And I begin a new life in a new field of labor. My uncle's money has been the root of all my misery, and I shall take very little of that useless gold to the other shore. I don't think I was ever guilty of any great folly while I was a poor man; but since I have been a rich one, my life has seemed one long mistake.

"If my death should set you free in your youth, marry again, dear, by all means; but marry a man whose truth and loyalty have been proved by a life of unblemished honor; marry a man who has made his mark upon the age—who has done something; for such a man is scarcely likely to be a scoundrel. Above all, darling, accept my warning against one man—do not marry Harcourt Lowther.

"All the privileges that you have enjoyed during your bondage you shall retain in your freedom. Before sailing I shall make my will, in which you will be left residuary legatee and recipient of the bulk of my fortune. While I live your income will be large enough to support the style in which you have lived during the past year; and there will be a wide margin left for the indulgence of every impulse of your generous heart. I shall place full directions as to the management of my fortune in the hands of my solicitors, Messrs. Kursdale & Scardon, and they will call on you by my direction to explain your position immediately after receiving my instructions. You will find yourself the mistress of the larger part of the income derived from my late uncle's investments and from the Cornish estate, and you will have no further trouble than to sign your name now and then, when the lawyers want you to do so. In the interim I enclose you a check for £500, so that you may not be without ready money. Your father's affairs are now, he tells me, in a very easy state, and I do not leave him in troubled water. He may consider you his creditor for the interest of the thirty thousand sunk in his business; and I don't suppose he will find you a very importunate one.

"And now good-by indeed. I leave you with all confidence in your noble heart, your high principles. You are too good and pure to be otherwise than happy. Far away on the Pampas, lying under canvas, with the long silvery trail of the moonlight on the gray expanse beyond my tent, the whisper of faint winds among the long grasses sounding in my ears, I shall think of you, and see you happy in the old English garden at Twickenham, loitering on the terrace by your father's side. In that trackless loneliness, fever-parched, perhaps, and far away from the chance of water, I shall think of the blue English river, but never think of it without seeing your image standing by the tide, your bright face reflected in the glassy stream. Oh, Maude, I have loved you so dearly, so fondly; and now that it comes to saying good-by, it seems almost as difficult to tear myself from this lifeless sheet of paper as it would be to take my lips from yours in a last long kiss. My pet, my darling, God bless you and good-by! Think of me sometimes; but never with pain. Some midnight, when you are waltzing in a crowded ball-room, with a brazen band braying in your ear, and the hum of a hundred voices round about you, think that in some savage wilderness a man is kneeling under God's blue sky, praying for you as few people are prayed for on this earth; think sometimes, if a special peace comes down upon you like the cool shadow we have watched drop slowly upon the river when the sun was down—think, darling, that I am saying, 'God keep and guard her safely through the night! God fill her heart with peace and gladness, whether she sleeps or wakes.'

"And so, my own dear wife, for the first and last time in my life, I sign myself your true and loyal husband,

"Francis Tredethlyn."

Julia had fluttered out of the room and into the little conservatory, where there were always faded leaves to be snipped off, or bird-cages to be replenished with fresh water. Miss Desmond, in her darkest mood, was too much of a lady to sit by and stare while Maude possessed herself of the contents of her husband's letter. She lingered among the twittering canary birds and sprawling ferns so long as she considered that delicacy demanded she should be absent, and then she strolled back to the breakfast table with a look of supreme unconsciousness. But she gave a little scream as she glanced across the table at Mrs. Tredethlyn and flew to the bell. Maude had finished her letter, which lay in scattered sheets at her feet, and she had fallen back upon the sofa-pillows in a dead faint.

(To be continued.)

(For the Californian.)

IN THE COUNTRY.

I HAVE been in the country. No matter where. Except in the degrees of discomfort, Nature is pretty much alike all over California. She offers grandeur, sublimity, picturesqueness, and delights in heroic attitudes before the tourist, but of purely pastoral and bucolic comfort she knows nothing. She offers you quantity instead of quality—opulence in place of refinement. The same law she obeys in producing monstrous cabbages and gigantic trees is shown throughout all the details of her landscapes. If she has to make a mountain, it is something stupendous; if a valley, it is a perpendicular chasm of several thousand feet; if she has even to cover a field with flowers, it is done so extravagantly that the odorless blossoms seem to have been furnished by contract, and are scattered without taste or judgment. Her rains are deluges—her droughts are six months long. She projects splendid studies for the artist about as unavailable for practical enjoyment as the painted canvas itself. What she loses in delicacy, she makes up in fibre—whether it be strawberries that look as if they had been arrested on their way to become pineapples, or a field of wild oats, whose every stalk is a miracle of size, but whose general effect is most unpastoral and unmeadowlike. For these reasons, I prefer not to name the spot where I have been ruralizing. It is always safer to be attacked for a general heresy than for a mere doctrinal difference; it is less dangerous to commit treason against the State, than to "go back" on one's native village

My retreat lay near one of the routes of fashionable Summer travel. Groves of fine sturdy trees surrounded it, which bore a faint resemblance to a plucked apple orchard. The soil at this late season (late for Californa) seemed to be actively engaged in producing straws for sherry cobblers, and there was a marked similarity between the crop in the barrooms of the waysides hotels and those in the fields beyond. Handsome villas dotted the landscape, and a few pretentious gothic redwood palaces were going up the vicinity. City people, bearing an unmistakable atmosphere of Montgomery street about them, occasionally made their appearance and insulted Nature with their dapper and artificial smartness. For the country was neither neat nor clean. We have the authority of an American writer and painter that the picturesque never possesses either of these qualities, and it would really seem as if Nature took a malicious pleasure in revenging herself upon these smart folk by powdering their shiny boots with her dust, reddening their faces with her sunshine, and blowing their hair out of curl with her zephyrs. There was something peculiarly Californian in the occasional odd juxtaposition of civilization and barbarism. A ride of only a few miles would bring you to rocky cañons, hills clothed with primeval redwoods, and here and there a rude log cabin or frontier shanty. Yet in the midst of this wilderness, a turn in the rough mountain trail brings you suddenly upon a vision of smoothly-shaven faces, pork-pie hats, bright dresses, ribbons and light-colored gloves, in a smart rockaway, drawn by well-groomed horses with shining harness. Perhaps a few yards further on you meet the indigenous ox-team, toiling along with its load of rails, preceded by the teamster, unshaven and unshorn, looking as if he might in time so closely assimilate to his oxen as to change places with them. Such is the influence of civilization, however, that it is the ox team which seems the intruder. The teamster recognizes the fact as he turns out of the way to let you pass. In the struggle with civilization and art, nature and simplicity meekly retire. I remember that one day I was lying on the grass under a tree—to me the simplest form of rural pleasure—when a well-dressed horseman, "cutting across lots," rode close by me. He stared at me for a moment, but his glance conveyed such a sense of the outraged propriety of Montgomery street, that had I been reclining on the sidewalk in front of Wells, Fargo & Co., I do not think I could have felt more keenly the sense of ridiculous exposure. But I braved it through, despite the stranger and even despite the ungrateful conduct of Nature, who employed the interval in projecting caterpillars in my face and filling my pockets with coleopterous insects. I would not advise too free an indulgence in this bucolic practice, as the grassy carpet at this season is worn in places, and contact with the soil is productive of sciatica. As I turned into the main road on my way home, I felt a new and mysterious significance in those sign boards with which the whole country abounds, and which bear the unvarying legend, that while it is so many miles to such a place, it is at the same time so many miles to Heuston, Hastings & Co. I could not help feeling that this last fact really was, as the guide board intended it to be, the most important. In proportion as we approximate to Nature and rural felicity we increase our distance from our fashionable clothier.

The natives of this region were of pastoral but reticent habits. The effect of a question upon the rural mind was similar to a blow. After the first stunning effect was over, recovery was followed by the attitude of resistance. As the small roads in that neighborhood led nowhere in particular, and were originally organized by cattle in search of water, travelers were often obliged to fall back upon the population for a knowledge of their whereabouts and for directions for their guidance. When an answer could be extracted from these people, it was usually given in a vague, unsatisfactory manner, which generally led the unfortunate man to ask again at the next house and receive a reply equally mysterious. There were allusions to such landmarks as Jones' Mill, Brown's Store and Robinson's Field—local authorities of course utterly unknown to the stranger—and directions as to keeping to the right and turning to the left, which generally brought him to a state of miserable perplexity and confusion.

The country is still, but not pulseless. There is such a vague impression of unseen vitality at work, that the silence of a vast open field has a throbbing intensity which affects the tympanum as palpably as sound, and I do not wonder that Horace—I think it was Horace—spoke of that "dreadful noise of nothing" as being peculiarly rural. I speak of the meridian quiet, of course, and not of those hours of the morning and afternoon given up to vocal exercises of bird and insect. But for genuine repose the rural night is the most sincere. There is such a palpable folding of leafy hands, and such nestling beneath the green coverlid. Then the moon, lifting herself cautiously over the pines that fringe the mountain, looks down with a subdued and timid lustre, as if half afraid of disturbing the sleep of birds and flowers. Then with the whimsical tenderness of her sex, she invests with poetry and loveliness, all that else were harsh, uncouth and rugged. A shingle mansion lately built, and just visible through the trees from my window, she touched here and there with caressing fingers, and straightway the coarse unsightly sham became a palace, whose wooden colonnades were turned to marble, whose broad portico shone without a gleam of sickly paint or staring color. She touched the whitewashed fences beyond, and their glaring freshness was subdued to silvery outlines. Even the dusty road became a shining ribbon. As I have a great temptation here to make the usual allusion to Endymion, without which no description of any moonlit landscape was ever complete, I close somewhat abruptly and leave the slumbers of that gentle shepherd for once undisturbed.

Bret.

Maps.—The first regular map on record was one of brass or copper, made for Cleomenes, King of Sparta, just before setting out on his expedition to attack the Persian empire. There exist several evidences that the Athenians were well acquainted with the use of maps. Roman generals, after a victory, were in the habit of showing to the people on their return, a painting or map of the country they had conquered. Maps and charts were introduced into England about 1489, by Bartholomew, the brother of Christopher Columbus, who was detained for some time in England by Henry VII., and procured a maintenance by making and selling them.

The Coming Circus.—Manager Wilson is in the city, and has perfected his arrangements for giving, about the first of August, the best and most complete equestrian entertainments ever offered to the San Francisco public.

(For the Californian.)

WHEN THE TIDE TURNED.

Once when the world was lost
All in the waters dark,
And the ark,
Tempest-tost,
Wherein were cherished
Only the good and brave,
Wrestled with wind and wave,
While they were spared the grave,
All the rest perished.
Fear could not overwhelm
Trust, at that steady helm.

Then, when the rain was through,
Then when the storm was done,
And the sun—
Risen new—
Had dried the fountains,
Loosing a dove to mourn
O'er the waste, leaflets shorn
Found they the bird had borne
Green from the mountains;
Prayers, sweet as incense burned,
Rose when the dove returned.

We were such voyagers, late,
Stemming war's crimson tide,
For the pride
And the hate
Of erring brothers:
O'er our ark strong and vast,
Thank God! the worst was past—
Broke the bright day at last,
Blest of all others;
Purged of a sin were we,
White-robed eternally.

Morn filled our hearts with praise,
For we had put to flight
Sorrow's night,
Hemming days
Of petty quarrels;
Sending our eagle out
In the cloud, as a scout,
Lo! he dispelled all doubt;
Palm boughs and laurels
Reaped he. Beneath his wings
Peace sits, and joyous sings.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

A Trait of Greek Religion and Manners.—The agents of the British Consul at the Dardanelles were robbed of 40,000 piastres. The robbery was traced to the people of the village, and after some days the priest of the place declared in church that he had a charm which would infallibly discover the thief. This charm was "the leg bone of a wolf, which if boiled in milk with a plowshare and then burned, has the extraordinary property of rendering the thief lame. The moment the bone is put into the fire one of the legs of the thief is forthwith paralyzed." The priest announced this in the morning, adding that he would not burn the wolf's bone till the next day. The same night the whole of the property was thrown down into the garden of the rightful owner in a bag, and so the thief escaped his punishment.

A New Use for Photographs.—The commercial travelers in England have now seized upon photography, and pressed it into their service. On one side of a card is the usual notice about "our Mr. —— will have the pleasure of calling upon you," etc., and on the other, the photographic fac-simile of Mr. —— himself, samples in hand. The idea might be advantageously carried out as regards collectors of accounts, so as to prevent the wrong "parties" calling for tradesmen's little bills.

The painter Rothman, of Dusseldorf, has made a will in which he bequeaths four hundred dollars to four friends, to "go on a spree" with, and one hundred dollars to his colleagues, to drink a "memorial punch" for him.

"Waiting for the Verdict."—This play, which has been the sensation drama of the dramatic world in the East for many months past, has a curious origin; it is the elaboration and working out of the deeply pathetic sentiment embodied in Solomon's wonderful picture. The dramatic interest is skilfully worked up to the highest pitch of intensity, and during its representation thousands have sat with breathless anxiety waiting for the verdict. Much expense has been incurred in placing this dramatic marvel on the stage at Maguire's Opera House, which will, we hope and confidently anticipate, be fully reimbursed to the management by the crowds who will flock to witness this wonderous creation of the brain of the playwright and the painter.

Public Readings.—Miss Angela Starr King, sister of the late eloquent divine and distinguished orator, will give a public reading from the Poets in Platt's Music Hall on Tuesday, July 18th. As a professional reader, Miss King has already won a favorable reputation before critical Eastern audiences. As the sister of the great orator and patriot whose memory is yet fresh in the hearts of all Californians, she is certain to win the attention and consideration of her audiences.

(For the Californian.)

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING PLANTS.

It was once the remark of an intelligent peasant, after being conducted through the aisles of the British Museum, "I never saw so much of God before!" And surely this quaint but beautiful expression applies with equal force to the humblest student in the great garden of nature; to him who stoops to take a nearer view of the daisy under his feet, or, bending over the slowly unfolding rosebuds, sees, fully and clearly developed there, the perfect flower. Flowers are in the volume of Nature what the expression "God is Love" is in the volume of Revelation. They are playthings for childhood—ornaments for the grave—innocently simple, and sublimely complex. Do they not unceasingly expand to Heaven their grateful and to man their cheerful looks? Can any one examine closely the structure of a plant or flower without loving it? One of the most interesting plants, and particularly for its connection with literature, is the Papyrus of the Nile, (Papyrus Antiquorrum,) from which the Egyptians made their paper, still grows in the marshes of Egypt or in the stagnant waters of the Nile. It is also found in Sicily, Syria and Nubia, and extends even to Senegal. This plant rises with a triangular stem to the height of eight or ten feet, surmounted with a large head of flowers; the lower part is clothed with long, hollow, sword-shaped leaves of brown color. It can be grown in great perfection in a large pot or tub with rich mud, covered with water, and forms one of the most interesting plants for the decoration of a conservatory or plant-cabinet. When growing naturally, the root-stocks are long and tortuous, four or five inches thick; when young they are sweet and nutritious; when old they are hard and woody; they were converted into cups, moulds and other utensils. The leaves and stems were twisted into ropes, and with the vertical fibres cloth was made. The ancients made their paper from the pellicle found between the pith and bark of the thick part of the stalk. The plant being called Babeer, in Syria, this word furnished the appellation Papyrus, from which our word paper is derived. With the rays of the umbels of the flowers, the Egptians made chaplets for the heads of their gods. Under the arm of a great many of the mummies a small bunch of Papyrus is found. It is supposed that it was this plant that Pharaoh's daughter made the "ark of bulrushes" in which she hid the infant Moses. Darwin celebrates the invention of paper, to which he attributes the origin of letters, in the following lines:

"Papyra, thron'd upon the banks of Nile,
Spread her smooth leaf, and wav'd her silver style;
The storied pyramids, the laurel'd bust,
The trophied arch, had crumbled into dust;
The sacred symbol, and the epic song,
(Unknown the character, forgot the tongue,)
With each unconquer'd chief, or sainted maid,
Sunk undistinguished in oblivion's shade.
Sad o'er the scattered ruins Genius sigh'd,
And infant Arts but learn'd to lisp, and died.
Till to astonish'd realms Papyra taught
To paint in mimic colors Sound and Thought,
With Wisdom's voice to print the page sublime,
And mark in adamant the steps of Time."

Another curious and interesting plant is the Pitcher Plant, (Nepenthes distillatoria;) the end of each leaf is protracted into a stalk, which, in curving downwards and then upwards, bears at the end a pitcher-like reservoir, something like the bowl of a tobacco-pipe, but deeper and narrowed at the mouth. When young a lid like a tankard-lid covers it tightly, fitting very close; at which time the pitcher contains a quantity of water, distilled from the plant itself, which tastes like lemon-juice much diluted, but as it grows older the lid opens, and this liquor evaporates. This water is a secretion of the plant and not as was once supposed an accumulation of dew. Nothing can exceed the sportive variety which nature has displayed in the adornment of these singular plants. Their chief peculiarity is the urn-shaped appendage to the leaf, the use and purpose of which it is not easy to discover. Some naturalists who think it necessary in all cases to give an answer to the question 'cui bono,' have expatiated with more imagination than truth, on the benevolent provisions of these vegetable fountains for the refreshment of the thirsty traveler in tropical regions. What the intention or use of this water is, has not been ascertained, but being sweet, it serves to attract and decoy a number of flies and other insects, which, when they once enter, seldom escape alive, their exit being intercepted by the reversed glands on the inside of the base of the pitcher acting like a rat-trap and keeping them back till they are ultimately drowned in the water.

The Venus Fly-trap (Dionœa muscipula) is one of the most singular plants, and from the nature of its leaves, would almost lead one to imagine that Providence had so designed them as to serve for a machine to catch food. These leaves are composed of two lobes, furnished on their margins with long bristly hairs, and on their inner surface with about three erect highly irritable bristles, from which it is supposed a sweet liquor is discharged, and this forms the bait.

When an insect, attracted by the sweet bait, alights on the leaf, that instant the two rows of bristles lock together like the teeth of a rat-trap and squeeze the little captive to death. Should it however remain quiet, the lobes will gradually re-open and it will regain its liberty, but the greater agitation it makes, the more certain will its death be. The sensitiveness resides only in these hair-like processes on the inside of the leaf, as it may be pressed or touched on any other part without any sensible effects. The plant cannot distinguish an insect from any other substance, for it will grasp a straw or anything by which the hairs or bristles are irritated. This interesting plant is a native of North Carolina, found in the swamps and marshes. It can be grown finely in a Wardian case, and affords one of the most interesting and curious objects of study in the whole range of the vegetable kingdom.

Who has not heard of that wonderful plant, El Spirito Santo (Peristeria elata?) It grows from three to four feet high, bearing spikes of large globular flowers of a delicate white which look as if modeled in wax, the petals being thick and fleshy. Within the blossom the column forms a very remarkable and perfect resemblance of the head of a dove looking downwards, and at each side appears a purple-and-spotted wing spread and extended forward so that the dove seems brooding over the centre of the flower. The flower is very striking indeed, and has given rise in its native country, Mexico, to a name at which, however we may be shocked by the profanation, yet, when we consider the superstitious nature of the people we cannot wonder that they call it El Spirito Santo, or the Holy Spirit. The flowers of this, as well as many other rare tropical plants, are largely used in all their religious ceremonies.

The Butterfly Flower (Oncidium Papilis) of Trinidad is a very curious plant. The leaves, which are large and oval, beautifully marbled, spring from a kind of bulb; the flower stalks are very slender and grow to the length of six and eight feet, and bearing a flower the exact resemblance to a butterfly. Although a solitary flower is all that is open at one time on the same stalk, yet such is its endurance that it will continue to produce a succession of flowers for many months and often years. The flower stalk is so slender, and, owing to its color, nearly invisible, when moved by the slightest breath of air it has all the appearance of life and locomotion. It prefers to grow on a piece of decaying wood, such as has become soft and retentive of moisture, into which the roots can insinuate themselves. There is an endless variety of plants, all of which have some peculiarly interesting and curious feature in their habit of growth or their flowering. There is no pursuit for the professional man, or the lady, when tired of company or household duties, or the child with its studies or play, that will afford the relief to the mind and pleasure to the senses, so much as the care and attention of plants, either in the garden or under glass, but where the latter can be had, the opportunities are much greater for the development of the choicer kinds of vegetable life.

If but a small portion of the money spent in the usual foolish ways were devoted to a thing of this kind, the pleasure and satisfaction derived from it would be a continual cause of thankfulness. If our rulers had taken the means spent on the past Fourth of July, and devoted it to building a suitable structure, in some of our parks or plazas, filling it with beautiful plants and dedicating it on that day with appropriate ceremonies, and making it free to the citizens and strangers, where they might see the wonders of the vegetable kingdom, what a constant source of pleasure it would be. When that grand Triumphal Arch is taken down and removed, what will we have to show for the money spent or what lessons of profit have been learned by it? Why should not this city have its Botanic Garden as well as the older cities of the world? There is no place where such facilities of collecting from all parts of the world, and there is no place which has its equal in point of climate suitable for such an endless variety as may be grown here in the greatest perfection, with but little care and attention. Will not some of our public men think of this and give it a start?

IRIS.

"Ariel," in the New York Leader, says: There is a good story current about Barnum's band—I mean the band which makes night and day hideous in front of his Museum. A trombone player in want of a situation applied to Barnum for permission to play in his band, which was at once granted. On Saturday afternoon he walked down to the office to get his money for the industrious tooting of the preceding week. To his surprise he was handed a bill of five dollars, in this form:

Mr. —— ——

To P. T. Barnum, Dr.

For opportunity to practice trombone.....$5 00

"Sir," said he, "what does this mean?" "Well, sir," was the reply, "that is the way we do. Gentlemen like to learn to play on various instruments, and as the noise annoys their neighbors if they practice at home, we let them come here and practice at five dollars a week." Overcome by this coolness, the trombone player paid the bill, but declined to practice any longer on those terms. You have only to listen to Barnum's band to fully appreciate this joke.

See advertisement of "A Pleasant Home for Children," on the sixteenth page.

A MISTAKE, AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

CHAPTER I.

IT seems a long time ago since the journey from Cork to Dublin took two days. There are those living, I suppose, who remember when it was a matter of three or four, but I speak of a more modern period, albeit the railway from Dublin to Kingstown was then the only one in Ireland. At this time, Bianconi's large four-horse cars formed the grand trunk from the south to the metropolis; while smaller vehicles, meeting the principal conveyance at different points, acted as branch-lines to the main one. From one of these latter I took the large car at Mitchelstown, on an intensely cold day, the last but one of October, 18—. I was going to Dublin for my Michaelmas Term examinations in Trinity College; and having idled the whole Summer, I felt some apprehension about the result of the ordeal through which I had to pass, and wondered much whether I should come back "plucked." The dark leaden sky, and the cutting northeast wind, were in dreary keeping with the sombre thoughts that troubled me. I occupied the box-seat, an honor that was dearly purchased by facing the blast: and Stapleton, the driver, predicted snow (early in the season as it was) before we reached Kilkenny, our destination for that night. We delayed for half an hour, I remember, at Clonmel about two o'clock; there was a good deal of excitement in the town, from the expectation of a special commission for the trial of prisoners connected with two terrible agrarian murders of recent occurrence in the South Riding of Tipperary. As we journeyed on, the driver entertained me with details of different outrages that he knew of, pointing out, now and again, the scenes where they took place, and winding up with the ominous announcement: "Mark my words for it, but the Ribbon boys will give them enough to do this Winter; they won't let much grass grow under the peelers' feet anyways."

I forget how many stages we had traveled from Clonmel when we stopped to change horses at a small public-house on the roadside; something was amiss with the shoe of one of the horses, and a sharp altercation ensued between the driver and the stable-boy on the subject, that ended with an injunction to "hurry off like blazes" to a neighboring forge for the smith to remedy the defect. As I foresaw that there would be some delay, I proposed to one or two of my traveling companions to join me in a run to warm our feet until the car overtook us. As they declined, I set off alone, calling back to Stapleton, when I was a few paces on, to know if there were any turns upon the road.

"No, sir," he replied; and then added, "keep to the left, and you'll be all right."

Laughing at this unintentional pun, and repeating the old couplet to myself:

> If you go to the left, you'll be sure to go right;
> If you go the right you'll go wrong—

I dashed on at full speed, and very soon noticing a road that branched off at right angles to the main one, I concluded that this was the reason of his direction. I was at all times a very swift runner, while the intense cold of the evening braced my energies still more. "By Jove!" I exclaimed, "I'll astonish them a bit; old Jehu will think I'm lost before he picks me up;" and the expectation of gaining credit by my prowess as a walker, accelerated my speed to unusual rapidity. The day, I have already remarked, was specially gloomy, and the evening shadows were now darkening into night with more than ordinary swiftness. Once I was for a moment at fault about the road, as I came upon a slight divergence from the direct line, but recalling Stapleton's words, "Keep to the left"—I followed that direction, and trudged out upon this unknown way into the thickly-gathering darkness. At last I began to wonder why the car did not come up; but concluding that the smith's operations caused the delay, I still went forward until the road became unusually rough and broken; and then, as far as the dim light allowed, I observed that the vegetation at the sides encroached far more than I had ever known upon a mail-coach road. "Oh, 'tis impossible I have gone astray!" I exclaimed, not allowing the unpleasant thought to intrude; and I still continued my course, though at a more doubtful pace, until I suddenly halted on perceiving that the narrowing line of roadway appeared to cease altogether, and I found myself actually walking on moist boggy ground. "Where on earth am I?" I cried, in consternation, peering through the darkness. As far as I could descry, I seemed to have wandered into some moor or commonage that stretched along the base of a steep acclivity; not a sound could I hear on any side, but the moaning sigh of the wind as it swept by with penetrating bitterness, and once the wild cry of some bird, startled from its rest by my approach. I made two or three efforts, but they proved ineffectual, to retrace my steps, and each time I became more bewildered, stumbling over rocky projections or roots of trees, and occasionally sinking ankle-deep into wet miry ground. "God help me!" I exclaimed at last in utter despair, and almost bursting into tears of vexation. "I'll have to wander about here all night, and perish with cold before morning." Another desperate effort to reach some pathway met with a like issue, save that by, I suppose, some consequent change of position, a bright light suddenly broke upon me, so bright and so close, that I was considerably startled at the unexpected appearance.

I thought of the Will-o'-the wisp, and fancied, from the evident nature of the ground, that it might be the meteor of the marsh; but as I moved cautiously forward, I saw that it came through the open door of a cabin, and a closer access showed me why I had not sooner detected it. The tenement before me was curiously constructed; the ground on three sides rose at a considerable elevation, and it seemed as if a deep cavernous recess had been formed in the yielding soil, and in it this rude habitation erected. I walked straight to the door, but saw no one in or immediately near the cabin; the light came from a large peat-fire, piled upon a hearth-stone at one side of the room; and so bright was the illumination, that it not only disclosed every object inside, but enabled me to notice distinctly the nature and peculiarity of the building without. I hesitated to enter, notwithstanding the tempting look of the fire, where there was no one to invite me. I called loudly once or twice, but no reply came; and at length I passed within the doorway, and proceeded without ceremony to warm my chilled limbs at the welcome blaze. "Some one is sure to be here in two or three minutes," I thought; "this fire has been freshly made up." The room where I stood seemed to be the only one the place could boast of, and wretched enough it was; an old bedstead, with a tattered curtain, occupied one corner; beside the fire rose a huge pile of dried sticks flung loosely together, that nearly reached to the ceiling; a large log of timber against the wall at the side opposite the fire, formed a kind of rude seat; while a stool or two, and an old rickety table, made up the remainder of the furniture. When some short time elapsed, I began to feel a little nervous at the position in which I found myself; apart from the vexation I experienced at having gone astray, and the difficulty I might find in reaching Dublin in time for my college duties, I remembered the remembered the troubled state of the country; and this lonely spot, at the foot of some mountain, was no desirable place to be caught in at night, alone and unarmed.

CHAPTER II.

I was deliberating whether I had better make another attempt to find my way, or stay until some one came, when the dead silence was broken by the noise of evidently more than one person approaching. As the parties came nearer, I could discern that some conflict or struggle was going on; at first, there were no voices, but a peculiar panting sound, such as accompanies the movement of people where effort is met by resistance, until at length, in a low, deep voice, like the growl of a mastiff, the words reached me: "Curse you, will you come on? I'll knock you on the head, if you don't." The ominous tone in which this brief sentence was uttered, evidently close to the doorway, made me bound back from the glare of the fire, and without a moment's thought, I glided in behind the pile of brushwood before referred to, between which and the end-wall of the cabin a narrow passage afforded bare space for concealment. I had scarcely effected my purpose, when three men entered the apartment, or rather two dragged in another between them. "Shut the door, Bill," gasped the elder of the two, for he was out of breath, and perspiring profusely. The younger man addressed as Bill complied, and then drew a large iron bar across the closed entrance. The screen behind which I was ensconced was so loosely constructed that I could see through the interstices all that went forward, while I devoutly hoped that it would prove sufficient to hide me from observation. The third individual of the party, who seemed to have been brought in as a prisoner, was a mere stripling, did not look more than twenty, and had. I could notice by the firelight, an expression of extreme alarm on his pale young face as he looked upon his captors. "There!" cried the elder man, giving him a violent push backwards, and shaking his closed fist at him, "you are cocht at last, you miserable spalpeen, you! I had my eye upon you when you little thought it. I suspected you even the very night you took the oath; and to-night I tracked you down to the police barrack, and saw what you were after; but as there's a heaven above us, it's the last chance you'll ever get of doing the like!"

"I tell you, Barney, on my solemn oath," began the young man, in a voice that trembled with agitation; but before he could utter another word, a quick, sharp knocking at the door interrupted him, and seemed to startle the whole party. The two men looked inquiringly at each other for a moment. "Oh!" exclaimed the younger, who had been addressed as Bill, "'tis Gran, I suppose;" and walking forward, he admitted, after a moment's parley, an old gray-haired woman, with a cloak thrown over her head. "An' where were you now, at this hour of the evening?" asked Barney, accompanying the inquiry with an oath.

"An' where was I, is that it? After them divils of goats there, that were wandhering off a good two miles and more from here; and near enough I was, bad luck to them! tumbling in the dark into the Wizard's Hole above there in the bog; and 'tis a night, glory be to God! that would shiver the heart out iv your body. But what's along here?" asked the old woman suddenly. "What's the matther? Isn't this Ned Sweeny?"

"Matther enough!" returned Barney, gruffly. "He only wanted to get the rope round my neck and Bill's here; he was turnin' informer on our hands; but never you fear; we'll stop that work. Here, Bill, lend a hand, will you," and the speaker strode across the room with some strong cord in his hand, that he had drawn from his pocket. The poor youth uttered a wild cry of terror that rung through the whole place, as the two men seized him.

"I tell you, Barney," he cried imploringly, "I wasn't going to tell a word to mortal soul; all I wanted with Connors was to ask him about the rabbits down at the colonel's."

"Whist your jabber you thin-skin varmint, you. Keep your breath to cool your porridge. I wouldn't believe ye, if ye kissed all the hooks in the barony. Ye'd have told that same foxy cub of a peeler of our tramp to-night, if I didn't stop your tongue. Them was the rabbits at the colonel's ye were after. Ha! you'll never see daylight again, plase Providence. Here, Bill, tie that knot tight, will ye?"

I could see from the spot where I was sheltered, that after a brief and feeble struggle, their unfortunate victim had been bound hand and foot, and was left sitting upon the log of timber before mentioned. I was at first so absorbed in interest at what I witnessed, as to be half unconscious of my own peril, but a terrible sense of it soon recurred. That I had most unfortunately fallen upon a party of desperate ruffians, there was no doubt, nor could I entertain a hope of escaping speedy death, if I were detected, and that might be expected every moment. A cold shudder crept through my whole frame as I realized the horrible position I was in. I was afraid, too, to stir, as an unguarded movement might so disturb the frail screen in front as at once to betray me; and the narrow passage between it and the wall scarcely afforded standing room. Bitterly did I curse the mad stupidity that led me into such danger; nor did many minutes elapse before a fresh accession of alarm was caused by the anticipation of instant discovery. Barney and Bill, as I had heard them named, after binding their prisoner, returned to the fire, where the old woman had remained, holding her long skinny hands over the blaze, apparently not much interested, one way or other, in the operations that were going on.

"I say," asked Bill, as he seated himself on a stool, "will you bring him before Captain Rock, and the rest of the boys to-morrow night, and have him tried reg'lar?"

"Faith, I'll do no such thing," replied the other; "I'll be judge, jury, and all myself. I caught him in the act, and that's enough. Death and no mercy to the spy and the informer—them's the laws among the Ribbon boys. Besides, I don't like a bone in the young vagabond's skin;" and the ruffian muttered something that I could not hear.

"May be," responded the other in low tone, "you may get into trouble."

"No fear, Bill, my boy. I dunno," he continued, "either, but it may be best to finish him at once. Faith, here goes." As he spoke, the man lifted a square stone somewhere near the hearth, and from a concealed receptacle he drew out what appeared to me, as well as I could see it, to be a large pistol; from the same opening, he took the other appliances, and proceeded deliberately to load the weapon. The poor bound creature leaped up with a desperate effort, as he noticed those fearful preparations, but fell back again helplessly upon the seat.

"Oh, for the love of God, Barney, don't murder me!" he cried in a hoarse, half-choking voice. "Speak to him, Nelly, speak to him!" he continued appealingly to the old woman. None of them took the least notice of his entreaties, the old woman merely shook her head, and continued gazing into the fire. I felt tingling from head to foot with horror at the prospect of witnessing this cold-blooded murder, and was inclined, on the first impulse, to rush out at all hazards, and interfere.

"I say, Barney," again exclaimed Bill, "why waste powder and shot on the likes of him; 'tisn't so much we have to spare. Tell you what we'll do; as we go down to meet the boys on the way to the Colonel's to-night, pitch him into the Wizard's Hole; and, mind me, he'll not come up again to tell tales."

"You're right, Bill—the very—thing," returned Barney, laying down his pistol, "I remember the last chap as we tucked into the soft sheets there; laws! what a splash he made as the black slush closed over him; it made me almost shiver."

A deep moan of agony, that broke from the wretched man, told the effect that this fresh arrangement had upon him.

"There's a weight, a half-hundred, somewhere," said Barney; "where is it, Nell?"

"Oh, the old weight, is it? It's behind the sticks there, I believe. Do you want it?"

My heart leaped to my throat at this inquiry, for just at my foot, where I stood, I felt the hard substance, that I had supposed to be a stone. "Now for it!" I thought, as I listened in an agony to the next words.

"We'll just tie it round his waist, Bill; 'twill be a nice buckle for his belt, and will keep him down a while in the bottom of the hole."

"Shall I get it now?" asked the old hag.

"Time enough," responded the other, "when we set out. Get us the supper, though."

Some relief was afforded by this respite; but the faint hope which I had just begun to entertain, that I might possibly be able to evade discovery until the men departed with their victim, and I had the old woman only to deal with, now vanished, as, when the weight came to be looked for, I was sure, of course, to be found, and as certain to be murdered. Some food was placed upon the small table drawn in front of the fire, while a candle fixed in a sconce against the wall added a feeble illumination to the firelight. The three partook of the meal in silence, and then the men smoked, during which an hour might have passed; scarcely a sound being heard save a low moan or restless movement from the poor lad, who was evidently writing in agony from the physical torture of the tight cording of his limbs, as well as harassed, no doubt, with the horrible apprehension of his coming doom.

"Look out, Nell," were the first words spoken by Barney, that broke the stillness—"look out, and see what time of night it is."

The old woman rose, opened the door, and, judging by what external appearances I know not, in a few moments turned in again. "'Tis no more than eight o'clock," she said.

"Eight o'clock! Four or five hours yet, Bill. Let's have a sleep; we're not to meet at the cross till one. Do you sit up and watch, Nell," he continued; "and wake us about twelve, mind."

In a few minutes, the two miscreants had disposed themselves beside the fire, dragging over them some loose garments supplied by Nelly; and in a very short time their deep heavy breathing betokened that both were fast asleep. A turmoil of anxious thoughts literally seethed through my brain in the brief period of stillness that followed. Could I take advantage of their sleep? Could I take any step, and what, for my extrication from this dreadful peril? At length, a low parched voice, a kind of husky whisper, it seemed, rose upon the quiet of the place. "Nelly, for the dear love of God, have pity on me, and save me, now that they are asleep."

There was no answer. "Who knows but she's dropped off too," I thought.

"Nelly, if you hope for mercy yet, listen to me, save me," again whispered that weak voice of anguish.

"Whist, will ye," replied the old woman, evidently quite awake. "It's no use your talking; you'd have sold Bill to the gallows; and if the liftin' of my little finger would save yees, I wouldn't."

"Give me a sup of wather, will ye?" he asked. "I think I'll go mad."

"I'll give you that much, at any rate," she said; "though it's enough of it you'll get afore long, I'm thinking."

The old hag rose and gave him some water from a tin vessel, but bitterly persisted in her refusal either to aid his escape or even to loosen the cords that were so cruelly tormenting him. When Nelly replaced the water-can on the table, she replenished the fire, settled the covering more carefully round the young man Bill, and then muttered, in a kind of soliloquy: "No fear but I'll wake in time; an hour at most will do me." She moved towards the old bed, eyeing the prisoner's bonds, as she passed him, to see that all was right there, and threw herself upon the rickety resting-place that groaned and creaked beneath her weight, as she turned away from the light. Thank God, almost passed my lips in an audible utterance. For the first time, I ventured to alter my position. I was so numbed and cramped that I could hardly stir. Soon the deep breath of the third sleeper was heard; the candle had been extinguished. The fire burned less brightly, yet shed a crimson glow through the whole apartment, showing me, as I gazed with less apprehension round the wood-work screen, the dusky figures and swarthy frowning faces of the two sleeping men; while it illuminated with a fainter light the recumbent form of the doomed culprit, disclosing a ghastly face, stamped with an expression of the deepest anguish, with the eyes closed, but not in sleep, as a low sighing moan that occasionally escaped from his lips but too plainly indicated.

CHAPTER III.

To take swift advantage of so unexpected a turn in the tide of danger, was of course my foremost thought, and I was just about to glide out from my hiding-place, when I remembered that considerable caution was necessary with reference to the youth Sweeny, who, utterly unconscious of my being in the apartment, might, in his surprise, give expression to some sound that would arouse the sleepers, and destroy us both. To release him from his bondage and peril, I was, of course, as resolved on as to extricate myself. I crept out as gently as I could, and stood for a moment on the floor, to see if I could attract his notice. I was just by the bed where the old woman lay, a propinquity that I dreaded, as her softer breathing intimated a lighter sleep than seemed to have locked the two ruffians at the fire. Still the young man remained with closed eyes, and it was only as I was just beside him that he started with a bound, and glared upon me with a new terror in his face. I doubt not but that he thought, as I rose up before him so unexpectedly in that dusky light, that I was a spirit from the other world. "Hush!" I whispered putting my lips to his ear—"not a word," pointing to the men. "I was over there; I know all about you; wait till I cut those cords." When with my penknife I had done so, it was some minutes before he could use his freed limbs. It required but few words to enjoin speed and caution. "Do you unbar the door," I again whispered; "and, for your life, take care of a sound." Slowly and softly we moved on. I possessed myself of the loaded pistol that lay close by one of the sleepers, as I passed him. But our chief difficulty lay in getting the door opened. The iron bar that crossed it was fixed in a staple, and fitted it so tightly as to require considerable effort for its release, while the nervousness with which his whole frame shook made Sweeny but a clumsy hand.

"Let me try," I said at last in despair.

I had just succeeded in drawing out the bar, and with scarcely a sound, when my companion in a horrified tone cried: "For God's sake, hurry; I hear the old woman stirring."

I instantly pulled the bolt back more rapidly; and not aware of its weight, it fell with a dull heavy clang on the earthen floor. I hardly know now what at that terrible moment we did. There was an instantaneous rustling movement from the bed; but we waited for nothing. All I can recollect is, that quick as lightning, we were both out upon the heath. "I'll hold you; I don't know the way," I gasped, as I dreaded that my companion might think only of himself, and desert me. I am sure that he never dreamed of doing so. He seized me tightly by the arm; and on we went headlong, plunging through swamps, and more than once falling over some unseen impediment. The night was very dark, and I trusted entirely to my guide. Want of breath at last compelled us to halt, and we stood panting for a moment. Not a sound of any kind reached us. If pursued at first, our foes must have been at fault, as we heard nothing of them.

"Tell me, what was to be done to-night at the Colonel's?" I asked Sweeny.

"Fire and murder," was his expressive answer.

"Come on there at once—you know the way," I said—"will you?"

"Yes;" and without another word, diverging a little from the course we had been pursuing, we again hurried forward with fresh speed. We soon reached the termination of the bog, crossed a road, and got into some fields.

"Over here," whispered Sweeny, "is the Colonel's." "Colonel Grey," he added, in reply to an inquiry. "What are you going to do there?"

"To warn them—to save them, I answered. "And never fear," I continued, as I noticed some reluctance on the part of the lad; "I saved you already, and I'll take care of you still; no harm shall come to you."

We continued our course through two or three fields, and turned out on what appeared to me be a narrow by-road, when suddenly, as from a ditch close to us, a deep hoarse voice gave a challenge: "Who goes there?"

"May I never!" ejaculated Sweeny, in a trembling whisper; "if 'tisn't the boys; they're waitin' here for the rest to go up to the Colonel's."

"Answer them boldly," I whispered.

Sweeny replied to the challenge, when a rapid cross-questioning ensued, and some passwords were demanded and given.

"Who's with you?" asked the speaker who challenged us, now standing out on the road, and who seemed to be the leader of the party who were still concealed in the ditch.

A momentary hesitation nearly proved fatal to us.

"Oh," he answered, and his voice shook, "'tis Bill sure. We are to go on, Barney said, and see all's right, and give you the signal."

"You had better stay here," gruffly responded the speaker. "Go on, indeed. What signal?"

"Just a whistle, an' no more; I must be ruled by Barney, as he's the leader to-night," replied Sweeny, with an affectation of sulkiness in his tone that showed more presence of mind than I had hoped for.

"Well, on with you then; and if you spoil it all, 'tisn't my doing." And, to my infinite relief, the speaker sank again into the shelter from which he had emerged.

We passed leisurely forward beside the lurking party, afraid to go fast, lest suspicion should be aroused; but we had not advanced a dozen paces when the hard heavy tramp of feet, running at full speed upon the road, distinctly reached our ears; and from the stir among the ambushed men, was evidently heard by them too.

"On, on, for our very lives!" exclaimed Sweeny. "Come this way—quick;" and he plunged in among some thick plantations, through which it was no easy task in the darkness to advance. We caught, as we forced our way through, voices loud and furious behind us, and the single terrible expression: "Hell's fire, man, be after them!" discovered to us at once the danger we had to apprehend.

"This way, this way," cried Sweeny, dragging me forward; "we may do them yet."

In two or three minutes, we reached a small wooden door in a wall, with which my companion seemed acquainted. He opened it quickly; and then we passed through and bolted it on the other side. It admitted us into what looked like the extensive back-premises of a spacious mansion, that rose up dark and gloomy on our left. Sweeny strode rapidly on to where a single light was burning in small window, low, near the ground. At this he gave two peculiar taps. At once the light moved.

"The moment he opens the door," whispered Sweeny—"that he's coming to do—you manage him with that," pointing to the pistol that I had. "'Tis Griffen, the butler, I mean; he's in the plot; and then you can alarm the house; and there's not a moment to be lost."

Most cautiously, an old gray-haired, respectable-looking servant opened the door at which we had stationed ourselves.

"Is it all right, Barney?" asked a low voice.

"Yes, to be sure," exclaimed Sweeny, pushing in, as I followed; and instantly shutting the door again behind us, he seized the candle from the man's hand, while, with the butt end of the pistol, I dealt the treacherous servant a blow that effectually hindered his interfering.

"Go up the stairs there now," cried Sweeny, "and wake them up: "I'll stay here."

I dashed on with my pistol, and narrowly escaped being shot down myself, as a close to my strange adventure, by a half-dressed gentleman, who confronted me on the lobby.

"Stop!" I cried, "till I explain. Your house is just about to be attacked; I am here to warn you."

A few words put him in possession of all that was necessary then to inform him. A night of alarm and confusion followed within the building; but, to our surprise, no attempt was made. My strange first acquaintance with Colonel Grey led to a close intimacy—though not in Tipperary, as he soon after left the county. The poor lad Sweeny was well provided for, and sent abroad; and for myself, I only add, that I never had reason to regret the mistake that led to such unexpected consequences.

SALA IN AFRICA; THE WOMEN; AN ARABIAN SULTANA. No, you are in Africa: this, indeed, is Algiers; and the Arabian Nights are all around you. There goes the Sultana Scheherazade. The Sultana in walking costume resembles a clothes-bag bifurcated, or say a pair of well-inflated pillows, surmounted by a bolster, and covered with a mosquito curtain. The Sultana may be one of the wives of a wealthy Morcseo, or she may be a washerwoman. She is Mauresque, and her out-door costume is invariable. It consists of a pair of very baggy galligaskins, not at all of Zouave cut, but precisely that kind of Turkish trousers which Mandane wears in the opera of Artaxerxes. These—the shintiyan of the Turkish women—are of plain white muslin; above is a quantity of semi-diaphanous drapery, which I cannot attempt to describe; and over all is thrown a long robe, or feminine toga, of very fine white linen or gauze, called a haik. Sometimes another haik of a somewhat stouter material is worn over the first. This drapery does not fall in graceful folds. It is drawn close to the form, and the general composition of the pillow-case legs and bolster body is, in the entire effect, droll. The feet and ankles are bare, and from the hue of those extremities the Algerine expert, is, I suppose, enabled to judge whether the veiled lady is dark or fair. Of course I only presumed to look at the Sultana Scheherazade's supporters for the purpose of verifying the fact that her feet are thrust into wide shoes called sebabath, which, again, are encased in looser slippers of yellow morocco, the papouches or babouches. Looking at these slippers I could not, however, avoid regarding that which the slippers covered; and I must admit that the greatest part of the flesh I peeped at was very dusky indeed. The upper class of Mauresques, however, are said to be as fair as Europeans. You see nothing of the Sultana Scheherazade's face but her eyes. The upper haik comes well down over her temples; then you have a pair of big, black, sloe-like orbs, the lids so prolonged that they almost meet, or are darkened at least with kohl until they seem to join. The rest of the face is hidden by a handkerchief tied tightly behind. Some Arab ladies are said coquettishly to make use as a veil of a handkerchief so very transparent that their features can be perfectly well discerned beneath; but with the vast majority of the Sultanas I have seen to-day the gauze mask has been a reality, and the concealment effectual. I don't wonder at this veil, answering to the Turkish "yashmak," having been, through so many centuries, so obstinately retained. It may be regarded as a beautiful dispensation of Providence for promoting outdoor equality among the ladies. A pretty woman may let the passers-by know, even through her veil, that she is comely; but an ugly woman is, by the merciful interposition of the knotted handkerchief, enabled altogether to hide her ill-favoredness.—Letter from Algiers.

NOTICE

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lob, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1865.

THE "DAILY EXAMINER."

IT has been the comfortable fallacy of many sensible people that wounded Error was in the habit of "writhing in pain," and dying, as it were, to slow music, "among his worshippers." This theory, promulgated we believe originally in verse, does not seem to have been borne out in prose or practice. The assassination of the President, and the letter of Judge Campbell, occurred at a time when Error ought to have been flat upon its back. When Error was stricken in California through the Democratic Press, the Daily Examiner arose, a typographical Phœnix—from the scattered pi. When we come to look at it, there is really something terrible in this persistent and vindictive wriggling. The vitality attributed to angle-worms, eels. frogs and turtles, is feeble, compared with the tenacity with which sham Democracy still clings to existence.

It must be confessed that in certain qualities which excite respect, the Democratic Press was far superior to the Daily Examiner. The former paper was published in the heat of the conflict, when passion ran high, when Alcatraz yawned for traitors, and it was risky to attack the Government. It has been the misfortune of the Examiner to appear after the battle has been fought, and to consequently lose some of that respect with which the element of danger might have invested it. But this awkward circumstance is overcome by extra shrilluess and redoubled invective. To read the Examiner, nobody would believe the war was over. The claug of trumpets is heard in its columns—the groans of the dying and the beating of kettle-drums—and ever and anon the editor charges madly over the whole field, like Sir John Falstaff, stabbing and hacking the bodies some one else has killed. Frightful as all this appears, it must be confessed that the real risk is small, and that the Daily Examiner, on the whole, is far inferior in audacity and ability to the Democratic Press. It is, at best, a wriggle.

Yet, as we look through the columns of the Examiner, there is a flavor of decayed gentility which excites our respect. We meet our old friends "the Constitution" and "Thomas Jefferson," the usual editorial outfit. We meet also the expression "white slaves" without which no modern Democratic utterance is complete. Indeed, a Southern politician at present finds it as difficult to get along without a "white slave," as of old he found it impossible to do without a black one. The epithet "Puritan" occurs frequently, sometimes in a darkly enigmatical manner, which we fancy must be peculiarly exasperating to the descendants of the Mayflower. These severe formulæ are diversified by glowing accounts of outrages committed by negroes—or mysterious details of cases of amalgamation in the first families of New York and Boston. If we never meet these stories out of Democratic Presses and Daily Examiners, it is because a venal Abolition press suppresses them. After these statements there usually follows an editorial inquiry "And is this free America?" a fact somewhat patent we should think from the context. From the unfailing recurrence of this question we should judge that the line was left "standing" in the office of the Democratic Press, and survived the vengeance of the mob.

Impotent and senile as is this kind of babble, it is painful to think that in the nineteenth century there are those who still accept its utterance as that of a youthful and manly opposition. Long after the death of the Pretender there were many honest rustics and country gentlemen who still believed in his divine right and ordained majesty, and we do not wonder that the Daily Examiner still endeavors to invest the sham Confederacy with real virtues; that it should pooh pooh the accounts of Jeff Davis' petticoat episode, or that its readers should believe it. It may be that its editor is sincere, even as Rip Van Winkle was sincere in hurrahing for King George, on awakening from his long slumber, during which period of unconsciousness the Revolutionary struggle had occurred. But whatever be its motives, we believe in giving the largest liberty to the Examiner. If the Democratic Press had not been suppressed we should have had no Examiner. Like the Pope's Encyclical Letter, ignorance and error in their highest and most concentrated expression are less to be feared than in the form of diluted conservatism, and the Examiner is better than the Democratic Press.

HOW TO GET UP ELECTIONEERING ENTHUSIASM.

A PRIMARY meeting is a singularly unwholesome place to practice refinement in. The patriotic individual who enthrones himself as chairman, and calls the attention of the audience to the matters in hand by his flowing rhetoric, addresses an assembly of somewhat different tone from that which applauds Signors Morelli and Barilli from the soft cushions of the Academy. We have always kept shy of these little hot-beds of political blossoms. Not that we feel unpatriotic, but we somehow find ourselves playing so insignificant a part as a free and enlightened citizen whenever we happen in on a ward meeting of our party, that we turn disgusted away, and leave the whole affair in the grip of professionals. Why should they not have the superintendence of things? They are the only class who have time from their pursuits of pleasure to carry through the proper ticket; they are the only ones who demand and receive pay for their work; and they are solitary in the possession of abilities to be successful. This kind of reasoning is not our political rule alone. It is the principle upon which the political conduct of most good-natured, selfish people is based. There is nothing about a party fight interesting enough to wake up the ordinary, humdrum, average citizen to earnestness about elections, wherein it has not been demonstrated to him clearly and unanswerably that his political religion and convictions run some danger of destruction.

But he is not allowed to slumber. If he is ignorant of the merits of the controversy and avows it as an excuse for his lukewarmness, straightway some vituperative partisan among his friends tortures him into a state of enlightenment. If he hints that he knows none of the able candidates who have joined in the log-rolling battle, he is treated immediately to a series of succinct biographics, whereof one would be too good for an archangel and the rest too bad for Satan and his family friends. He is told that by voting for one he will successfully resist the encroachments of any number of wicked and designing men, while by casting a ballot for any of the others, he will prove in an humble way the instrument of his country's ruin. He finds, too, that politics are personal; that he must sustain the coolness or perhaps the loss of some pleasant social acquaintances; that he must submit to any amount of abuse, be crucified politically, perchance in the newspapers, be obliged to defend any number of wrong acts, until the road to the polls, instead of being to him a triumphal journey, becomes a disgusting tramp through the miry ruts of party. He is honest and means well by his country. He does not admire strife, where the most blatant and vulgar antagonist wins the day by sheer force of impudence. He does not like the game, and yet he is dragged ruthlessly forward, merely because he is good-natured. Perhaps, if left to his studies; if allowed to examine history for light; to look up political economy, and draw forth a definite opinion, he might go to the polls with a clear idea of what he wanted to do. But the political campaign of to-day is an arid, unpleasant prospect, about as tempting as a picnic on an alkali plain.

Bribery, like small bets among thimble-riggers, makes the game interesting to some; personal considerations attract a few more; party spoils tempt their quota; but the real class interested, the men who own the election privileges, and who should control it, are merely bullied through the work, without deriving the least pleasure therefrom.

To the patriotic candidates who now stand in the market-place, or who, preparatory to coming forward, are getting the holes slit in their togas, through which their party scars are to shine, we make a humble request. You are doubtless all of you good men. We have not an imagination vivid enough to make any one of you out a black-hearted villain; nor reverential enough to picture you to ourself as a political sort of radiant saint. You are human. You have ambition; we shall be glad to see it gratified. It is a pity, as Mr. Colfax said the other night, that we cannot send you all and any others who have hankerings that way to the Senate. We shall vote for one of you. That is about as much, in these days of anti-ballotbox-stuffing, as you can ask of us. But do, please, keep the hot side of the question away from us. Election returns are not our intellectual food. We spit upon the political slate, and would be glad to see its blue-black surface pure of every figure. We read the papers mostly for news, and are far more interested in seeing Mr. Sherman clear himself of all suspicion, or in learning that the Overland Ronte is clear, than in the fact that the Hon. —— is fixing the party all right in Siskiyou, and that he is sure of a strong vote in the Assembly. If you want us to get excited, do something to make us enthusiastic. The world is atrociously venal. Not for money; some bank accounts forbid the idea; nor for patronage; some are too old to hold office. But we would like to be bamboozled pleasantly. Get up a social demonstration, and, provided the subject of politics is tabooed at it, it will be a success. We once knew an eminent lunatic at home, who ran for Congress. He was not mad enough to be elected, but he started out in the right direction. He gave a huge public grape picnic on his grounds. Everybody went home gratified and voted with the utmost good nature. It was true that a sane man was elected; but that was an accident. Everybody knows the story of the Duchess of Devonshire winning over a stalwart butcher to the Fox party by a kiss. The butcher's politics may have been somewhat shaky, but his taste, in being persuaded by the most beautiful woman in England, was unexceptionable. We would ourself thaw out at the prospect of such a bribe, and our vote would be flung gladly for any man who voted for Lincoln last year, who did not get drunk except in his own house, who wore a clean shirt occasionally, and who did not spell Jehovah with a small j. Give us, then, ye party chiefs, something to be energetic about. Decree a sort of war of roses that will be fit for us to engage in. Make your court by somebody else than ticket pedlars, or rather make ticket pedlars more interesting. "He-e-r-r-es your right ticket! The only good candidate!" sounds disgusting. We never employ a shouting hackman, and are unnerved by noise anywhere. Suppose that you make up your cases like counsel do briefs, carefully shutting out every word of reviling, and alluding to one another as "able" and "learned." Speak of one another in courteous terms, and make the party journals do the same. Because the immigrated Klamath Indians who are among us will not use their shillalahs—we mean their war clubs—on your side, don't call them dirty, raw barbarians with hair all over their teeth. It is wrong to use such language and hurts the feelings of the better specimens of Klamathdom. In fine, try to carry on a political fight without tearing up the honest attachments of society and disgusting disinterested people with false and malicious gossip and cowardly backbiting. The Senatorial candidate who conducts himself in a cool and reasonable way, and who energetically attempts to innoculate his friends high and low with the same feeling, may fail to reach Washington, but he has attained a higher rank as a democratic nobleman.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

THE features of the week at the Academy of Music, were the production of Don Giovanni on Wednesday evening and Gottschalk's concert, assisted by the major portion of the troupe on the evening previous, both of which drew good houses. Morelli's "Don Giovanni" was, of course, most excellently rendered, and was excellently seconded by Barili's "Leporello." Miss Phillip's "Zerlina" was arch, artistic and charmingly natural, with traits of coquetry and vivacity that were forcible reminders of "Rosina." Our wicked friend Don Giovanni, too, though widely different in some characteristics from the gay "Figaro," still, apparently, bears a near relationship to him. Both Don Giovanni and Il Barbiere are strongly marked as to nationality and have so many similar touches of Spanish character and traces of idiom, as to necessarily somewhat assimilate. The costumes and properties of Don Giovanni were in good keeping, with the exception of the mock baud introduced in the banquet scene of the last act, whose make-believing was a little too palpable for the effect of the scene, and was suggestive of Leporello's serenade on an enlarged scale—the audience, and not "Donna Elvira," being the recipients thereof.

Gottschalk's impromptu concert, announced at a late hour, to fill the vacancy caused by the non-production of I Puritani, on Thursday evening, proved an unproductive entertainment in more senses than one, and no performance was given. The green curtain remained down, with the "celebrated Chickerings" thrust forward in front of it with significant prominence, as usual, but, alas, no Gottschalk appeared to back them up. To-night Miss Lucy Simmons will make her debut in I Puritani. This afternoon Gottschalk will give his second regular concert.

On Monday evening another new opera season is to be inaugurated, with the addition of Signorina Brambilla to the troupe. It is reported that a portion of the troupe will visit and give concerts at Stockton and Sacramento during the coming week.

San Francisco Amateurs.—This association gave their second dramatic entertainment on Thursday evening, at the armory of the Franklin Light Infantry. The audience was composed entirely of invited guests, and was a very large one. The play chosen was the Lady of Lyons, (amateurs never meddle with anything lighter than Richelieu or heavier than Othello,) and it was very creditably performed, considering all the circumstances. Mr. Robert Fulford, who personated "Claude Melnotte," acted his part with spirit and feeling, and graced it with an excellence of elocution that made it difficult to believe he was not an ancient and experienced professional. He showed a thorough conception and appreciation of the character of Clande, and rendered it with an ability which justly entitles him to feel prond of his performance. The other characters in the piece were sustained a great deal better than we had expected they would be. After the play was over, the Amateurs and the audience inaugurated a dance and kept it going until three o'clock in the morning. The entertainment was a very pleasant one in all respects.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELISTS.

[Anxious to keep up the literary standard of The Californian, its proprietors have, at an enormous expense, recently engaged the principal novelists of Europe and America to contribute to its columns. In view of the objections sometimes offered to "Only a Clod" and other continued tales, arrangements have been made with the different authors to condense their stories into a space that shall not exceed two columns of our paper. By this means The Californian will be enabled to offer its readers a three-volume novel in a single issue, or so to speak, a seventy-five cent book for ten cents. By the last steamer, we have received our third installment, from the pen of an elegant and philosophical writer, which we give below:]

ME.

BY SIR ED—D L—TT—N B—LW—R.

BOOK I.

THE PROMPTINGS OF THE IDEAL.

IT was noon. Sir Edward had stepped from his brougham and was proceeding on foot down the Strand. He was dressed with his usual faultless taste, but in alighting from his vehicle his foot had slipped, and a small round disk of conglomerated soil, which instantly appeared on his high arched instep, marred the harmonious glitter of his boots. Sir Edward was fastidious. Casting his eyes around, at a little distance he perceived the stand of a youthful bootblack. Thither he sauntered, and carelessly placing his foot on the low stool, he awaited the application of the polisher's Art. "'Tis true," said Sir Edward to himself, yet half aloud, "the contact of the Foul and the Disgusting mars the general effect of the Shiny and the Beautiful—and, yet, why am I here? I repeat it, calmly and deliberately—why am I here? Ha! Boy!"

The Boy looked up—his dark Italian eyes glanced intelligently at the Philosopher, and, as with one hand he tossed back his glossy curls from his marble brow, and with the other he spread the equally glossy Day & Martin over the Baronet's boot, he answered in deep rich tones: "The Ideal is subjective to the Real. The exercise of apperception gives a distinctiveness to idiocracy, which is however, subject to the limits of Me. You are an admirer of the Beautiful, sir. You wish your boots blacked. The Beautiful is attainable by means of the Coin."

"Ah," said Sir Edward thoughtfully, gazing upon the almost supernal beauty of the Child before him; "you speak well. You have read Kant."

The Boy blushed deeply. He drew a copy of Kant from his blouse, but in his confusion several other volumes dropped from his bosom on the ground. The Baronet picked them up.

"Ah!" said the Philosopher, "what's this? Cicero's De Senectute, at your age, too? Martial's Epigrams, Cæsar's Commentaries. What! a classical scholar?"

"E pluribus Unum. Nux vomica. Nil desperandum. Nihil fit!" said the Boy, enthusiastically. The Philosopher gazed at the Child. A strange presence seemed to transfuse and possess him. Over the brow of the Boy glittered the pale nimbus of the Student.

"Ah, and Schiller's Robbers, too?" queried the Philosopher.

"Das ist ausgespielt," said the Boy modestly.

"Then you have read my translation of Schiller's Ballads?" continued the Baronet, with some show of interest.

"I have, and infinitely prefer them to the original," said the Boy, with intellectual warmth. "You have shown how in Actual life we strive for a Goal we cannot reach; how in the Ideal the Goal is attainable, and there effort is victory. You have given us the Antithesis which is a key to the Remainder, and constantly balances before us the conditions of the Actual and the privileges of the Ideal."

"My very words," said the Baronet; "wonderful, wonderful," and he gazed fondly at the Italian boy, who again resumed his menial employment. Alas! the wings of the Ideal were folded. The Student had been absorbed in the Boy.

But Sir Edward's boots were blacked, and he turned to depart. Placing his hand upon the clustering tendrils that surrounded the classic nob of the infant Italian, he said softly, like a strain of distant music:

"Boy, you have done well. Love the Good. Protect the Innocent. Provide for the Indigent. Respect the Philosopher."...."Stay! Can you tell me what is The True, The Beautiful, The Innocent, The Virtuous?

"They are things that commence with a capital letter," said the Boy, promptly.

"Enough! Respect everything that commences with a capital letter! Respect Me!" and dropping a half-penny in the hand of the Boy, he departed.

The Boy gazed fixedly at the coin. A frightful and instantaneous change overspread his features. His noble brow was corrugated with baser lines of calculation. His black eye, serpent-like, glittered with suppressed passion. Dropping upon his hands and feet, he crawled to the curbstone and hissed after the retreating form of the Baronet, the single word:

'Bilk!"

BOOK II.

IN THE WORLD.

"Eleven years ago," said Sir Edward to himself, as his brougham slowly rolled him toward the Committee Room; "just eleven years ago my natural son disappeared mysteriously. I have no doubt in the world but that this little bootblack is he. His mother died in Italy. He resembles his mother very much. Perhaps I ought to provide for him. Shall I disclose myself? No! no! Better he should taste the sweets of Labor. Penury ennobles the mind and kindles the Love of the Beautiful. I will act to him, not like a Father, not like a Guardian, not like a Friend—but like a Philosopher!"

With these words, Sir Edward entered the Committee Room. His Secretary approached him. "Sir Edward, there are fears of a division in the House, and the Prime Minister has sent for you."

"I will be there," said Sir Edward, as he placed his hand on his chest and uttered a hollow cough!

No one who heard the Baronet that night, in his sarcastic and withering speech on the Drainage and Sewerage Bill, would have recognized the Lover of the Ideal and the Philosopher of the Beautiful. No one who listened to his eloquence would have dreamed of the Spartan resolution this iron man had taken in regard to the Lost Boy—his own beloved Lionel. None!

"A fine speech from Sir Edward, to-night," said Lord Billingsgate, as, arm-and-arm with the Premier, he entered his carriage.

"Yes! but how dreadfully he coughs!"

"Exactly. Dr. Bolus says his lungs are entirely gone; he breathes entirely by an effort of will, and altogether independent of pulmonary assistance."

"How strange!" and the carriage rolled away.

BOOK III.

THE DWELLER OF THE THRESHOLD.

"Adon Ai, appear! appear!"

And as the Seer spoke, the awful Presence glided out of Nothingness, and sat, sphinxlike, at the feet of the Alchemist.

"I am come!" said the Thing.

"You should say, 'I have come'—it's better grammar," said the Boy-Neophyte, thoughtfully accenting the substituted expression.

"Hush, rash Boy," said the Seer sternly. "Would you oppose your feeble knowledge to the infinite intelligence of the Unmistakable. A word, and you are lost forever."

The Boy breathed a silent prayer, and handing a sealed packet to the Seer, begged him to hand it to his father in case of his premature decease.

"You have sent for me," hissed the Presence. "Behold me, Apokatharticon—the Unpronounceable. In me all things exist that are not already co-existent. I am the Unattainable, the Intangible, the Cause and the Effect. In me observe the Brahma of Mr. Emerson; not only Brahma himself, but also the sacred musical composition rehearsed by the faithful Hindoo. I am the real Gyges. None others are genuine."

And the veiled Son of the Starbeam laid himself loosely about the room, and permeated Space generally.

"Unfathomable Mystery," said the Rosicrucian in a low, sweet voice. Brave Child with the Vitreous Optic! Thou who pervadest all things and rubbest against us without abrasion of the cuticle. I command thee, speak!"

And the misty, intangible, indefinite Presence spoke.

BOOK IV.

MYSELF.

After the events related in the last chapter, the reader will perceive that nothing was easier than to reconcile Sir Edward to his son Lionel, nor to resuscitate the beautiful Italian girl, who, it appears, was not dead, and to cause Sir Edward to marry his first and boyish love whom he had deserted. They were married in St. Georges's Hanover Square. As the bridal party stood before the altar, Sir Edward, with a sweet, sad smile, said, in quite his old manner:

"The Sublime and Beautiful are the Real; the only Ideal is the Ridiculous and Homely. Let us always remember this. Let us through life endeavor to persouify the virtues, and always begin 'em with a capital letter. Let us, whenever we can find an opportunity, deliver our sentiments in the form of round hand copies. Respect the Aged. Eschew Vulgarity. Admire Ourselves. Regard the Novelist."

Another Hay Depot Burned.—A fire was discovered about half-past five o'clock yesterday morning in Dutton's hay depot, on Stewart street a few doors south of Mission, which consumed that and the adjoining building south of it. There is evidently a hay-depot-burning monomaniac amongst us, who has been eminently successful within the last six months in destroying some eight or ten of these establishments. He is a fit subject for our detective force, and well deserves their special attention.

THEATRICAL TALK.

THE long promised dramatization of Tennyson's last and best poem was produced at Maguire's Opera House on Monday, under the title of Enoch Arden, or Under the Palm, a large audience being present. The author's aim appears to have been not to manufacture a sensation drama, but to conscientiously produce Tennyson's poem on the stage. This he has successfully accomplished. He succeeded in making the female portion of the audience and some few soft-hearted males shed many tears over the sad fate of "Enoch Arden." The piece was well played throughout. Mr. Pauncefort's "Enoch Arden" in the first two acts lacked the salt flavor necessary to the successful rendition of the character of a sailor or fisherman; but in the last act he was everything that could be desired, and astonished all by the intensity of his acting, displaying more power than those who had before seen him in light comedy characters gave him the credit of possessing. Mrs. Sophie Edwin, though laboring under a severe indisposition, to which, after struggling bravely against it for two nights, she was on the third forced to succumb, played the character of gentle "Annie Lee" with charming feeling. Mr. Charles Thorne played the difficult part of "Philip Ray" with admirable skill and nice appreciation of the author's meaning, reading Tennyson's beautiful language, which has been preserved whenever practicable, with fine effect. The character of "Job Vincent," introduced into the play to serve as a foil to the good "Enoch Arden," was most admirably played by Mr. Aldrich. "Job Vincent" hates "Philip Ray" with an intensity which renders him almost a monomaniac, in consequence of "Adam Ray," Philip's father, having married the girl with whom, when he was a young man, he was in love. Mr. Aldrich's impersonation of this old villain, who is nearly wild with fear that "Philip Ray" will, by the death of "Enoch Arden," gain "Annie" as his wife, was particularly effective, and called forth considerable applause. Mrs. Saunders, as "Miriam Lane," was, as usual, perfect, making every point in the character with consummate skill. Mr. Thayer, as "Roger Bond," who is as anxious to bring about the marriage of "Philip Ray" with "Annie Lee" as "Job Vincent" is to prevent it, played with more vim than we remember to have seen him evince on any former occasion, and made a good deal of a part which was not much in itself. Mr. Anderson, as "Adam Ray," who is only seen in the first act, made a very good, pious old man. The piece was capitally put on the stage. The vision scene, "Under the Palm," and the tableau of the family group in the mill, were extremely effective, and reflect great credit on Mr. Graves, the stage manager. Miss Sallie Hinckley was, in consequence of the illness of Mrs. Sophie Edwin, cast in the character of "Annie Lee," and considering the short time allowed her for study, filled it most creditably. The first two acts moved a little slowly, but taking it as a whole it has proved a most decided success, and is destined to become a very popular play. Mrs. Sophie Edwin having now recovered from her indisposition, she will re-appear in the character of "Annie Lee" this afternoon, when Enoch Arden will be produced for the last time, and will doubtless draw an immense house. After to-day it will be shelved for a short time, to give place to the domestic drama of Waiting for the Verdict, which has been played to overflowing audiences in almost every city of the Union and has given universal satisfaction. I may safely call it the very best and most intensely interesting play which has been produced in this city for years. The company will do it ample justice, and a dramatic revival will surely be the consequence.

Mr. Wheatleigh has been doing a good business throughout the week at the Eureka Theatre. The sensation drama of Pauline was produced during the week, but the manager returned the next night to his old love, the Colleen Bawn, thinking that its powers of draft were not yet exhausted. He proved to be right. Every night it has appeared on the bills a full house has been the consequence. On Thursday, between the Colleen Bawn and the afterpiece, Jeff Davis in Hoops, Miss Annie Yeamans made her first appearance on the California stage, and gained an enthusiastic encore of a Highland fling, which she executed with much skill and elegance, in appropriate costume. Miss Yeamans has proved that she can dance, and will in the burlesque of Columbus el Fillibustero, which is to be produced this afternoon, for the first time, in conjunction with a favorite farce, afford the public an opportunity of passing a verdict on her singing and acting. This evening a grand bill will be presented, consisting of John Brougham's national and witty burlesque of Columbus el Filibustero and the Colleen Bawn, which the public will not allow to be withdrawn even after so many nights run.

Touchstone.

The Mechanics Fair is already attracting a large share of public attention. The committee are meeting with the most propitious success in their labors, and the exhibition will fulfill the most sanguine hopes of its friends. The Fair will be opened to the public on the 10th of August next,

SCRAGGINESS.

MR. BANTING's attack on corpulence ought after its first success to have been followed by another on scragginess, and we have always wondered why it was not. More people, we imagine, wish to be fatter than wish they could diminish their fat. It is true the desire is more closely confined to women, men being tolerant of leanness in themselves, apt to believe indeed, in spite of scores of examples, that want of flesh increases the appearance of intellect. Pallor and thinness are in fact nearly as much cultivated among certain classes as white hands and general listlessness, and mainly for the same reason—that they show their possessor has neither necessity nor inclination to do anything useful, that he is a hothouse plant, and not an ear of grain. The prefereuce among men for sallowness over color, sharp lines over roundness, attenuation over muscular development, is one of the oddest results of a civilization which does not profess to be ascetic. It is passing away we believe, under the healthier mode of life, but ten years ago robust health was considered obtrusive, strength decidedly low, and a high color the first mark of an utter plebeian, and the influence of those ideas lingers in drawing-rooms still. Women, however, have never fallen into them for themselves, have always by instinct preferred soft outlines and changing color, have been ashamed of the obtrusiveness of their bones, aud have tried hard to keep their faces from falling in. A charge of leanness is nearly the worst charge a woman can bring against herself, and the highest art of the milliner is exerted to soften off the harsh lines which in men are admired, to give the fullness and roundness of contour male coqnettes so carefully avoid. The true priuciples of beauty are the same in both cases, but civilization has not iu women corrupted natural taste, and no woman was ever proud of sunk cheeks or hollow eyes, or bony arms, or a figure without inflexions. The differeuce of feeling has even affected the language, and the word "scragginess" as a contemptuous epithet is as much confiued to women as the word "buxom" is, aud is at least as much dreaded by them as an accusation of corpulence is by men. It is held to indicate age, and while men care nothing about their ages, women very justifiably do care, being well aware that the other sex, with their habitual tendency to the evil, prefer the beauté de diable, the spell of youth and freshness, to almost any other. There must be hundreds of thousands iu this country, where the climate softens nothing and dress is specially adapted to make leanness ridiculous, who would endure any course of diet, abstain from any indulgence, to put more flesh on their bones, yet no Dr. Harvey or philauthropic undertaker steps forward on their behalf. Brillat Savarin, who taught Mr. Banting so much on the art of reducing flesh, gives only a page or two to that of increasing it, and though his theories are sound, he misses what physicians believe to be the great panacea.

Fattening, too, would seem from analogy to be easier work than reducing fat. All domestic animals in health can be fattened, and there is not a farmer in the country who does not think that he understands to perfection the great art of produciug flesh. Skilled breeders will fatten a bullock, or a pig, or a sheep to a pound, but they would only laugh if told that they could also fatten their daughters. Yet the only differeuce in favor of the beast is that it is not bothered with a mind, cannot worry itself about papa's displeasure, or dear Charles' inattention, or the blunder it had made in selecting "ruching" a little too bright. By the way, cattle must have some theory of good taste in color, or they would not be so vehemeutly irritated with the sight of red, and it would be a curious experiment to ascertain what that theory is. Have they by nature that love for sobered brightness, that dislike to all things "so very conspicuous," which cultivation gives to most human beings, or are particular colors signs to them, as they are to the Pope, of a hostile bravado? The mind no doubt is a nuisance which physicians find it hard to deal with, but still all scraggy girls are not scraggy because they have got, as Lord Westbury says, "what they are pleased to call minds," and the very large remainder ought to be just as amenable to the influence of good feeding as lambs, or cattle, or turkeys. Of course there are women who cannot be fattened, even when their minds are at rest; just as there are others who under the fiercest load of anxiety still accumulate fat. The majority, however, if not ill, or consumptive, or preternaturally active, or feverishly eager about affairs, must be capable, like all other domestic animals, of being fed into decent embonpoint. The only question is as to the regimen which will accomplish the end, without too much annoyance, or disturbance of the domestic economy, or risk of producing habitual and excessive laziness. * * Milk is of all things the great fattener, and it would seem probable from the African evidence that it is one of the very few articles of diet the effect of which is not perceptibly diminished by the dislike of the drinker. So long as it can be kept down at all it will fatten, and in the African states it is often administered by force through a horn, just as a horse is drenched. The rest of the diet matters little—except that acids must be avoided, that bread should be the staple, and that sweet things are beneficial—for milk in large quantities is sufficient with this other rule. Never begin to employ yourself particularly with mental work the moment you have done eating, a rule strictly fixed by nature, and violated in the most injurious way in half the girls' schools in this country. Digestion cannot go on properly if the brain and the stomach want the aid of the heart at the same moment; and the girl who sits down to an exercise the moment her dinner is doue, is simply laying up for herself a rich store of dyspepsia. With plenty of milk and arrowroot or other starchy meal, tolerable air, and nine hours' sleep at night, the girl who remains scraggy may be fairly suspected either of a bad constitution or an uuquiet mind.

HINTS UPON AIR.

THE air that a man has once passed through his lungs would almost immediately suffocate him if he could get no other.

Besides carbonic acid, the lungs expel much moisture laden with various impurities, some of which are more readily detected by their odor than by chemical tests, and others, the miasmas of contagious fevers, are known only by their sad results. Every person blessed, or afflicted, in whichever light it may be considered, with a sensitive organization, is painfully conscious of the common offensiveness of the human breath. Decaying teeth, overloaded or disordered stomachs, unhealthy lungs, tobacco smoked, or, worse, chewed, and other causes, smoke controllable and some not, contribute to the contamination of exhaled air.

Nor are the exhalations from the lungs the only cause of the personal contamination of the air. A no less constant cause in all cases, and much greater cause with those who do not pay particular attention to cleanliness, is the exhalation from the body. The lungs of a healthy man give forth, at ordinary temperature, from sixteen to twenty ounces of moisture in twenty-four hours; of this three one-thousandths are solid animal matter, in a state of decomposition. From the skin pores of a healthy man are given out fifty per cent. more vapor, with, probably, a greater proportion of animal matter. Carpenter estimates this at one hundred grains in twenty-four hours. But, of offeusive effluvia which caunot be measured or weighed, our sense of smell teaches us that the feet, the arm-pits and other portions of the body, are much more prolific than the lungs. Oftentimes the air of an apartment becomes intolerable to sensitive organs, from the feet of a single person. There is a remarkable difference in individuals in this respect; the effluvia of some, with the utmost care, being a severe infliction on themselves and their neighbors. The effect is much increased with the excess of perspiration induced by heat or exercise, and in a crowded room, without rapid change of air, it becomes almost iusupportable.

To these causes of contamination is added what is contained in the clothing. Woolen cloth is a great receptacle of impurities gathered from the various effluvia to which it is subjected. It is hardly possible to rid it of the smell of a barn or stable, or of any other foul atmosphere in which it may have been exposed, even for a short time. Shoe leather, too, is an unfortunate absorbent, not only of the effluvia of the feet, but of the rank oils often used in its manufacture, of the strong-smelling blacking with which it is dressed, and of the filth through which it has often to pass. These various impurities, added to the partial and offensive decomposition of the animal substance of leather, and woollen cloth, make them prolific means of the contamiuation of the air, especially in heat after exposure to wet.

All these impurities are matter in a state of decomposition. If collected on the surface of water, as they pass out of a room, they form a putrescent, bubbling scum, like that of a cesspool, with an intolerable stench. For they are mostly particles of animal substance thrown off in a state of partial decomposition; and their decomposition is completed with great rapidity in their attenuated gaseous or vaporous condition. The odor of fruit—of apples or strawberries, for example—is agreeable when it first leaves the fruit; but if confined a single night in a box or cupboard, every one knows how rotteu and offensive the smell become, even when the fruit itself remains quite sound. If this is the case with vegetable exhalations, what must it be with the exhalations of animal substance, the decay of which is so rapid and so pestiferous?

A STRANG custom prevails in the northern districts of Bohemia. Every betrothed bride, however rich she may be, is obliged to go and beg in the neighboring villages for the feathers necessary to make her bed. She goes on these perigrinations, which sometimes last several days, in full dress, and accompanied by a poor woman. Every one gives her a friendly reception, and she always carries back an ample provision of feathers.

DR. ADAM CLARK, who had a strong aversion to pork, was called upon to say grace at a dinner, where the principal dish was a roast pig. He is reported to have said: "O Lord, if thou canst bless under the Gospel what thou didst curse under the Law, bless this pig."

A YOUTHFUL MARRIAGE.—A curious illustration, copied by permission from the papers at Vale Royal, the seat of Lord Delamere, has lately been published:

When Lady Essex Cholmondeley's sister, Lady Londonderry, died, Lady Essex had under her care Lady Londonderry's only daughter, Lady Lucy Pitt. Lady Essex's daughter, Miss Cholmondeley, and her cousin were educated together with great strictness and exactness, almost amounting to severity. When the family where at Vale Royal, the young ladies were only allowed to walk up and down about a quarter of a mile, Lady Essex Cholmoudeley placing herself at a window to watch them. They were to walk perfectly erect, and never to speak. Lady Essex Cholmondeley had a house in Loudon, near the parks. One day the two girls stayed out rather late, and as they passed by Lady Lucy's uncle, he said, "What will Lady Essex say to your being out so late?" The poor frightened girls at that moment met two Westminster boys whom they were acquainted with, the Meyricks, brothers, of Bodorgan, in the island of Anglesea, the eldest heir to an immense estate and a beautiful place. The boys proposed that they should set off immediately for the Fleet, and be married, and take the maid servant who was then walking with the young ladies, and then all sail directly over to France.

They agreed to go, but Lady Lucy Pitt said she could not possibly go without a little figure of dog, a toy that, when pressed down, the dog barked; and Miss Cholmondeley said that she must take with her a beautiful little bird, which opened the door of the cage, hopped out and sang. So childish were the girls that they returned home solely to get these things. On their arrival at the fleet, they did not delay a moment, but sent for a clergyman, and they all went to church—Lady Lucy Pitt not quite 14 years old, and Miss Cholmondeley only 13. The clergyman demurred about marrying Lady Lucy, she was so very little, and in a frock, and both perfect children in all respects. However, they put the maid servant's gown on Lady Lucy Pitt, and she was married to the eldest Mr. Meyrick, aud Miss Cholmondeley to his brother. They were stepping into the vessel to sail away, when they were all seized by Lady Essex Cholmondeley and her party. The boys were sent abroad, and the girls carried back to London, severely reprimanded and locked up. If the clergyman had not delayed in regard to Lady Lucy, the parties would have sailed for France. This extraordinary affair was the cause of the Marriage Act, the two young married couples being of such high rank, and having immense property. Some years afterward the marriages were solemnized properly in England, with the consent of all the relations and friends.

"HOW A TEACHER SHOULD BEHAVE TOWARDS HIS CLASS." Under this title, the California Teacher for July, publishes a contribution, from which we extract the following sensible remarks:

"One thing which it seems well to guard against, is the use of baby talk in our intercourse with those we pretend to teach. Dr. Hooker has undoubtedly the right of the matter, when he says that there is little difference between explaining a thing to a young person and to one older. Each must have clearness of statement, yet with nothing forced or infantile about it. Children are Saxons in their ways and words—apt to call an ox an ox, whether the animal is alive or dead. Bayard Taylor says that a man in a strange land will be more easily understood if he make known his wants in straightforward English, rather than in that broken English which results from an attempt to squeeze his mother tongue into the idioms of a foreign one. Especially this needs to be borne in mind when fulfilling that part of the course called "moral instruction." Unhealthy anecdotes which observation directly contradicts are sure to be found out, and treated as humbugs. I think every schoolboy can well appreciate the morality of "Tom Brown's School-Days at Rugby;" but I am not so certain about that cherry-tree report concerniug Washington, or of the story of some boy who gave a penny to a poor woman, aud (hence) died the richest man in his neighborhood. It seems to me that the foundation of all juvenile morality is the Golden Rule; or, in other words, fair play. If I prophesy a dungeon to a boy, because he threw a piece of chalk across the room, ten to one he will despise the absurd misjoinder of the offence and its consequence; but tell him it is mean to cheat his mother, who works to keep him at school, by playing while she is working, and he will be more likely to respect the reproof."

"Bad humor, and detention after school, and scolding and whipping, are weak to break up bad habits, compared with kindness—just as earthquakes and tornadoes, Nature's ruffians, cannot do a tithe of the pulling down that the sunshine does. And then, kindness is a monitor, which goes wherever the boy goes—powerful in the dark as well as in the light; and instead of producing only propriety in actions, changes the disposition, and makes him better at heart as well as in appearance. The great consoling fact is, that no boy can be persistently mean or malicious, for persistency of any kind implies thoughtfulness and self-control; and if he had these he would not be a boy any more, but an old man. So when he is idle, or restless, or rude, it is not ugliness—he means nothing by it; and no doubt, the worst of boys sincerely wonders once in a while, why it is so easy for some of his class-mates to behave well all the term, and for him so hard to be steady for one forenoon."

ESCAPE FROM INDIANS.

ON tbe 27tb of Marcb, 1780, Thomas Bennet, and his son Andrew, a lad about fourteen years of age, were engaged in ploughing on the flats in eastern Pennsylvania. They had brought their guns with them for the purpose of shooting some wild fowl on the river; and, after huuting for a whi'e, concealed tbem and commenced work. Duriug this proceeding they had been watebed by four Indians, wbo crept up to where their pieces were concealed and broke them. They then sprang upon the man and boy, and instantly hurried them away into the woods.

It so happened that, on this same morning, Lebbens Hammond bad left Wilkesbarre in search of a horse tbat bad strayed away. He found him a few miles up the river, on tbe western side; and, improvising a bridle, was proceeding leisurely homeward wben be discovered moccasiu tracks. He was excessively alarmed, and was at a loss what to do under the circumstances; but, while deliberating, two Indians sprang from the bushes, and while one seized his animal the otber pulled him off. After a brief consultation between the two savages, tbey led Hammond into the wood and pinioned him to a tree. In this situation he was left about an hour, when they returned with the four who held Beunet and his son as prisoners.

An Indian mounted Hammond's horse, but when they reached a marsh he drove bim into it and there left him. They now made all haste, camping the first night near the foot of "Cumming's Pond," in what is now Northmoreland.

It should be remarked that both Bennet and Hammond were noted patriots, the latter having made an almost miraculous escape, some time before, from that tigress Queen Esther, or Katherine-Montour. Tbe Indians could not have been aware of this or they would not bave allowed them to remain unbound on the first night of their encampment.

Bennet proposed to his companion in the night that tbey should attempt to escape, but the latter advised against it. It was hardly possible they could sueceed, aud failure was certain deatb. Bennet remarked that death was before them if they remained much longer in the hands of their captors, but Hammond had more hope, and the project, for the present, was abandoned.

The next day Bowman's Creek was reached. Althougb they had been engaged in plowing when they came into the woods, they found the snow very deep. This made the traveling very laborious, especially to Bennet, who was quite an aged man.

Cold and chilly in the woods, with the snow fragile and crusted; wet, thawing, aud muddy in the open spaces, it could not have been more disagreeable. Merey, however, is a trait that rarely distinguishes the North American Indian, and our friends were urged on, with hardly a moment's rest. Towards tbe close of the day the party came upon a company of savages, numbering forty, who were commanded by a Tory. An old Indian, who recognized Bennet, called out, "Ah, old Bennet, I'd rather see your scalp."

Quite a lengthy delay now took place, during which one of the savages blackened his face, and directing the attention of Bennet, said, "Ho! Bennet!"

This meant nothing more or less than that the prisoner was to be burnt to death at the stake, and all three of the captives fully understood its siguificance.

Fiually the two parties separated, one from the larger joining tbe smaller, so tbat the latter uumbered seven. Now tbat they had become aware of the character of their prisoners they guarded them with more care. At night they were pappoosed—that is fastened down by poles laid aeross them, with an Indian upon either end. From this it will be seen that there was little prospect of escape, as the slightest movement was sure to disturb the savages, whose slumber is proverbially as light as that of the wild animal. Under such cricumstanees the three whites were ready to give up in despair aud die. Moody and silent they stretched themselves upon the ground and lay through the long still bours of the night, looking up at the stars overhead, and communing with the only Being whose pitying eye saw their dire extremity. Now and then they exchanged a word with each other, but that was all. There was no disposition to talk. Each believed that eternity was near—very near—and what had they to do but to make ready for it?

The next day—the third of their captivity—Bennet accidentally pulled a buttou from his coat, which, with characteristic economy, he put in his pocket. The Indians now searched them, and the button being found, Bennet was asked what he wished to do with it.

"I saved it to put it on again," he replied.

"Fool, Bennet; only one day more. You die at Wyallusing," was the significant comment of the savage.

This was confirmation of the diabolical intentions of the Indians, and the captives aroused fully to a sense of their peril. Unless an attempt at escape were made very soon there would be no opportunity for doing so.

During the latter part of the day a deer was started, and the attention of all the Indians being centered upon it, the whites were given a chance for consultation.

Bennet remarked to Hammond, "We must try it to-night or it will be all up with us."

"It will be a great undertaking," replied Hammond, "but I suppose it is our last chance."

"They have found out who I am," added Bennet, "and I know that they intend to put me to the torture. I see no reason either for your hoping that they will spare you. We may succeed to-night aud reach our families, but if we do not it will be far better to be killed outright than to suffer tbe torment tbey have in reserve for us."

"I am with you," returned Hammond. "With God's assistanee I will do all I can."

Andrew Hammond said very little during this conversation, but he did an immense amount of thinking. He was old enough to appreciate the position of himself and father, and he was as ready as he for a "blow for liberty."

The men conversed awhile longer, and arranged their plans by the time the Indians returned with the deer. They then ceased talking, and endeavored to show, by their words and manner, that no new idea bad entered tbeir heads.

Upon reaching the Meshappen it was found so swollen witb melted snow and ice, that they had to search for a considerable time before a place was found that could be forded. Having crossed the creek, a fire was built under a shelving rock. While engaged in roasting and devouring tbe venison, the leader of the party, who spoke tolerable English, became quite communicative to Hammond. He stated that he bad expected to meet a large body of Indians at that place, but they had probably encamped further up the river. In turn the savage became very inquisitive.

"When was there to be peace?" "Were the whites anxious to make peace with the red men?"—be had heard so. "Did he know Lieutenant Boyd?"

This officer, it should be remarked, had been sent out on a reconnoissance by Gen. Sullivan, in Genesee, some months before, and while thus engaged was surrounded by a superior force of Indians, and put to the most revolting torture.

"We led the party that took him," added the Indian, with considerable animation. "Boyd brave man—cut off fingers and toes—picked out eyes—but Boyd say nothing. Boyd brave man."

After giviug some further details of the torture of the young officer, the Indian produced a sword and remarked: "There Boyd's sword!"

Upon examination, Hammond found the lieutenant's initials stamped on the blade, yet he durst express no emotion at the horrible recital, as it would have instantly brought vengeance upon his own bead.

On tbis night, as before, our friends were pappoosed. Tbe Indians then drew their blankets over their beads and fell into a deep slumber. One of the savages only seemed to be on tbe watcb. Somewhat after midnight Bennet manifested great uneasiness, and asked permission to get up.

"Most day; lie down, dog."

But Bennet persisted that he was sick, and must get up. Abont this time all the Indians arose, and allowed tbeir prisoners to do the same. Bennet employed himself in bringing wood and throwing it upon the fire. Shortly after, all the captors were loudly snoring, except tbe same one who had refused to lie down. He engaged in roasting the head of the deer, and then scraping off and devouring the meat upon it. Soon, however, he began to nod and show a natural indifferenee to what was passing around him.

The crisis had come.

Hammond placed himself by an Indian axe, and the boy stationed himself by the guns, which were stacked. Both watched the motions of Bennet, who was stirring the brands of the fire. He had on a very long coat, and as he came near the nodding Indian he stealthily took hold of a spontoon or war spear, and, concealing it under his coat, stepped behind the savage, and concentrating his strength drove it clear through his body. With a hideous scream the Indian sprang up and fell upon his face in the fire. The spear was so immovably fixed in the body of the victim that it could not be withdrawn, and Bennet instantly caught up a tomahawk and gun.

The Indian who had tortured Lieutenant Boyd was the first one to awake and give the alarm. He had hardly time to utter his warning yell when Hammond clove his skull with the axe. The second tremendous sweep of this terrible instrument crashed upon the bead of another, and he, too, fell upon the fire.

While this was occurring the boy had snapped three guns, none of which were loaded, but which seemed to distract and frighten tbe savages, so that they fell a more easy prey to the two men, who were dealing their fatal blows right and left.

A stalwart Indian made a rush at the boy with the intention of securing the weapon, when the brave little fellow swung it aloft, and brought it down with such force that the savage was speedily placed hors du combat.

There were now only two Indians remaining alive, who instantly took to their heels, when Bennett, who could throw a tomahawk with extraordinary precision, hurled it with all the skill and power at his command, and it struck one of the fugitives square in the back, who, with a horrid yell, sprang in the air, dropped his blanket and continued his flight almost naked.

The whites immediately supplied themselves with the moccasins, guns and ammunition of the Indians, and set out upon tbeir return home. The two wounded savages concealed themselves some distance away, and when they had departed, returned to the fire to see whether there was anything remaining that would keep them from freezing or starvation.

Our friends were yet in a hostile country, and from what bad been said by one of their captors, they bad reason to fear there was a large body of Indians close at hand. Tbey made their calculations, and set out for home in as nearly a straight line as it was possible. The Meshappen was crossed with great difficulty, and they suffered greatly from the cold; but, after an absence of six days they finally reached their homes, where tbey were received with tbe greatest rejoicing, as they bad been given up for dead by their friends.

Seven years later, at an Indian treaty in Newtown, Hammond observed an old Indian who had been badly wounded in the back, and who was walking with his head bowed. He thought he recognized him, and the reason was asked why he stooped so much.

"A Yankee tomahawk me at Wyoming," was the ready reply.

The miserable being dragged out a few years longer, and then fell down a foot bridge, in crossing the Camisteo, and was drowned.

A QUEER WAY.

THERE are some queer ways of getting out of this world in a sudden and effectual manner. Drowning used to be considered as a bigbly genteel method when the temperanee fever was at its height, but the natural disgust the majority of people now entertain toward tbe aqueous fluid has compelled suicide into another channel. The suddeu injection into the skull, heart or lungs, of a pellet of lead from the barrel of a pistol once met with favor, and still, in France, runs a very strong opposition to the charcoal suffocation business. But being singed with saltpetre and brimstone—being, as it were, blown out of the world, and dying with the sound of an explosion in the ears, as well as the chances after death of presenting an exceedingly unseemly appearance as a corpse—bas put a limit to the pistol, shotgun and rifle felo de se. Poisoning bad its day, and was particularly in vogue among defaulting disciples of Swartwout, despairing lovers, and unsuccessful bankers, but science has brought antidotal remedies to such perfection, and every physician is certain to be supplied with a stomach pump in his pocket, that poisoning is pronounced a failure. Stryebnine is a failure. It is too quick; besides, it is excessively vulgar, and is fit only to do away with cats, and unruly dogs which insist upon baying at tbe moon at unseasonable hours.

We remember to have read in an English journal some time since, of a fellow who, being thoroughly disgusted with life in general, and a coquettish bar-maid in particular, resolved to depart from this mundane sphere in a style peculiarly novel. He purchased a six-pounder, hauled it into the rear of the house in which he lodged, loaded it with a "ball cartridge," applied a slow match, and then placed himself at the muzzle. He is said to have been killed "very dead."

Jumping from the tops of monuments and shot towers is very unpopular, and is rarely adopted. There is too much time for thinking in climbing up; and moreover, the would-be suicide, upon arriving at the summit of a pile of granite, like that at Bunker Hill, is too tired to exert himself any further. Butting the brains out against a brick wall is painful, and involves too many preliminary visions of stars to suit a refined mortal, not especially addicted to the study of astronomy. Of late hanging has come in vogue. The rope's end and life's end are found to be capable of splicing. It is on record that a sailor resolved on suicide, and having a hatred of doing the thing himself, so arranged as to involve an innocent but hungry shark in the crime. He formed one end of a long rope into a "slip noose," and put it round his neck. To the other end he attached a hook, which he baited with a chunk of beef, and threw it over the gunwale of the ship, upon which he had seated himself. He hadn't long to wait. A white shark came along, nabbed the bait, and started, jerking the poor sailor off before he could say "Jack Robinson." The last queer way of committing suicide is that adopted by Mrs. Mina Zehr, who, having quarreled with her husband, as to the possession of twelve dollars, very deliberately went to to the top of the house and hung herself on the "clothes line," using one of the clothes-pins in such a manner as to give it an appearance of being useful in the hanging-out-to-dry process.

What weak-minded mortals folks are, who can't live on and endure uncomplainingly the misfortunes, the ills and evils of life, and so win the regard and admiration, the sympathy and assistance, which sooner or later would be theirs as a recompense for their heroism, rather than kill themselves, and thus outrage the laws of God, and shock their fellow-men with their folly.

NEW BOOKS.

WE are indebted to A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street, for the following new books received per steamer. Notices of several were unavoidably deferred in our last issue :

Beatrice. By Julia Kavanagh. pp. 520. New York : D. Appleton & Co.

A new novel by Julia Kavanagh. The scene is partly laid in France and partly in Scotland, and the heroine is a remarkable combination of Italian and Scotch character, whose life is colored and influenced as she is alternately swayed by the peculiarities of her double nature.

A Smaller History of Rome, from the Earliest Times to the Establishment of the Empire. By Wm. Smith, LL. D. With a Continuation to A. D. 475 ; by Eugene Lawrence, A. M. New York : Harper & Bros.

This work is intended as a text book for schools. Compiled with sententious brevity and conciseness, it offers a clear and instructive history of Rome, while, as an embodiment of facts, chronologically arranged, it is likely to prove of excellent service as a book of reference.

The Fallen Angel. By Alexandre Dumas. Philadelphia : Peterson & Bros.

A very dramatic story, wherein the heroine who is a "Fallen Angel," shows herself to be a much better person than anybody but a French novelist would have imagined her to be. She cures a young married man of an attachment for her, and reconciles him to his wife, whose honor she also saves from the advances of a friend. She also obliges his mother and father to marry each other, a ceremony which had been previously omitted, owing to the mother having been the wife of another man. The curtain falls on restored morals and propitiated propriety, and, in the language of Mr. Squeers, "all is happiness and joy." The moral of the story is that an immoral French person is a much better and less dangerous individual than a moral one—an ethical statement which we remember to have met in an abstract form in one of the Reviews. The novel would make an excellent play, as the whole action takes place in a country villa—with plenty of sparkling dialogue.

Tales of a Traveller. By Washington Irving. 16mo. New York : Hurd & Houghton.

An elegant specimen of the new cabinet edition of Irving's works, from the imprint of the well known Riverside Press. Each volume is provided with a steel vignette, and in the general make up, the edition is faultless. The size, while it is well suited to the shelves of the family library, and for school libraries, is also just the thing for the traveller's bag, or for presentation, in separate volumes. The "Riverside Irving is altogether worthy of the refined and tender genius it so beautifully embalms.

Historical View of the American Revolution. By George Washington Greene. Boston : Ticknor & Fields.

The contents of this volume were originally delivered to the public as a series of twelve lectures, before the Lowell Institute. In the present publication, the author has contributed to the popular literature a volume which, to a great extent may be substituted for an extended cruise of reading on the Revolution. The theme is divided into twelve distinct topics, i. e., The Causes of the Revolution ; Its Phases ; The Congress ; Congress and the State Governments ; Finances of the Revolution ; Its Diplomacy ; Its Army ; Its Campaigns ; The Foreign Element of the Revolution ; Its Martyrs ; Its Literature, in Prose ; and in Poetry. An Appendix gives us a Chronological Outline of Historical Events ; Statistical Tables ; and an Address of Officers of the Southern Army to General Greene. The book is written with severely good taste, and exhibits a spirit of fairness, candor and faithfulness to truth, in relation to all events whether they be honorable or humiliating to the cause ; and contains some spirited and well executed sketches of our revolutionary sires —particularly of Franklin and Lafayette.

Graver Thoughts of a Country Parson. By the author of The Recreations of a Country Parson. Boston : Ticknor & Fields.

The first series of Graver Thoughts met with a very cordial reception from the press generally, and the present volume, which contains a second series of sermons, marked by considerable freshness, cheerfulness and sympathy, will probably meet a rapid sale. Although the sermons have not the broad, liberal and Catholic views of the Essays, and although the Rev. Mr. Boyd seems less easy and natural as a Theologian, the present volume is a vast improvement on most of the published orthodox discourses.

Histoire de Jules Cæsar. Par S. M. I. Napoleon III. Tome premier. pp. 395. New York : D. Appleton et Cie.

Readers of French will probably prefer to have the Emperor's life of Cæsar in the language in which it was originally written. The present volume is neatly and beautifully manufactured, and may be regarded as a happy specimen of the bookmaking art in this country. It is smaller in size than the English copy, and maps are inserted in the body of the work.

Life of Marcus Tullius Cicero. By Wm. Forsyth, M. A. 2 vols. New York : Charles Scribner & Co.

"For a large class of readers," says a literary authority, "Forsyth's Life of Cicero will prove a treasure. Among the first ancient biographies familiar to College youth is Middleton's Life of Cicero ; and formal and finished as that work, it has a peculiar claim for the student who is engaged upon Cicero's orations. The present memoir is written in the spirit of modern biography ; it seeks to portray the domestic and personal as well as the official life of its subject ; and difficult as this may seem in the case of a life so far removed from that of our day, the sympathetic zeal and insight of a scholar has succeeded in bringing out many authentic and characteristic facts. A wide knowledge of contemporary history, and a careful study of the correspondence of the great Roman orator, have enabled Forsyth to delineate the man in his home and among his friends with a reality and detail quite remarkable and attractive. In fact, this life of Cicero, besides being a faithful narrative of the career, and analysis of the character of Cicero, is one of the best pictures of his times, and of the Roman life of his day, which has yet appeared." In mechanical execution and binding this volume resembles the elegant Historie de Jules Cæsar of Appleton.

Fairy Fingers. A novel by Anna Cora Ritchie. New Yor : Carleton.

After a long interval Mrs. Anna Cora Ritchie (late Mrs. Mowatt) has brought forward a new work. The scene is laid in France, where the author is now residing, and where her quick perceptive qualities have enabled her to catch many of the peculiarities and habits of the people, which she has very cleverly portrayed in this volume. The story is interesting.

Superior Fishing. By Robert B. Roosevelt. New York : Carleton.

The author of this work is the President of the New York Sportsman's Club. There are some wonderful stories of trout-fishing contained in this volume and occasional bits of scenery about Lake Superior, intended to agreeably relieve the sporting talk. Full directions for dressing flies are also given, and other instructions of value to anglers and sportsmen. The style is exceedingly clever and entertaining.

A Youth's History of the Rebellion, from the Capture of Roanoke Island to the Battle of Murfreesboro'. By Wm. M. Thayer, author of the Pioneer Boy, etc. pp. 366. Boston : Walker, Fuller & Co.

Mr. Thayer is the author of the Pioneer Boy, and in this last book he has given us a mild history of the rebellion, as ostensibly delivered to a group of children by a dreadfully long winded and stupidly tedious individual, who is called "Uncle William." Why Mr. Thayer should shove the burden of the historian upon this old man's shoulders, and why he should make him babble of facts which Mr. Thayer had himself carefully collected, we cannot conceive, nor do we believe that this form of dialogue, interrupted only by such brilliant remarks as, "How barbarous !" "What a pity !" and "Dear me !" from the children, tends particularly to insinuate instruction in the youthful mind.

The Ideal Attained, being the story of two steadfast souls and how they won their happiness and lost it not. By Eliza W. Farnham. New York : C. M. Plumb & Co.

Mrs. Farnham is well known to Californians, and her book will attract attention, independently of the fact that some of its scenes are laid in San Francisco.

Family Failings. A novel, by the author of the Henpecked Husband, etc.

The "family failings" of this book are match-making mothers, schemers and other adjuncts of artificial society.

The Clever Woman of the Family. By the author of the Heir of Redclyffe, etc.; with twelve illustrations. New York : Appleton & Co.

A characteristic novel by Miss Yonge. Handsomely printed.

What to do with the Cold Mutton. A Book of Réchauffé's, together with many other receipts for the kitchen of a gentleman of moderate income. New York : Bunce & Huntington.

A work valuable alone from its suggestion that something beside "hash" may be made of cold mutton. Two-thirds of the volume is devoted to other recipes equally important to the housekeeper.

The Game of Croquet, its appointment and laws, with descriptive illustrations. By R. Fellow. New York : Hurd & Houghton.

From Messrs Dewey & Co., Mining and Scintific Press office we have received Wheeler and Randall's Quartz Operator's Hand Book. It is a work of great practical ability.

Life, Speeches and Services of Andrew Johnson, seventeenth President of the United States. Philadelphia : Peterson & Bros.

A cheap history of our present Chief Magistrate, with alarming sub-heads, in the style of the biographies in the National Police Gazette.

We are indebted to Messrs. H. H. Bancroft & Co. for the following :

The California Hundred, a poem. By J. Henry Rogers. San Francisco : H. H. Bancroft & Co. 1865.

At the first glance the size of Mr. Rogers' poem seems somewhat inconsistent with the subject matter, and a reflection is awakened that if so much space is given to the exploits of a hundred warriors how much would be required for a regiment. But the poet views his subject in the abstract, and introduces a romantic thread of individual history to relieve the monotony. In metrical ability the verses are remarkably good, and this quality is sustained equally throughout the whole poem.

MUSICAL MATTERS ABROAD.—The following musical on dits we find in the New York Review :

In Vienna, Dante's birthday was celebrated by a concert under the direction of the well-known song-composer, Proch. The overture to "Medea" was played, and Mlle. Artot and Signori Evérardi, Angeli, Moncini, Boccolini and Graziana sang. A symphony by Pacini, especially composed for the occasion, was also performed. This is the more surprising, as the avowed intention of the Italians, at the celebration of the Dante festival, was to make an artistic Austrian demonstration in favor of Italian unity.

Richard Wagner has composed a march, which he calls "Homage to King Ludwig II." He is going to publish the piano score of his opera, Valkyre (second part of the Niebelungen.)

The central committee of the Swiss singing societies has bought an iron portable singing hall.

In Paris, an Arab singer will soon appear, whose voice is so immense that she sings all parts for all voices. (Should this "Arab lady" perhaps be a relative of Barnum's double-voiced lady ?)

Donizetti's opera, Maria Stuarda, which was composed in 1834, and not known by anybody, has been given for the first time at the San Carlo, in Naples, with tremendous success.

EXECUTIONS AMONG THE JEWS.—The Hebrews had no executioner. When a man was guilty of homicide, the execution devolved on the next of kin, by the right of blood-revenge ; in other cases criminals were stoned by the people, the witnesses setting the example ; and when the king or chief ordered a person to be put to death, the office was performed by the person to whom the command was given ; and this was generally a person whose consideration in life bore some proportion to that of the individual to be slain. Thus, Solomon gave the commission to kill Joab, the commander-in-chief, to Benaiah, a person of so much distinction as to be himself immediately promoted to the command which the death of Joab left vacant. In fact the office even of a regular executioner is not by any means dishonorable in the East. The post of chief executioner is in most oriental courts one of honor and distinction. Thus, when there was no regular executioner, it came to be considered a post of honor to put a distinguished person to death ; and on the other hand, the death itself was honorable in proportion to the rank of the person by whom the blow was inflicted. It was the greatest dishonor to perish by the hands of a woman or a slave.

A DARING FEAT.—Some discussion having occurred in regard to the efficiency of the new patent safety cage now in operation at the Savage works, Captain Rawlings of the California Stage Company, and Captain Curtis, Superintendent of the Savage mine, have a bet of $250 that they will hoist the cage 160 feet from the bottom of the shaft, place themselves upon it and allow the cable to be cut above their heads. The time set for this performance is at 6 1-2 o'clock on the evening of the Fourth. In case the safety arrangement does not work they will have a jolly ride to the bottom of 160 feet. The ride would all be nice enough, but the sudden halt at the bottom would be rather rough. They are ready to take bets of from one to five thousand dollars that they will not drop to the bottom. The machine may be very safe, but we do not hanker to be one of the party standing on the cage when the cable is cut. Just for once the safety arrangement might fail to work.—Territorial Enterprise.

BRADBURY'S PIANOS.—In noting the premiums on pianofortes at the late State Fair, the splendid carved piano from the manufactory of Wm. B. Bradbury, exhibited by A. M. Benham & Co., took the first premium. Agents of the largest dealers in pianos at Chicago came down to exhibit some instruments at the Fair, who, on seeing this instrument on exhibition by our dealers, said it was no use, and shipped their instruments back without unpacking them.—Indianapolis Herald.

LARGE SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—John Middleton & Son will sell on Monday next at their auction rooms, Montgomery street, two doors north of California, 200 lots, most favorably situated on the line of the Market street railroad, south and west of the Willows. These lots lie directly in the pathway of the city's growth, and must therefore in a few years greatly increase in value. The property has that best of titles—United States patent—and will be sold for one half cash and one-half at a year's credit. Maps can be obtained at the sales-room.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received n monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent. per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

☞ PIANOS for sale, or rented to Schools, Concerts, and Families. Also—Repairing and Tuning.
A. KOHLER, 424 Sausome street.

☞ All persons about to purchase FURNITURE are requested to refer to the advertisement of E. Bloomingdale & Co., in this paper.

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Nothing illustrates this more forcibly than the recent fall in mining Stocks. Therefore, provide a certainty for your family in the future by insuring your life in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company—cash assets, $6,500,000.
BIGELOW & BRO., Agents,
'y30-1m Over Parrott's Bank.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establisbme in California. All descriptions of work neatly exec at low rates."
my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

J. THOMPSON & CO.,
BOOK, CARD
—AND—
JOB PRINTERS,
NO. 505 CLAY STREET,
Southwest Corner of Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

Special attention given to the correct Printing of Transcripts, Briefs and Legal BLANKS of every Description.

☞ All Work promptly Executed at the Lowest Rates.
mh25-tf

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched in the month of JULY, 1865:

JULY 18th - - - - GOLDEN CITY.

From Folsom-street Wharf, at eleven o'clock, A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
je24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

CALIFORNIA COLLEGIATE
INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG LADIES,
64, 66, 68, 70 Silver Street, San Francisco,
FOR BOARDING AND DAY PUPILS,

Will commence its next Session THURSDAY, July 6th. A few vacancies remaining, early application will be necessary for those desiring admission. Further particulars may be obtained by calling upon or addressing
MISS M. LAMMOND,
je24 1m Principal.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. jy1-5t

THE FIFTH INDUSTRIAL FAIR
OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
TO BE HELD IN THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE PAVILION,
IN AUGUST, 1865.

The MECHANICS' INSTITUTE having determined to hold their Fifth Industrial Fair during the coming season, the Executive Committee would respectfully invite all persons desirous of exhibiting Machines, Manufactures, Agricultural Implements, Horticultural Products, Minerals, Ores and Works of Art, to make application immediately, in order that the proper space may be allotted them.

The Exhibition will be opened on THURSDAY, the 10th day of August, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The general management of the Fair is entrusted to an Executive Committee, consisting of the officers of the Institute.

No contracts or agreements will be recognized, unless made by the authorized agents of this committee.

A competent person will be in attendance at the Pavilion to receive and register all goods designed for exhibition, and will receipt therefor.

Contributions of machinery and other articles that require long time to prepare for exhibition, will be received from the 15th of July to the 2d of August.

Articles for exhibition that require large space may be entered on or before the 20th day of July, and space will be allotted to the exhibitor on or before the 2d of August.

The Picture Galleries will be ready for the reception of Pictures, Embroidery, Wax and Fancy Work of all kinds on the 1st of August, when space will be allotted.

The committee will be prepared for the reception of Fruits, Flowers, Agricultural and Horticultural productions, and design to have the tables so arranged that the best display possible can be made in this department; and every effort will be made and care taken to preserve their freshness, so that exhibitors may receive full credit for their productions. Those wishing space on these tables should engage it at an early day. There will be space reserved for additions to this department during the Fair.

The several transportation companies, as on former occasions, have, with commanding liberality, consented to transport articles intended exclusively for exhibition, free of charge, and Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co., in like manner, will take charge of them.

The committee have the fullest confidence that the coming Fair will not only be the most complete and varied in its character, but will also be more attractive than any previous Exhibition of the kind on this coast.

No pains or expense will be spared to give the contributors satisfactory opportunities in the spacious Pavilion of the Institute for the display of their contributions, and to furnish whatever may be necessary to make the Fair an institution where those who frequent it may be pleased and instructed.

All articles forwarded should be labelled, "For the Industrial Fair," San Francisco.

All communications to be addressed to C. S. HIGGINS, Corresponding Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Charles M. Plum, Chairman; Josiah Moulton, James R. Deane, A. A. Snyder, W. W. Hunscom, Edward Nunan, D. A. MacDonald, C. S. Higgins, David Dwyer, H. K. Cummings, J. W. Reay; P. B. Dexter, Secretary. my27

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewstor & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
dc17 5m NEW YORK.

COMMERCIAL STEAM PRINTING HOUSE.
FRANCIS, VALENTINE & CO.,
517 CLAY and 514 COMMERCIAL STREETS.

Every description of BOOK, JOB and POSTER PRINTING done in the best style and at the lowest rates.
BOOK-BINDING and RULING done to order.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sole Agents,
je10 3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use
For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents,
je10 3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS
AND THE
BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published
EVERY SATURDAY MORNING
AT
532 MERCHANT STREET,
BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY. JOHN COLLNER. J. P. BOGARDUS.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the
BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
But also as being
THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No. 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FLOWERS! FLOWERS!!

The attention of the Public is invited to
The Floral Repository,
Of C. B. MILLER, Bush street, opposite Cosmopolitan Hotel.

Mr. MILLER keeps constantly on hand the rarest and choicest flowers that the season or the market affords, and will furnish parties or private houses with floral decorations at the shortest notice. Bouquets made to order, and sent to their destination with promptness. Mr. Miller would invite attention to some curious specimens of the Orchis family which his collection affords, and he would be pleased to have a call from all lovers of Flowers, whether they wish to purchase or not.

"HOME, SWEET HOME!"

No home of taste is complete without Aquaria, Gold Fish, Birds, Fern Cases, new and rare Plants, Bulbs and Seeds, Cut Flowers and Bouquets for Weddings, Hanging Baskets, Rustic Stands, Shells, Minerals, etc.

A long experience at the East justifies Mr. Miller in promising to please the patrons who may favor him with a trial. He will also be happy at all times to furnish those who take an interest in flowers with any information relative to their care and culture that may be desired.

MILLER'S 206 Bush street,
Opposite the Cosmopolitan, San Francisco.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
je30-3m

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

The next session commences July 18th.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1-3m REV. P. I. GREY, President.

ALLCOCK'S
POROUS PLASTERS
PAIN RELIEVING AND STRENGTHENING

THESE PLASTERS have the compactness of kid leather and the flexibility of a silk glove. They have restored the withered hand, removed the unsightly hump, cured varicose veins and external aneurisms. For all affections of the chest, weight about the diaphragm or upper portion of the bowels, in colds and coughs, for injuries of the back, for all strains or bruises, for a weak back, for nervous pains in the bowels, and other nervous affections and cramps, for heart affections—in all cases they have to be used to be properly appreciated.
THOMAS ALLCOCK & CO.,
"Brandreth Building," New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,
Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S,
San Francisco.
☞ Sold by all Druggists. de17-3m

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM
—OF—
WILD CHERRY,
A CURE FOR EVERY FORM OF
Pulmonary Complaint!
COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH, SPITTING OF BLOOD, LIVER COMPLAINT, etc., etc.

Consumption,

Which carries off more victims than any other disease, and which baffles the skill of the Physician to a greater extent than any other malady, often
YIELDS TO THIS REMEDY,
when all others prove ineffectual.
AS A MEDICINE,
Rapid in relief, soothing in effect, safe in its operation, it is
UNSURPASSED!
while as a preparation, free from noxious ingredients, poisons or minerals; uniting skill, science and medical knowledge, combining all that is valuable in the vegetable kingdom for this class of disease, it is
INCOMPARABLE!
and is entitled, merits and receives the enviable appellation of the
INVALID'S FRIEND.

Sold by all druggists and by
REDINGTON & CO.,
No. 416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf San Francisco

A NEW INVENTION!

LEWIS'S
Self-Acting Wagon Brake!

By means of this invention, the wheels of a wagon are made to lock themselves when going down hill, certainly and effectively, and are released the moment there is any strain on the horses, without attention on the part of the driver.

It is already in use in many parts of the East, and has everywhere given satisfaction.

It will lock a wheel so that it CANNOT REVOLVE, the efforts of the wheel to turn making the lock tighter.

It operates in an instant, locking or unlocking as necessary.

It needs no care and requires no exertion,

It cannot fail to work, and is easier on the team than the common brake.

Simple in its construction, and costing no more than the common lock, it gives perfect security, and a child may drive the heaviest wagon over the steepest roads.

It can be used in the same way as the common hand or foot brake: A touch on the lever will effectually lock the wheels, and
RUNAWAYS ARE IMPOSSIBLE.

State, county or shop rights for sale.

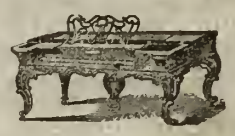
For particulars address DULL & GEORGE, San Francisco, or apply at Whitbeck's wagon factory, Market street above First. mh8 tf

LEECHES! LEECHES! LEECHES!

We are in receipt, per every steamer, of
FRESH SWEDISH LEECHES,
which we offer for sale at lower rates than ever before on this coast. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
je10 3m Corner of Pine and Sansome streets

THE BEST PIANOFORTE,

ONE THAT WILL LAST A LIFE-TIME !



WM. B. BRADBURY'S

New Scale Pianoforte

Is pronounced such by the best judges in the musical profession. They "excel all others in the essentials of a perfect Pianoforte," viz., in Tone, Touch, Power and Thorough Workmanship. Call or send for Circulars with Illustrations and Testimonials of the most eminent artists and amateurs.

WM. B. BRADBURY,
No. 427 Broome street, New York.

A. KOHLER, 620 and 622 Washington street, San Francisco, Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast. ap29-tf

---

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers

—IN—

Fine Clothing

—AND—

GENTLEMEN'S

FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, &c.,

200 & 202 Montgomery Street, Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

OVERSTOCKED!

AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

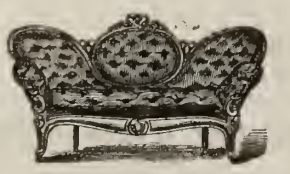
Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.



BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS

—TO—

Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company

WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO

FOR RED BLUFF,

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

o5-tf J. WHITNEY, Jr., President

FURNITURE

Closing Out at any Price!

On account of the Death of the Junior Partner of the Firm of

E. BLOOMINGDALE & CO.,

No. 518 Washington street,

WE WILL POSITIVELY UNDERSELL anybody on this Coast for the next ninety days,

CHAMBER, PARLOR AND DINING ROOM SUITES,

BEDSTEADS, BUREAUS, CHAIRS,

BEDDING, Etc.,

At Your Own Prices!

np22 3m

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, Etc.

WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
mh4-3m No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

M. H. GARLAND, & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

np22-tf

CHOICE MEAT! CHOICE MEAT!!

JOHN MOGAN,

Dealer in all kinds of American BEEF, MUTTON, VEAL, Corned Meats and Tongues, etc.,

STALL No. 37 METROPOLITAN MARKET,

(Late of Third street, corner of Sherwood Place,)

Returns thanks to his old patrons for past favors, and solicits a continuance of the same. Goods delivered Free.

ap22-tf

DR. H. A. BENTON,

Electro-Magnetic Physician,

OF NEW YORK,

Has just arrived, and opened a Suit of Rooms and Office at 109 MONTGOMERY STREET, where he will practice in a COMMON SENSE way for the cure of Chronic and Nervous Diseases. Having been engaged in the Magnetic and Electrical Appliances and Vapor Baths for eighteen years, as a specialty, declares himself well skilled in the various forms of disease and treatment, with little or no medicine. Cards and circulars, with certificates and references, will soon be in readiness. Please call at, or address, 109 Montgomery street, or Occidental Hotel. Hours, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

CALIFORNIA REFERENCES:

Wm. J. Leland, Occidental Hotel.
C. W. Kellogg, of Wells, Fargo & Co.
Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Calvary Church.
Mrs. E. L. Willis, San Jose.
I. Loveland, 211 Montgomery street.
Hon. Jas. E. Vinton, American Exchange.
Sidney Smith, Sacramento.

Address me at the Occidental Hotel, or at my Rooms.
ap15-1m H. A. BENTON.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE!

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE

Has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other preparations

FOR THE CURE OF

Scalds,
Burns, Cuts,
.. Flesh Wounds, Boils,
Chilblains, Blisters, Bruises,
Felons, Piles, Erysipelas, Ulcers,
Salt Rheum, Injuries by Splinters, Warts,
Old Sores, Ring Worm, Frost-Bitten Parts,

AND ALL CUTANEOUS DISEASES AND ERUPTIONS GENERALLY.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE

is prompt in action, removes pain at once, and reduces the most angry-looking swellings and inflammations, as if by magic—thus affording relief and a complete cure.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
416 and 418 Front street,
mh4-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

☞ PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

A BAD BREATH!

The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted! The subject is so delicate, that your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white.

PRICE, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

☞ CAUTION—None genuine unless signed "Fetridge & Co."

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
ja25-tf Agents, San Francisco.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery, cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION WATER!

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS, GRAVEL, DROPSICAL SWELLINGS, ETC.

The astonishing success which has attended this INVALUABLE Medicine, renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions in the system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, and also for

DIABETES, INDIGESTION, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, STRANGUARY CALCULUS, GRAVEL, CATARRH AND OTHER AFFECTIONS OF THE BLADDER.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases, and you will give praise to CONSTITUTION WATER!

DR. W. H. GREGG, Proprietor.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
Agents for the Pacific Coast,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
San Francisco.

Price, $1 per bottle; six for $5. Packed and sent by Express. ja25-tf

---

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW YORK FURNITURE STORE,

NOS. 727 AND 729 MARKET STREET.

We have now on hand, and are constantly receiving, a good assortment of the

NEWEST STYLES OF FURNITURE,

and of all goods usually found in our line, which we are offering at a very small profit.

To our patrons we can only say that we shall use every exertion to give perfect satisfaction. my27 3m

---

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Trusa of Elastin and unpossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

CHEAP LOTS FOR SALE.

HOMESTEAD LOTS, inside Larkin street, from $275 to $500, on long time, with interest at ten per cent. per annum, with perfect title. M. A. BRALY,
Northwest corner Front and Clay streets,
jy1-1m Up stairs

Tyler Brothers,

No. 632 Washington street, San Francisco,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we STAMP WITH INITIALS, to Order

VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, or PRINTED!

ja28-tf

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

BOOKBINDERS, PAPER-RULERS, AND

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS.

517

CLAY STREET, BET, SANSOME AND MONTGOMERY.

my27

NEW WHOLESALE STORE!

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines, Liquors, Ship Stores,

ETC., ETC., ETC.

On account of the large increase in our business we have leased the large three-story Building, Nos. 425 and 427 BATTERY STREET, near Washington street, in connection with our store on MONTGOMERY STREET, where we can furnish Families, Hotels, Restaurants Contractors, and the public generally, with the best selected Goods, at the

LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES!

In quantities to please, and delivered free of charge

BOWEN BROTHERS.

ap22-3m

PROPOSALS

FOR PUBLISHING ON STEEL

A PORTRAIT OF

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND SON.

This Picture was photographed by Brady in the White House at Washington, and is the last tho President ever sat for.

It represents President Lincoln at home with his son reading the Bible, and is pronounced by the best judges to be superior to any other ever taken. We would recommend all who desire a first-class engraving—a life-like picture of President Lincoln—to subscribe now and receive their pictures from the first impressions of the plate. Early subscribers will receive proof-sheets. We propose to furnish to subscribers a fac-simile of the card engraved on steel 10 1-2x12 1-2 inches on plate paper 19x24 inches. Price in Rosewood or Gilt Frame, 14x18 inches, $5.

☞ Sold only by Subscription.

DEWING & LAWS, General Agents,
je24-tf 511 Sacramento Street.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

JOHN HOWARD, Plaintiff;—vs. MARY HOWARD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to MARY HOWARD, Defendant:—You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

W. C. BURNETT, Plaintiff's Attorney. Office, 634 Clay street, San Francisco, (Rooms No. 20 and 21.)

ap22-3m

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

THE SAFE PATH TO HEALTH!

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

The value of Brandreth's Pills, in a climate like ours is hardly to be estimated. Their prompt use every day saves valuable lives. Always keep them in the house.

In cholics and in sudden pains of all kinds they soon give relief, and the patient is restored with renewed health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS!

For one hundred and thirteen years, have held their reputation for efficacy, mildness and absolute certainty of operation; in fact, they are admitted to be the BEST PURGATIVE by all who have used them.

THEY ARE UNRIVALLED AS A FAMILY

MEDICINE,

In Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Habitual Costiveness, Rheumatic Pains in the Head, in Affections of the Kidneys, in the Diseases of Children, and for Worms, and as a General Purifier of the Blood. For Colds, Bilious Affections, Fevers and Disorders arising from Obstructed Perspiration, so common in this climate, they have not their equals among all the Medicines of the Day.

AS A PURGATIVE AND BILIOUS PILL,

They have not their equal in the world. Employed according to directions, accompanying every box of new style, they produce

Great Purity of the Blood and System Generally.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my Private Government Stamp is on the box. See upon it "B. BRANDRETH," in white letters.

Principal office:

BRANDRETH BUILDING, New York.

W. F. BRANDRETH,

Office at CRANE & BRIGHAM'S

no26 San Francisco.

DR. LIBBEY,

WOULD RESPECTFULLY APPRISE the inhabitants of San Francisco and the community at large, that he has established himself in this city as a permanent resident, and has taken spacious rooms at No. 224 MONTGOMERY STREET, opposite the Russ House, where he will devote his particular attention to the practice of

DENTISTRY.

He will not make elaborate pretensions to any mysterious claims made by many in the profession, but flatters himself that a constant and extensive practice of nineteen years, with due attention to all improvements extant, will capacitate him to compete with any in the profession.

Teeth set in any style, or on any base desired—Gold, Platina, Silver, or Vulcanite, now much in vogue. Teeth plugged substantially with all popular materials. Teeth extracted with or without anæsthetic agencies. All professional services—Medical, Surgical or Mechanical—insured to give satisfaction, or no charge.

☞ Entrance to office, directly opposite the Russ House hall door. je10-1m

---

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES!

MRS. READ,

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET.

(OVER FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE DEPOT,)

INVITES THE ATTENTION OF THE LADIES TO HER NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest

EXPANDERS,

For Expanding the Chest, Strengthening the Lungs and Stomach, Curing the bad habit of Stooping, and Straightening Curvatures of the Spine.

This Supporter possesses more merit than perhaps any other invention, has received the unanimous approbation of those who have used them, and is actually invaluable to every lady wishing to possess

GRACE OF FORM

AND

SYMMETRY OF PERSON.

It is comfortable to the frame, and fits with a nicety never attained by any other invention.

MRS. READ also fits Supporters for HERNIA and RUPTURE, and furnishes an elegant article of

GENTLEMEN'S BRACES AND SUSPENDERS.

MRS. READ also has a beautiful style of

BUST,

Indispensable in a Lady's Toilet.

MRS. READ also has a Supporter which she can confidently recommend to Ladies suffering from prolapsus uteri. It has no equal, and is far superior to the many mechanical supporters used in such cases, fitting the form perfectly. It is free from pads and steel, and creates no irritation: gives comfort and ease, with such an amount of support it would seem impossible to do without it.

Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, or leave your orders, and Mrs Read will wait upon you at your residences.

Mrs. Read will be in attendance at her Reception Room from 8 to 11 A. M. and after 6 P. M. my27-tf

---

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

---

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

General Insurance Agency.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

THE WASHINGTON FIRE INSURANCE Company, of New York, has declared a Scrip Dividend of (60) Sixty per cent. on the Earned Premiums of Policies entitled to participate in the profits for the year ending 31st January, 1865, being the Fourth Consecutive Scrip Dividend of Sixty per cent. declared by this Company since its adoption of the Participating System. The Scrip will be ready for delivery on and after this date, at their Agency, northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco.

Also, an Interest Dividend of (6) Six per cent. on outstanding Scrip, payable 15th March, in cash.

SAFEST AND CHEAPEST SYSTEM OF INSURANCE.

WASHINGTON INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS.

CASH ASSETS, - - - - $660,000
DEPOSITED IN CALIFORNIA BONDS, - - 75,000

This company allows the insured to participate in the profits of the company. They have paid to policy holders.

Dividend 1861, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1862, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1863, - - - - - 60 per cent.
Dividend 1864, - - - - - 60 per cent.

They have paid to assured, $175,000 in Dividends. The Insuring community are respectfully invited to patronize this really first class company, and participate in the profits of the business without liability for losses.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
ap29-3m GENERAL AGENTS.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25 3m

REMOVAL.

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, $10,000,000. Accumulated Funds, January 1, 1864, $11,169,140. Deposit in California under State law, $75,000. Limit on single Risks, $100,000. Bankers, Messrs Tallant & Co. Fire Policies on buildings and contents, throughout the Pacific States and Territories, granted on the most liberal terms. Losses promptly adjusted and paid here in U. S. Gold coin.

Office removed to 414 California street, opposite Alsop & Co. WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
ja28. 44 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

THE REMEDY FOR CURING

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,

ASTHMA, CROUP,

DISEASES OF THE THROAT, BRONCHITIS,

Pains and Oppression of the Chest or Lungs,

DIFFICULT BREATHING,

AND ALL TYPE

DISEASES OF THE PULMONARY ORGANS.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC and DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known. In curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, changes the secretions and PURIFIES THE BLOOD; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive system, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts, beyond the possibility of doubt, strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction even in the most confirmed cases of Consumption. It is warranted not to produce costiveness, which is the case with most remedies, or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it, if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

DR. STEPHENS'

CELEBRATED

Eye Salve!

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY FOR

DISEASES OF THE EYE,

Acute or chronic, ulceration of the lachrymal glands, film and weakness of the vision from any cause; it is the most effectual remedy ever discovered.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery street,
au27 Corner of Clay, San Francisco.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP!

COMPOSED OF

Iodide Potassium.

With the compound Concentrated Fluid Extract of Longwort, Augusture Root, Abscess Root, Blood Root, Cancer Root, Fever Root, Canker Weed, Consumption plant, Gravel plant, Life Root, Liverwort, Nervine root, Pleurisy root, Sassafras root, Scurvy Grass root, Scrofula Plant, Rattlesnake root, Squaw root, Wa-a-hoo bark, Wintergreen, the whole scientifically prepared, and containing the full virtue of all the ingredients united in an elegant Syrup, that possesses a wonderful power in the cure of diseases.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

A positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an impure state of the Blood, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from Parent to Child.

PARALYSIS, DYSPEPSIA,
SCROFULA, RHEUMATISM,
NERVOUSNESS.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES.

And all other difficulties of the kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, and often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP!

Cures all swelling of the GLANDS either of the Face, Neck or Female Breast.

☞ As a general Blood Purifying Agent, the Life Syrup stands unrivalled by any preparation in the world.

WM. H. GREGG, M. D.,
Sole Proprietor, New York.

Laboratory, Brooklyn, L. I.

Price—$1 per bottle; six Bottles for $5.

Sent by Express to all parts of the country.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
Nos. 401 and 403 Battery, corner Clay,
ap29-tf San Francisco.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK,

—AND—

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS,

Office and Salesrooms—No. 404 Montgomery Street, Two doors from California street.

SPECIAL AND PEREMPTORY,

CREDIT SALE

OF

HOMESTEAD LOTS AT AUCTION.

MONDAY,

Monday, - - - July 17, 1865,

AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON,

200 HOMESTEAD LOTS

ON THE

LINE OF THE MARKET STREET RAILROAD.

We will sell at Auction, on easy terms, 200 Homestead Lots, situated on the line of the Market Street Railroad, south and west from the Willows.

The Property to be sold comprsome rises of the most beautifully-located Lots in that part of the city. They command a fine view, and can be improved without any expense for grading. The Lots are within fifty yards of the Market Street Railroad. The soil is good, and would make fine gardens.

Maps of this Property, showing location and full particulars, can be had at our office.

Title—United States Patent.

TERMS.—One-half cash, one-half one year at 1 per cent. per month interest, secured by mortgage.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON.
Auctioneers.

jy8-2t

NOTICE TO FAMILIES!

WE CALL THE ATtention of Hon sekeepers to our fine assortment of Provisions, Wines, Liquors, etc.:

PROVISIONS.

Coffee, roasted; Green Coffee, all kinds;
Pure Ground Coffee, Choice Teas, Cocoa,
Chocolate, Sugar, all kinds; Flour, Butter,
California Cheese, Italian Cheese, Syrup,
Lard, Barton & Gustier Oils, Olive Oil,
Possel Fils, Spice of all kinds, Pickles,
Pepper, Pepper-sauce, Mustard, all kinds,
Oysters, Lobsters, Pie Fruits, Pine Apples,
Spanish Olives, Fruits au Juis, Brandy Fruits,
Honey, Citron, Peaches, fresh and dry,
Dried Apples, Beans, all kinds, Codfish,
Corn and Oatmeal, Hams and Bacon,
Chile Negro, Maccaroni, all kiuds; Farina,
Figs, Jams and Jellies, Raisins, Mackerel,
Yeast powders, Crackers, all kinds;
Coal Oil, Castor Oil, Washing Blue,
Rice, Sardines, Starch, Washing-soda,
Soap, Candles, Clothes Pins and Lines,
Shoe Blacking, Brooms and Brushes, Baskets,
Pails and Cans, Tubs and Wringer,
Carpet Tacks, Almonds, Nuts, etc.

WINES AND LIQUORS FOR FAMILY USE.

Otard, Dupuy & Co.'s Cognac,
L. Delprat & Co.'s Cognac, Old Tom,
Sazerac Brandy, Cognac Pellevoisin,
Americau Brandy, Scotch Whisky,
Bourbon Whisky, Magnolia Whisky,
Holland Gin, Segars aud Tobacco,
Rum, Ale and Porter, in Bottles,
Port Wine, Claret Wine, French;
Claret Wine, California; Currant Wine,
White Wine, Califoruia; Ginger Wine,
White Wine, sauterne; Angelica Wine,
Malaga sweet Wine, Madeira Wine,
Muscatel Wine, Leoville Medoc Wine,
Lognac Wine, Chat. Margonx Wine,
Cherry Cordial, Champagne, Cliquot;
Champagne, Heidsiech & Co.; Wine Bitters,
Champagne, Eruest Irroy & Co., Marischino,
Champagne, green seal, Kirschenwasser,
Yermouth, Noilly Pratt & Co.; Schnapps,
Sonoma Champagne, etc., etc., etc.

All of which we offer for sale, by wholesale and retail, at the same figures to be had in first hands. Those wishing to get a

Pure Article of Ground Coffee,

Can have it ground in the mill at our store, in a few moments—Java, Mocha, Rio, and Costa Rica Coffees.

Do not mistake the number the first time you call—531 Washington, a few doors below Montgomery—and you will always know where to buy your Provisions hereafter.

Hotel and Restaurant proprietors, and families, will find it greatly to their advantage to examine our Goods and PRICES. All goods warranted, and delivered by our teams throughout the city and suburbs.

Orders from the interior solicited, and promptly filled.

B. SBARBORO & BRO.,

Importers and Dealers in Provisions, Liquors and Family Wines, No. 531 Washington street, Below Montgomery, next door below the "Examiner" Office, San Francisco. (Brick building.) jy1-3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

MR. GEORGE PAUNCEFORT,

SUPPORTED BY

THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

This Evening, July 15th, 1865,
The first night of the New Domestic Drama

WAITING FOR THE VERDICT!

Which had a run of over one hundred nights in London on its first production.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, July 15th,
FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,

The Original Drama of

ENOCH ARDEN;

OR, UNDER THE PALM.

By the Author of "Assessments," "Do You Know Jones?" etc., etc.

Enoch Arden.....Mr. Pauncefort.
Philip Ray.....Mr. Chas. Thorne, Jr.
Job Vincent.....Mr. Aldrich.
Anne Lee.....Mrs. Sophie Edwin.
Miriam Lane.....Mrs. Saunders.

New Scenery, Magnificent Tableau and Beautiful Vision Scenes.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - 50 cents
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

DRY GOODS! DRY GOODS

TAAFFE & CO.

CONTINUE TO SELL AT

Reduced Prices!

AND ARE NOW OFFERING

AT THEIR RETAIL STORE

400 pieces good 4-4 Shirtings at 20 cents;
200 pieces best 8 4 Cotton Sheetings at 55 cents;
300 pieces best 9-4 Cotton Sheetings at 60 cents;
5060 pieces best 10 4 Cotton Sheetings at 85 cents.

Also, Wamsutta, White Rock, Lonsdale, and all other kinds of Shirtings at equally low prices.

Table Damasks, Table Cloths, Towels, Napkins, Barnesley and Scotch Linen Sheetings, Lace and Muslin Curtains, etc.

BLANKETS, QUILTS,

FLANNELS, CLOTH,

CASSIMERE, CLOAKING,

MOURNING DRESS GOODS
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

10,000 yards best Merrimac Prints, at 16 cents per yard;
5,000 yards French and English Prints, yard wide, 25c.;
10,000 yards French Prints, at 30 cents.
Also, Percales, Organdies, Cambrics and Ginghams.
5,000 yards Silk and Wool Poplins, at 80 cents;
2,000 yards Empress Cloth, at 75 cents;
3,000 yards best Mohair, at 60 cents.
Also, Delaines, Merinos, Debages, Challys.

Rich Colored and Black Silks,
Of the Latest Style,
AND AT VERY REASONABE PRICES.

Shawls, Cloaks and Mantillas,
Of the Latest Paris Fashions
RECEIVED BY EVERY STEAMER.

ALEXANDRE'S BEST KID GLOVES.

500 dozen, in all colors and sizes, just received at $1 25 per pair.

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Under the Lick House.
jy15

READING FROM THE POETS.

IN COMPLIANCE WITH THE INVITATION OF CITIzens of San Francisco,

MISS ANGELA STARR KING

Will give a Select Reading from the Poets, consisting of Patriotic and Miscellaneous Pieces, at

PLATT'S HALL,

ON

TUESDAY EVENING, JULY 18TH, 1865.

TICKETS.....ONE DOLLAR.

No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

Tickets can be procured of Messrs. Roman & Co., Bancroft & Co., Tucker & Co, the principal Hotels and Box Office of the Hall.

Reserved Seats can be procured at the Box Office on and after Saturday, 15th inst., from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M.

Doors open at 7 o'clock. Reading will commence at 8 o'clock precisely. jul5-1t

WHEATLEIGH'S

EUREKA THEATRE,

Montgomery street between Pine and California.

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH.....Lessee and Manager.
JAMES DOWLING.....Stage Manager.
RALPH PHELPS.....Treasurer.

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
FOR FAMILIES!
ADMISSION, 50 cents. Children half-price.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCES TO-DAY, JULY 15TH.

First representation of Brougham's excellent Burlesque of

COLUMBUS EL FILLIBUSTERO,

AND

A POPULAR FARCE!

Saturday Evening, July 15th,
COLUMBUS EL FILLIBUSTERO,

And the great Irish sensation Drama, entitled the

COLLEEN BAWN!

In which MR. CHARLES WHEATLEIGH will personate, the roles of

MILES NA COPPALEEN
AND
DANNY MANN.

Ann Chute.....Fanny Morgan Phelps
Hardress Cregan.....Mr. F. Thorne
Kyrle Daly.....Fred Franks
Father Tom.....Geo. Mitchell
Mr. Corrigan.....J. E. Myers
Hyland Creagh.....J. Torrence, Jr.
Eily O'Connor (with song)...Miss Louise Clarkson
Mrs. Cregan.....Mrs. Judah
Shelah.....Mrs. Francis Gass

Dress Circle, $1 00; Parquette, 50 and 25 cents; Private Boxes, $5 00.

Box Office open at 10 o'clock, when Seats can be secured.

MEXICAN 10 PER CENT.
SIX YEAR LOAN.

The undersigned having a full Power of Attorney from Gen. GASPAR SANCHEZ OCHOA, Commissioner for

THE REPUBLIC OF MEXICO,

as Agent for the sale of the Bonds of this

POPULAR LOAN,

These Bonds will be sold at

FIFTY CENTS ON THE DOLLAR, GOLD COIN.

They bear date July 1st, 1865, and are now ready to be furnished in sums to suit, in denominations from $50 to $1,000. Principal and interest payable in

UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

Interest Payable Semi-Annually, at the PACIFIC BANK in the city of San Francisco.

The payment and redemption of these Bonds and Coupons are secured by the transfer to the undersigned, as Trustee, of one-half of the fiscal proceeds of

ALL THE REVENUES AND DUTIES

Derived from the Custom Houses of

MAZATLAN, GUAYMAS, MANZANILLO,

And all the Ports in the States of

SINALOA, SONORA AND COLIMA,

And from the Mines of said States,

Which Revenues and Duties, so soon as collected, are to be deposited and held by the undersigned in the PACIFIC BANK, San Francisco, and employed exclusively for the payment of said Bonds and Interest.

General Ochoa has made an assignment to the undersigned, of one-half of all the Duties received at the above Custom Houses, for the payment of said Loan and Interest, and also to appoint Agents to receive the above Revenues.

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS

Are now open at our office, Room No. 3, third floor, Masonic Building.

No. 420 Montgomery street.
SAMUEL BRANNAN,
Agent.
jy8

DEWING & LAWS.

No. 511 Sacramento street, San Francisco.

GENERAL AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC STATES,

FOR THE SALE OF

New American Cyclopedia, 16 volumes; Annual Cyclopedia, first issued in 1861, 1 volume annually; Anecdotes, 2 volumes; History of the Civil War, 2 volumes; History of the World, by Philip Smith, B. A., 8 volumes; Gems from the Dusseldorf Gallery, issued in Parts; Burton's Cyclopedia of Wit and Humor, issued in Parts; Devotional Family Bible, issued in Parts; Life of Christ, issued in Parts; Poetry and Incidents of the War, 1 volume.

The above mentioned Works are sold by our distributing agents only.

Additions of New and Standard Works are constantly being made to this list.

Young men of good character and business habits are wanted to act as Agents. Agents wanted in every County in California, Oregon and Nevada.

DEWING & LAWS,
511 Sacramento street,
San Francisco, Cal.
je24-tf

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

BY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the

SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency or are convertible, at the option of the holder, into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT.

GOLD BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are now worth a premium of nine per cent. including gold interest from November, which makes the actual profit on the 7 30 loan at current rates, including interest, about ten per cent. per annum, besides its EXEMPTION FROM STATE AND MUNICIPAL TAXATION, WHICH ADDS FROM ONE TO THREE PER CENT. MORE, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency, semi-annually, by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One cent.	per day on a	$50 note.
Two cents	"	$100 "
Ten "	"	$500 "
20 "	"	$1,000 "
$1 "	"	$5,000 "

Notes of all denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions. This is

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the great

Popular Loan of the People.

Less than $300,000,000 of the loan authorized by the last Congress, are now on the market.

This amount, at the rate of which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has now formly been the case on closing the subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the loan, the National Bank, State Banks, and Private Bankers through out the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.
March 25, 1865. ap29-3m

ADDENDUM.

Per Overland Telegraph:

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1865.

Second Series all sold. Commenced on Third Series. Two hundred and thirty millions (230,000,000) precisely like other two series, except dated 15th July, and Government reserves the right to pay six per cent. in gold instead of 7-30 currency.

JAY COOKE,
my27 Subscription Agent, Philadelphia.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission as follows:

Between the hours of 8:20 A. M. and 6 P. M., every 40 minutes, instead of, as heretofore, every 30 minutes, thus

FROM THE MISSION.

9:40	10:20	11:00	11:40

FROM THE CITY

10:00	10:40	11:20	12:00

And so on till 6 o'clock.

Before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., the running will be the same as before.

my25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES.

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.—Every Machine sold is warranted to give entire satisfaction. If there are any within one thousand miles of this office that are not working well, the owners will please inform me, and they will be attended to without expense to them.

Instruction given free, whether the persons intend to purchase or not.

SAMUEL HILL,
AGENT.
jy15-3m

A PLEASANT HOME

CAN BE OBTAINED FOR A FEW CHILDREN,

WHO WILL BE

WELL CARED FOR IN EVERY RESPECT.

References given and required. Address MRS. SHARP, at the office of this paper. jy15 4t

THE CALIFORNIAN is published by A. A. Stickney, John Collnor, and J. P. Bogardus

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME III., No 9.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 22, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE ARTICLES:
- Scandal Loving.—By "Vago"
- Under the Weather.—By "Bret."
- Exotic Plants.—By "Iris."
- Let every Shoemaker stick to his Last.—By "Fabius."
- The Hibernian Drama.
- Unlawful Cures.
- A Modern Ghost.
- An Australian Adventure.
- Tonssennel on the Dog.
- Servants.
- Interior Items.

EDITORIALS:
- "An Anti-Slavery Dictionary."
- Mountain Imagery.
- The Shenandoah.
- Musical Matters.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

POETRY:
- Arcadia Revisited.—By "Bret."
- The Changeling.

THEATRICAL TALK:
- The Theatrical Events of the Week, and Announcements.

THE MOUSE-TRAP:
- Baited with Tempting Tit-bits. [By "Trem."

ONLY A CLOD—Miss Braddon's New Novel, Chapters XXXVII, XXXVIII, XXXIX and XL.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE MOUSE-TRAP.

"We that have free souls, it touches us not."
HAMLET—Act III, Scene 2.

IT is comforting to observe that the Government is not unmindful of the interests of this coast. We read in the telegraphic despatches:

"The Navy Department has resolved to send an iron-clad gunboat of the Monadnock pattern to the Pacific coast, but has not decided which one of four shall go."

We hope the "Monadnock pattern" is a pretty pattern, and that we shall get the best iron-clad of the four. In the meantime, the Cyane, St. Mary's, Saginaw, Saranac, Lancaster and Wateree are enjoying a pleasant summer cruise down South, and the pirate Shenandoah is up North gobbling up whalers by dozens and striking oil in large quantities. We fancy that the whalers would be very thankful to have one out of the half dozen U. S. vessels on this coast to protect them while they are prosecuting their labors, and would not be at all particular about the pattern. The Bulletin yells at the British Government for having allowed the Shenandoah to leave. "If the British Government had done its duty," itexclaims with a whimper "that Shenandoah wouldn't be up North at this moment, destroying our whalers, so she wouldn't, it's a shame, that it is." Bah! The Bulletin instead of whining like a sick bulldog, and rabidly snapping at the British Government, had far better confess that the naval department of this coast in not taking measures for the protection of the Arctic whalers, when they heard the Shenandoah was steering its course towards the whaling grounds, were guilty of neglect, and that they had best make up for it by dispatching the whole Pacific squadron in pursuit of the pirate, catch her, and string up the captain before she seizes a treasure steamer, and thus gives the Bulletin an opportunity of writing another pitiful editorial on the perfidious conduct of England. We in California are the people who are least of any in the world addicted to crying over spilt milk. If John Bull owes Uncle Sam a bill it will doubtless be paid; it is the business of the people at Washington to see that it is; our business is to catch the Shenandoah. We have not had a great deal to do with breaking the back-bone of the rebellion, but we can surely be trusted to finish up the tail end of it which is now feebly wriggling on the coast of the Pacific, unaware that the rest of it is lying very dead on the Atlantic side.

THE Alta's localitems says: "We would advise the great pianist, previous to his departure for South America via Panama, to give one or two entertainments at Platt's Hall." Why is "the great pianist" advised to give concerts in dull, dreary Platt's Hall, which is pervaded with noxious effluvia suggestive of an old graveyard adjacent, in preference to continuing to occupy the Academy of Music, the most beautiful little theatre in the United States, the fashionable resort of San Francisco, where the dress-circle, filled with bright costumes and brilliant head-dresses, presents the appearance of a beauteous bed of flowers? There are mysteries connected with the local columns of a daily newspaper which it befits us not to make public. No sweet puff can, however, purify Platt's Hall; the "great pianist" gives his concluding concerts where he gave his first, and localitems' good word for Platt's odorous Hall was spoken in vain; the "smiles" of its proprietor have been thrown away.

IN a list of books recently published, we observe "A Youth's History of the Rebellion, from the Capture of Roanoke Island to the Battle of Murfreesboro, by William M. Thayer." The author is, no doubt, qualified to write on the rebellion, as he was Thayer, where, and at the time that, it took place.

THE editor of the Sunday Mercury warns a lady correspondent, who is wooed by a literary man, against having anything to do with him unless she finds "that he gets more than a postage stamp a line" for his writings, which the editor of the Mercury states is the price usually paid for literary productions. The editor is competent to speak concerning the rate of compensation allowed the writers on the paper of which he is proprietor, and we have no reason to suppose that, as far as that paper is concerned, he has misled his correspondent. There are papers, however, in California—Californian papers—which can afford to present their readers with literary matter which is paid for at the rate of a good many postage stamps per line; these are not made up of pickings and stealings from Eastern publications, with an occasional contribution from some unfortunate afflicted with cacæthes scribendi, for which the proprietors pay just what it is worth—nothing. In California, after a man has wasted a few years in writing for newspapers without compensation, he generally has sufficient sense to turn his attention to some other branch of industry; there are, however, exceptions to this rule, men whom experience teaches nothing, who live on, year after year, sustained by the hope that some day their literary wares will assume a market value. They devoutly believe in the efficacy of advertising; they think that if once or twice every week during seven or eight years "Lines by Horatio Flaccus Dobbins," appear in the poet's corner of the Trumpet of Freedom, in the end their genius must be recognized. They wait, oh how patiently they wait! but alas, Horatio Flaccus Dobbins goes to the grave, a neglected, unappreciated genius, having served no useful purpose save acting as a trial to his friends and acquaintances, as severe as the worst of those by which the Patriarch Job was afflicted. Job's biggest boil would have been as nothing, had one of his comforters been a "neglected genius," and each day he paid him a visit read to him "a little thing he had just written." How is it that ambitious young sign painters do not paint signs for nothing and present them to storekeepers on condition that they hang them up with the name of the artist attached to them? They never do it; we don't know why, but they don't. As the proprietor of the Mercury has published a statement, which, if generally true as regards the literary papers of this State, would reflect great discredit on them, we must state that however true this assertion may be with reference to the rate of compensation allowed the Mercury's contributor, the expense incurred by the publishers of most newspapers on account of literary labor amounts to an important item, and the postage stamp rate of payment stamps the matter procured on such terms as being worth less than is paid for it, that is —nothing. That "answer to a correspondent" was a very neat move on the part of the editor of the Mercury to "hear" literary stock, but it has not had, nor will it have, any perceptible effect on the market, as the editor will find to his cost, if he attempts to buy.

IN the account of the execution of the conspirators, received by telegraph; we read that just before the fall of the drop: "One of the clergymen, standing near, exclaimed, 'May we all meet in the other world.'" The name of the revereud gentleman who gave vent to this remarkably charitable exclamation, should have been mentioned. It was not Parson Brownlow, we may be pretty sure. In these days when envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness are rife, such a wish as this, uttered by a clergyman, is positively refreshing. There was no qualification—he simply wished that they might all meet in the other world. If Mr. Jefferson Davis should be unfortunate enough to be placed in a similar position to that of the unhappy criminals who have just expiated their crime on the scaffold, we recommend him to engage the services of this charitable clergyman in his last moments, for he is assuredly one in a thousand. We do not believe that the gifted Beecher could, grasping Mr. Davis by the hand, as he stood on the drop, say, "May we meet in the next world;" as to Parson Brownlow he would devoutly pray that he might not meet Mr. Davis in the next world without troubling his mind with a thought about the direction the soul of Mr. Davis would take when released from his body.

THE Flag, speaking of the contemplated establishment of a Democratic Reading Room in this city, recommends a number of works, such as Jack Shepard's Life, Sixteen String Jack, etc. In the list we observe Life and Exploits of J. Wilkes Booth, and his Justification. This last work was, we understand, written by an attaché of the Flag office, and a large number of copies still remaining on hand at the office of that paper, they will be sold at a remarkably low price to the Democratic Reading Room. "It is no catch-penny concern, but would adorn any library" or Democratic Reading Room. Beautifully illustrated with the pictures which appeared originally in the American Flag. We are not at all surprised at this attempt made by the Flag to find purchasers for its dead stock among Democrats.

AMONG the different varieties of fruit now in season, we notice that in the interior of the State the people have been enjoying fine Conness (s)peaches.

THE editor of the Call makes a statement which would be rather startling to a person uniformed of the facts bearing on the matter. A sheet unfriendly to the Call has stated that its editor is a ghoul. We do not believe this statement. The editor of the Call, however, though not a devourer of dead bodies, has an unhealthy craving for horrors. In Friday's issue, speaking of England, he says:

"She professes to be so embittered against traitors that, to this day, a person convicted of treason is sentenced to be hanged, drawn, beheaded and his body divided into four quarters and be disposed of as her Majesty may deem fit."

This is true; and it is also true that this legal fiction of sentencing persons to be banged, drawn and quartered without the slightest intention of carrying the sentence into effect, has not seriously interfered with the shape of any traitor's body for the last hundred years; but the editor then goes on to assert that "she served in this way Emmett, the Irish patriot, and an immense list of less distinguished characters!" That Robert Emmett was cut up into quarters, will, we imagine, be news to most people, and we are sure that his countrymen will be much cut up at hearing it. The editor of the Call should really check his ghoul-like craving for sensational horrors, should consider how many Irishmen he numbers among his readers, who know that Robert Emmett was not drawn and quartered, but simply hanged; that Smith O'Brien, John Mitchell and others, so far from being carved up were only sent out of the country. An English History is wanted in the Call office.

SOME of the newspapers wonder how Adah Isaacs Menken can have married Davenport without first obtaining a divorce from Newell. We imagine the connection which she has formed with Davenport is called a marriage by politeness. Spiritualists, or at least some of them, believe in affinity constituting marriage without any forms and ceremonies being required to confirm it. Affinity may constitute a sufficiently strong matrimonial tie for Adah and Davenport, but we think it rather a scaly sort of marriage; Adah, however, was always a queer fish; a-finny-ty will suit her as well as any other tie, and Davenport we all know can slip out of any knot, however securely he may appear to be tied.

THERE is a considerable difference between the fate of Booth's body and that of the lamented John Brown: the latter we know "lies mouldering in the grave, while his soul goes marching on;" the former is constantly turning up in different shapes. There will be no rest for Booth's body until the Government makes an official statement as to the disposition which was made of it. Almost as many conflicting statements have been made concerning it as have been published in newspapers about the calico dress—no, hoops—no, water-proof cloak—that is, dressing-gown shawl, we mean —in which Jeff Davis disguised himself.

THE Examiner on Wednesday last had a piece of exclusive news; it ran as follows:

"RAT BAIT.—The terrier Lady Suffolk is to kill two hundred rats in twenty minutes on a wager of $200."

An Hibernian who was present at the entertainment said it was worth the price of the admission charged "to see the terrier Suffolk ating rats." A terrier suffocating rats by the hundred must be a pleasing spectacle.

THE Call gives rather a neat description of a woman who was arrested by the police while attempting to commit suicide: "The poor creature was about half drunk, rather young and quite good looking."

DIED—In Valencia, June 30th, Ferdinand Potter, aged twenty-four years and three months.

Waiting the Master's final touch,
When, on the Last Great Day,
Moulded in glorious form 't will rise:
Hic jacet—Potter's clay.

THE Alta, speaking of Christopher Young, who was sent to the Stockton Insane Asylum, this week, unintentionally does him an injustice. Young believes himself to be under the influence of spirits; the Alta says: "His mania is of the ardent type." This would lead persons to suppose that ardent spirits caused his insanity, which is not the case.

NEWSPAPER correspondents manufacture news which they imagine will please the taste of the public. They told us of the awful agonies Booth underwent before he died; now they tell us that Jeff Davis has lost his appetite, can't sleep, and is dreadfully miserable. This is indeed glorious news! Let us pray that we may soon hear that he has a shocking bad toothache.

TREM.

MISS M. E. BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

ONLY A CLOD.

By the author of "Aurora Floyd," "Three Times Dead," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Doctor's Wife," "The Outcasts," etc.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

IT is strange what virtues we are apt to discover in the thing we have lost. After recovering from her fainting-fit, Maude Tredethlyn wept as bitterly for the loss of her husband as if he had been the first choice of her maiden heart. A thousand instances—such trifling instances, some of them—of his goodness and devotion, his enduring love, his patient self-abnegation, flashed upon her, and her heart smote her with a bitter anguish as she perceived her own unworthiness.

Maude read Julia little bits of the letter, leaving off every now and then to demand pathetically what she was to do.

"He surely c-c-couldn't write like that, Julia, if he were what Harcourt Lowther says he is," sobbed Mrs. Tredethlyn. "He says I spoke to him coldly and deliberately. Oh, if he could only know what a passion I was in! There must be some horrible mistake; and if there is, what a wretch I must have seemed to him last night! Julia, advise me! give me some help! My husband must not go to America. There is a whole week for me to act in. What am to do?"

"What a child she is!" thought Miss Desmond, as she watched her friend's tear-blotted face and quivering lip. "If I had a pair of high-stepping ponies to drive in the Park, and a couple of grooms to sit behind me, I would demand no explanation of my husband's absences, though he were to stay away from me for ten years on a stretch."

But it was the very reverse of this convenient code of morality to which Julia gave utterance presently when she spoke to Maude.

"You asked me for advice," she said. "If I am to give it frankly, I must own that in your place I would not touch Mr. Tredethlyn's hand in friendship until he had accounted fully and conclusively for his presence in that garden yesterday. I would permit no reservations on the part of my husband; and I should be inclined to think that a secret kept from me was only another name for a wrong done to me."

Maude was silent for some minutes, and then she exclaimed, with a sudden energy that almost startled Miss Desmond:

"Yes, I will take your advice, Julia; and Francis shall explain himself—as—as I'm sure he can."

This was a challenge which Julia was too wise to take up; for she saw that the wind had set violently in Francis Tredethlyn's favor since Maude's perusal of his letter.

"I will insist upon an explanation from my husband; but before seeing him I will do what I should have done yesterday. I will go to that cottage at Petersham, and see the lady who was sitting in the garden with Francis yesterday afternoon. It is my right as a wife to know my husband's friends."

"You will see the--person," exclaimed Julia, on the tips of her lips, as the French say.

"I will."

"Well, perhaps, after all it is not a bad plan," answered Miss Desmond, after a pause. "And if you do see that person, I daresay you will hear something unpleasant," she thought; "it is only fair there should be some counterbalance to your grooms and ponies, even beyond Pickford's vans, and the sharp corner in Dean street, Park Lane.

Julia enacted her part of confidante very creditably during the drive from Stuccoville to Petersham, and submitted graciously to be left in the carriage, in a shady curve of the winding road, with the Skye terriers and the last new novel to keep her company, while Maude went alone to face her rival.

Mrs. Tredethlyn went straight to the cottage with the old-fashioned iron gate and the ivy-bordered wall. A womanly instinct guided her, as by a kind of inspiration, to the spot where she had seen her husband so much at home with a nameless and unknown creature. Looking across the smooth lawn, Maude saw a slender girlish figure in a cotton dress bending over a flower-bed, while a little boy stood by with a tiny watering-pot, whose contents he dribbled industriously over his own toes.

Maude's summons was responded to by an elderly woman in black, who carried Maude's card to the lady in the cotton dress, and then swooped down upon the little boy with the watering-pot, and carried him away struggling.

Maude, without the citadel, watched the girlish face as it bent over her card. She expected astonishment, confusion, defiance—anything except what she saw, a half pleased smile, a look of hesitation, then a little glance towards the gate, and then a cry of remonstrance to the elderly person now invisible, relative to having kept the lady waiting outside.

"Dear Mrs. Tredethlyn," said she, as she admitted her visitor, "how very rude you must think my nurse! But so many people have called, out of mere curiosity I am sure, and I am so afraid of strangers--Francis knows that—for he knows how often he has begged me to see you; and it was only yesterday that I gave way, and said he might tell you all about me. But I didn't think you would come so soon," said Rosamond, with sudden tears welling up to her innocent brown eyes.

Mrs. Tredethlyn's mystification was depicted upon her countenance, which at first expressed only her complete bewilderment: then a chilling expression came over her face, a scornful smile curved her lip.

"Oh, I see," she thought. "This person is trying to disarm my suspicions by her cool impertinence."

"It was so kind of you to come," murmured the "person," timidly. She was beginning to feel rather afraid of this haughty lady, who made no response to her warm greeting. "I did not think that I should see you so soon."

"No, I daresay not," said Mrs. Tredethlyn; "I should scarcely imagine that you expected to see me at all."

Susan clasped her hands and flushed crimson to the roots of her hair.

"Ah, then, you too are unkind, like my father," she cried piteously. "You do not believe what Francis told you."

Maude was almost too angry to remark that piteous accent. Jealousy looks through a medium that distorts the simplest objects into evil and threatening shapes.

"By what right do you call my husband by his christian name?" she asked indignantly.

"By what right!" stammered Susan, alarmed by the angry tones in which the question had been asked. "What else should I call him? I have called him Francis all my life, except when we were children, and then I called him Frank. Oh, he has been so good to me, Mrs. Tredethlyn; and he knows that the marriage was a real one. Oh, pray, don't look so coldly at me; don't doubt my word and his. I am as true and pure a wife as you are, though I have no husband's arm to lean upon, though even the name my husband gave me may be a false one."

Maude stared at the earnest face in new bewilderment. Not even jealousy could distort the expression of that face into anything but innocence.

"What does it all mean?" she cried at last; "who and what are you?"

"Susan Turner, Oliver Tredethlyn's daughter, and Francis Tredethlyn's cousin," answered Susan, considerably puzzled in her turn; "who else could you suppose me to be, Mrs. Tredethlyn? Surely Francis told you all about me, or you could never have known where to find me."

"No, he told me nothing," exclaimed Maude; and then she pounced suddenly upon poor astonished Susy, and kissed her as she had never in all her life kissed any one before.

"Oh, you dear!" she cried; "oh, you darling! To think that you should be only his cousin after all, when I thought that—when I was wicked enough to think—"

Mrs. Tredethlyn did not say what she had thought, but bestowed another shower of kisses upon Susan.

"You pet!" she exclaimed; "and to think that I should never guess you were his cousin; and that he should never tell me, the silly fellow! And he let me go at him, too, last night as if he had committed all sorts of crimes, and did not even deny them. And you are like him too. Yes, I'm sure you are; there's an expression about the eyes. And so you really are his uncle Oliver's daughter! then we are cousins, you know, dear; almost sisters—and I never had a sister—or even a friend who was quite like a sister," added Maude, with a remorseful recollection of Miss Desmond waiting in the carriage.

The two women walked up and down the lawn together, while Susan related all her sad little history, and received Maude's tender assurances of sympathy and love.

Mrs. Tredethlyn wanted Susan to go straight home with her in the carriage, but the Cornish girl clung to her sheltered home.

"I am not used to the people amongst whom you live," she said; "it is very kind of you to wish to take me—but I could never be happy amongst strangers; and Robert and I are so happy here."

"And I came to break in upon your happiness like a horrible jealous fury," cried Maude; "but you see good has come out of evil; for now we have met we shall love each other dearly always, shan't we, Susan? Call me Maude, please. And oh, my dear Susan, I have all sorts of troubles still to go through, for Frank was so offended by what I said last night, that he has written me a dreadful letter, in which he says he means to sail for America directly. But of course he won't. He never could leave me like that, could he, dear? And when I leave you, I shall drive straight home; and if he hasn't been home, I shall go on to his solicitors, Messrs. Something and Something, Gray's Inn—I shall know their names when I see them in the Directory—and of course they'll know his address wherever he is; and I shall go to him, and ask him to forgive me for having behaved so badly, and to-morrow he and I will come together, Susan."

There was a little embrace, and then Susan opened the gate and Maude tripped away. The vulgar gravel seemed like empyreal air under her high-heeled boots this time, so changed were her feelings since she had discovered how deeply she had wronged her husband by the shapeless jealousies that Harcourt Lowther had inspired in her breast.

Julia found it a great deal harder to sympathize with Maude's happiness than with her misery.

But the happiness did not last very long; for on inquiry at Stuccoville, Maude found that her husband had not been home, and on penetrating Holbornwards to Gray's Inn, to the disgust of the languid footman, she met with a second disappointment in the offices of Kursdale & Scardon, who had heard nothing of the absent Mr. Tredethlyn. After this Maude drove homewards with a very sad countenance, and was glad to shrink from even Julia's sympathy, and to hide herself in her own rooms, where she paced disconsolately to and fro; listening for the crunching wheels and banging door of a hansom cab, and stopping every now and then to look hopelessly out into the monotonous street.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

GONE.

ALL through the dreary day, and far into the still more dreary night, Maude waited and listened for her husband's coming. She could not believe that he would hold to the purpose so earnestly expressed in his letter. In any case he would surely seek some explanation of her anger.

"He never could be so cruel as to leave me because of a few foolish words," thought Mrs. Tredethlyn; "he could not be so unjust as not to give me the opportunity of explaining myself."

But on reading Francis Tredethlyn's letter for the third or fourth time, Maude discovered how complete the estrangement was that had divided her from her husband. As she read that mournful letter, she perceived that, in her conduct of the previous night, her husband had only seen the miserable climax of his married life. He beheld, as he fancied, his wife's silent scorn tranformed all at once into passionate reproach; and the proud spirit which breathes in all simple natures had asserted itself in the farewell letter which Maude read through a mist of tears.

"He thinks I married him for his money, and that I have disliked and despised him," she thought sadly. "Ah, if he could know how often I have reproached myself for being unworthy of his devotion—if he could know how my heart has sunk day by day as I have seen the breach grow wider between us! I fancied that I had lost his love, and yet this letter is full of the old devotion."

The second day passed, and there was no Francis. In the evening, Maude wrote a letter to Harcourt Lowther, containing only these few lines, hurriedly written, and with all the important words underlined:

DEAR MR. LOWTHER: Have you seen my husband since the day before yesterday? He left home on Tuesday night, and I have not seen him since. I am terribly anxious about him. I have been to Petersham and have seen the lady. We were quite wrong about her, and I am ashamed of myself for having been so foolish. She is a near relation of Frank's; and his conduct to her has been most noble. Pray find him immediately, if possible, and show him this letter.

"Yours sincerely, "M. T."

"Thursday night."

A pleasant letter this for Harcourt Lowther to receive the next day as he lay helpless on a lodging-house sofa, with his head and face sadly dilapidated by the effects of a fall under a shower of broken wine-glasses and cruets.

"Is there any possibility of comprehending a woman's tactics?" he muttered. "She writes as if this boor were an idolized husband. Is it all hypocrisy—or what? So the bubble of jealousy has burst, and the young person at the Petersham cottage is a cousin after all; and Francis has kicked up his heels; and I lie here as miserably bruised and battered as if I had just been beaten in a fight for the championship, at the very time when I want to be up and astir."

Yes, Mr. Lowther was a prisoner. At the very moment when the sudden entanglement of his web threatened to render all past efforts useless—when the schemer had most need of his dexterity, he found himself an unpresentable object, and knew that he must spend dreary weeks of seclusion before he dared emerge into the world once more, and take up the disordered threads which he still hoped to weave into a harmonious network.

When Harcourt had read Maude's letter, he tossed it over to his brother.

"Do you know how to reckon that up?" he asked. "What does it mean?"

"The fellow has not gone back to his wife; so that's one point in your favor, at any rate," said Roderick, after reading Maude's epistle. "I dare say he'll go altogether to the bad, now, at a railroad pace, and finish himself off before the year is out. The lady's anxious inquiries about her husband may be read in more ways than one. This letter may be only intended to put you au courant as to the state of affairs. Unluckily, that ugly scar about your nose will prevent your calling on Mrs. Tredethlyn for some weeks. But I don't mind being brotherly for once in a way; and I'll look in at Stuccoville mansion this afternoon, if you like. Virtue is sometimes rewarded, and there is just a chance that I may see the lovely Grunderson, and improve the occasion."

Harcourt, after a little deliberation, consented to this arrangement. "You can tell Mrs. Tredethlyn that I am seriously ill," he said, when his brother was leaving him. "If you could drop a hint or two about a rapid decline—a secret sorrow undermining a constitution that was originally delicate—the sword and the scabbard, and so on; it would only be friendly to do so. Of course I have seen nothing of Francis since Tuesday, which is perfectly true; only you need say nothing of Tuesday night—curse him!' muttered Harcourt. with a lively recollection of the wounds inflicted by a broken vinegar-cruet, and the pernicious effects of the adulterated vinegar, as exhibited in his inflamed eyes. "You can take care to let Mrs. Tredethlyn understand that her husband has returned to his old haunts and his old companions; and that any anxiety she may be so absurd as to feel about him is wasted upon a person who would be the first to laugh at her folly."

"Dear boy, I have not served my country for nothing," answered the diplomatist. "You may trust in my discretion and in my power to make the best of an opportunity. The people who plan a conversation beforehand never are able to talk according to their programme. The other party doesn't give the necessary cues. The man who trusts to the inspiration of the moment never makes a failure. The divine afflatus is always right; but you can't pump the sacred wind into a man with vulgar bellows. It comes, dear boy; and it will come to your humble servant, I have no doubt. I shall dine at the St. James', and I've two or three places to go in the evening; so I leave you to your reflections and the goulard-water. Adieu."

The diplomatist had no opportunity of serving his brother by any sentimental hints about secret sorrows and mortal illness; for Maude sent Julia Desmond to receive her visitor, and to hear anything he might have to say about Francis. Mrs. Tredethlyn would see no one.

Roderick Lowther would have been very well contented to loiter in Mrs. Tredethlyn's morning-room talking to Julia, whose half-haughty, half defiant manner had a wonderful fascination for him; but that young lady gave him no opportunity of dawdling. She had seen his tactics with regard to Miss Grunderson, and took care to let him know that she understood his diplomacy; but she listened to all his insinuations against Francis, and he saw her eyes brighten as he uttered them.

"She will convey my hints to Mrs. Tredethlyn," thought the diplomatist, "and they won't lose by her interpretation; so I've done that fellow a service, and wasted my morning, since Miss Grunderson is not to be seen."

But on leaving Julia, Mr. Lowther decided on speculating a call upon Rosa's papa. There was always the chance of seeing the young lady; and as Mrs. Tredethlyn's house could no longer afford a platform for the carrying out of Roderick's matrimonial schemes, it was absolutely necessary that he should try a bold stroke and advance matters. He had ascertained Rosa's address, and had no difficulty in finding the Grunderson mansion, which was close at hand.

Fortune favored the diplomatist, for the hospitable millionaire insisted on his being ushered into the dining-room; very much to the discomfiture of Rosa, who was partaking of an unfashionable plate of underdone beef from the sirloin before her papa, and who had a big bottle containing some yellow compound in the way of pickle, and ornamented by a blazing label, on her right hand, and an imperial pint of Guiness' stout on her left. The stout and the embarrassment produced by Mr. Lowther's appearance combined to dye Rosa's cheeks with a very vivid carnation; but the diplomatist would have been less than a diplomatist if he had not appeared supremely unconscious of the two bottles and the underdone beef.

"Sit ye down, Mr. Lowther, and make yourself at home," exclaimed the hospitable Mr. Grundersou. "A knife and fork for this gentlemau, Thomas; and look sharp about it. There's a pigeon-pie at the other end of the table, and there's some of your foreign kick-shaws—cutlets a la curl-papers, and mutton-chops a la smashed potato, I call 'em; for I'm not a young man, Mr. Lowther, and I can't remember your soubeeses, and your maintenongs, and you jardineers, and so on, as my daughter can. We don't have the men to wait at lunch, for my daughter says it is not manners: and I'm very glad it ain't, for I can't say I enjoy my meals when I have to take 'em with a couple of fellows shoving vegetable-dishes and sauce-boats at me every two minutes, and never shoving the right ones; for I'm blest if I ever knew 'em yet to shove me the cucumber before I'd half finished my salmon, though they do call themselves experienced servants. Howsomedever, if we must dine ally Rousse, and wrap our mutton-chops in greasy paper and call 'em maintennong, we must, and there's an end of it; but I don't mind confessing to you, Mr. Lowther, that this is the time I make my dinner, and it's no use frowning at me, Rosa, for I don't care who knows it."

